Unfortunately, the activities of Sikh terrorists are not confined to India. There is a small minority of Sikhs in Britain who actively offer help and support to Sikh extremists in India. There should be no doubt that we will not tolerate people living in this country and enjoying our freedoms, who abuse those freedoms to promote violent, anti-democratic threats to India or any other country. This country and the House know only too well the threat from terrorism. That is why my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister assured the Indian Government recently that we will continue to work closely with them in every way that we possibly can to defeat the evil of terrorism.

That co-operation is something to which both we and the Indian Government attach a high priority and which is much appreciated by the Indian Government. Our police have been successful in bringing to justice a number of people responsible for Sikh terrorist activities in this country. We unreservedly condemn those who support terrorism and will do all we can to root out this evil within the framework of our laws. We shall continue to look for ways of strengthening our co-operation with India. We hope to be able to conclude a bilateral agreement with India soon covering the confiscation of terrorist funds.

We urge all decent, law-abiding Sikhs in this country to deny moral and financial support to those organisations that contribute to the misery and suffering brought to the Punjab and India by extremist violence. Sikh extremists in the Punjab claim to receive support in the form of training and weapons from Pakistan. We urge the Government of Pakistan to play their part in preventing material support being provided from its territory to Sikh extremists in the Punjab.

I am grateful to my two hon. Friends for participating in the debate. Their constituents and my Kashmiri constituents in Watford have an important role to play. Those constituents are British subjects and play an increasingly prominent role in the life of our country, much to my delight and to that of my hon. Friend the Member for Hayes and Harlington. We must tell our constituents that they know how we in Britain consider terrorists and how we have suffered from terrorism. There can be no justification for it within a democracy.

I know that it is the wish of my hon. Friends the Members for Hayes and Harlington and for Gravesham to encourage Sikhs to work as hard as they can for whatever cause they believe in. The Sikhs have that right and will receive a sympathetic hearing from my hon. Friends and me, but the Sikhs must also recognise that the cause they seek to serve will not be helped unless their condemnation of violence and extremism is whole hearted. Their encouragement to Her Majesty's Government to support the Indian Government in their fight to eradicate the scourge of terrorism must be total. That is the British way of behaving and I know that my hon. Friends' constituents would wish to act in the same way. That is how they can best contribute to the cause in which they believe.

Question put and agreed to.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Meat Production

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has made to the National Farmers Unions of England and Scotland and the Farmers Union of Wales to encourage their members to continue producing beef, lamb and pig production to meet consumers' requirements.

Mr. Curry: At the Prime Minister's seminar on food marketing on 15 November my right hon. Friend the Minister announced two important new initiatives to help farmers produce what consumers want. A new group marketing grant, worth £5·4 million over the next three years, is being introduced to encourage groups of farmers to develop and expand. Within the Ministry a new market task force has been set up to identify and disseminate information on broad market opportunities to farmers. All sectors of the industry have welcomed these new initiatives.

I am pleased that the National Farmers Union has also announced a new food from the countryside initiative to bring farmers and customers together, and to help farmers develop the necessary business skills.

The message to livestock and other producers is that they should collaborate and get closer to the market. That will provide opportunities to increase the market share for British food at home and abroad.

Milk

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will pay compensation to commercial producers of sheeps' and goats' milk who are suffering financial hardship.

Mr. Curry: No.

Set-aside Scheme

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list each of the claims for set-aside which have been scrutinised during 1990-91 giving the location of the farm and the size of payment involved; and if he will list the cases where the participants failed to receive the payment, with the reasons in each case why they did not comply with their undertakings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: This information is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Moreover, data identifying individual farms cannot be provided without breach of confidentiality.

All set-aside claims are properly scrutinised, but it is not my Department's policy to publish details of its inspection arrangements, as this could seriously impede effective enforcement. Inspections in England during the 1990-91 set-aside year identified 18 serious irregularities and a number of additional cases involving minor breaches of the scheme rules. Payments were withheld or recovered in full or in part in 39 cases.

Aerial Photography

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about his Ministry's aerial photography, including the counties covered, the frequency with which the photographs are taken, what is identified, and to what use the photographs are put.

Mr. Gummer: The aerial photography unit, which is part of the Agricultural Development Advisory Service, undertakes aerial survey work both in support of the activities of my Department and as a commercial service. Aerial surveys have covered sites in all counties in England and Wales. Many sites are photographed only once, others at infrequent intervals. The environmentally sensitive areas have been photographed at three-yearly intervals to assist in my Department's long-term monitoring programme. Other work for my Department is used in a wide range of applications related to environmental monitoring, land use, crop husbandry and disease studies. Commercial applications include photography in connection with land use and planning, coastal and flood protection, conservation and landscape inventories and crop trials.

Property Sales

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all the properties and their locations which he has sold during 1990-91; if he will list in each case their estimated value and the amount realised at the sale; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Details of the property sold in the period 1 April 1990 to 31 March 1991 are as follows:

Property	[1] Estimated value £	Sale price £
385, Kirkstall road, Leeds	[2]550,000	550,000
Land at Pill Heath Andover, Hampshire	[3]	7,000
No. 2, The Cottages, Lee Valley Experimental Husbandry Farm, Hertfordshire	59,500	51,000
No. 1, High Barns, Boxworth, Cambridgeshire	[4]66,667	70,000
No. 2, High Barns, Boxworth, Cambridgeshire	[4]66,667	67,000
The Hermitage, Batchmere, West Sussex	[5]65,000	65,000
Land at Bury Hill, Potton, Bedfordshire	[6]500,000	525,000

Notes:
[1] Estimated value when first marketed.
[2] Property sold to the Leeds Development Corporation at price determined by the District Valuer.
[3] Part of a larger piece of land offered for sale. Price agreed by the District Valuer.
[4] One of three identical houses valued together at £200,000.
[5] Property sold to sitting tenant.
[6] Sold by tender.

Surplus property is disposed of in accordance with Treasury guidelines. I am content that the prices achieved for these properties reflect their true open market values.

Sea Defences

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his planned allocation of money to Suffolk and Norfolk for river and flood protection and sea defence coast protection, in the light of the autumn statement.

Mr. Curry: The provision for flood and sea defence and arterial drainage underlying the autumn statement announcement will facilitate an increase in grant to the National Rivers Authority in England from £30·1 million in 1991-92 to £37·7 million in 1992-93. This should fund an increasing capital works programme of about £80 million in 1992-93.

In recognition of the particular problems of that area, an increased allocation for capital works of £7 million will be made to the National Rivers Authority for Norfolk and Suffolk and the basic rate of grant in that district will be raised from 45 to 55 per cent., plus the existing 20 per cent. supplement for tidal and sea defence work. The increases in allocation and grant rate are conditional on the local flood defence committee, including county council members, agreeing to increase levies to fund the programme of works.

The provision for grants to local authorities, internal drainage boards and maritime district councils in England for flood and coastal defence works amounts to £24·7 million in 1992-93. Such authorities within Norfolk and Suffolk will decide on priorities within their areas of responsibility and any scheme proposed will be considered for approval and grant aid by the Department.

TRANSPORT

Road Closure, Ealing

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will call in the application to Ealing council for the closure of Berkeley avenue from Oldfield lane, North to Greenford road.

Mr. Chope: If a private development requires the closure of a highway it is for the developer to make application to the Secretary of State for Transport for the necessary order under section 247 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990. No such application has been made in respect of any development affecting Berkeley avenue.

Vehicle Safety

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he intends to publish the data received by the vehicle inspectorate on the incidence of safety-related defects in motor vehicles manufactured in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Chope: The Department publishes details of safety-related design and manufacturing defects which result in recall campaigns by the vehicle manufacturers. Details are published bi-annually and circulated to all major United Kingdom public libraries, the Consumers Association, trade associations, motoring journals and to the police and local authority trading standards departments.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to require motor manufacturers to provide information as to the number of complaints received as to defects in motor vehicles.

Mr. Chope: The Department and the vehicle manufacturers agreed in 1979 that manufacturers would provide information to the Department on safety defects in vehicles and components, under a voluntary code of practice. Since this and subsequent additional codes were put in place, 897 recall campaigns have been initiated by the manufacturers, involving 7·8 million vehicles.

Pedestrian Accidents

Mr. Rees: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the proportion of the population in the higher age groups who are statistically shown to be involved in pedestrian accidents while crossing roads.

Mr. Chope: The police complete a standard report form for each injury road accident of which they become aware, in Great Britain. This report includes information on the age and activity of all casualties in those accidents. The table shows the number of people over 60, in five year age bands, who were injured while crossing roads in Great Britain in 1990, the resident population in each of those age bands, and the rate of casualties injured while crossing the road per 100,000 population.

Pedestrian casualties injured while crossing roads: By age: Great Britain 1990

Age	Number of casualties	Population (thousands)	Rate per 100,000 population
60-64	1,455	2,828·4	51
65-69	1,605	2,778·2	58
70-74	1,681	2,116·9	79
75-79	1,898	1,830·1	104
80-84	1,517	1,217·4	125
85 and over	952	850·3	112

Pelican Crossings

Mr. Rees: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will arrange for the control times on pelican crossings to be lengthened.

Mr. Chope: The timing of phases at crossings is set on the basis of traffic and pedestrian flows and the width and layout of the crossing. Trials have been carried out with new equipment that provides for the length of the pedestrian crossing phase to meet demand. The results of these trials are being evaluated.

Heathrow Airport

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth of 13 November, Official Report, column 522, on directional signing for Heathrow, if he will bring forward the planned 1994 revision to an earlier date.

Mr. Chope: I regret that as the planned revision is a complex project involving the redesign and replacement of 10,000 existing signs, it would not be practical to bring it forward, but if my hon. Friend has any specific problems with signing at Heathrow I shall be pleased to have the matter investigated.

Freight Operations

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will discuss with the chairman of British Rail the number and location of continental-gauge freight terminals and depots required in the United Kingdom following the opening of the channel tunnel.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail has already announced the locations of the nine intermodal terminals it proposes to use to feed channel tunnel freight on to British Rail's existing track network. These will handle intermodal and other freight traffic which will be moved in wagons compatible with British Rail's existing structure gauge, subject to certain limited gauge enhancements on specific route sections.

Air Traffic Control

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the Civil Aviation Authority has made a further response to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on the CAA's provision of navigation and air traffic control services to civil aircraft published in July 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: The Civil Aviation Authority publishes its second, interim, response today. I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library.

The authority's initial response, made in December 1990, said that the authority had accepted all but one of the MMC's 40 recommendations and that work had already begun on implementing many of them. This work has continued, and the authority has made progress in such important areas as consultation with users on charges and airspace planning; introducing improvements to project management; and laying the foundations for more efficient and effective manpower planning.

I shall be keeping in close touch with the chairman of the CAA about the programme of change which the CAA has instituted in response to the MMC's recommendations.

Woolwich Ferry

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the latest available estimates of the number of vehicles using the Woolwich free ferry; and what were the comparable figures at a similar point in each of the preceding five years.

Mr. Chope: The average number of vehicles carried per day was as follows:

	Number
October 1991	2,740
October 1990	2,590
October 1989	2,840
October 1988	2,930
November 1987[1]	440
November 1986[1]	1,860

[1] Figures for October are not readily available.

SK Link

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will hold a full investigation and inquiry into all the circumstances relating to the sinking of the SK Link including the spreading of the fire from the engine room to the cargo.

Mr. McLoughlin: A comprehensive investigation into the fire and subsequent explosions on the Swedish registered ro-ro cargo ship Stora-Korsnas-Link 1 is being carried out by the marine accident investigation branch as the fire broke out when the vessel was in UK territorial waters, off the River Tees. The Swedish authorities are also investigating the incident.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of arrangements for the transportation and handling of the cargo on board the SK Link.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Swedish registered Stora-Korsnas Link 1 was carrying a cargo of forest products and two containers of sodium chlorate which were stowed at the after end of the main deck. These were loaded at Gavle, Sweden for Hartlepool.

The Department is investigating the circumstances surrounding the loading of the cargo in co-operation with the Swedish authorities.

Fire Fighting at Sea

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of those occasions when county council fire services have used good will agreements to assist with fire fighting at sea within the 3-mile limit of United Kingdom coastal waters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Since 1 January 1989, fire services around the coast of the United Kingdom have assisted with fire fighting at sea within the 12-mile limit of United Kingdom coastal waters on 15 occasions. Arrangements for use of fire services in fire fighting at sea are made by the local fire authorities as part of emergency contingency planning involving all relevant emergency services, including HM Coastguard and local port/harbour authorities rather than good will agreements.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport to what extent he relies on the availability and expertise of the county council fire services in coastal areas for fighting fires within United Kingdom coastal waters.

Mr. McLoughlin: Availability and expertise of fire services in coastal areas for fighting fires within United Kingdom coastal waters is dependent upon local emergency contingency planning arrangements, and the nature of the incident.

Docklands Light Railway

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he made of driverless traction systems before deciding to adopt such a form of control on the docklands light railway; and what assessment was made by the chief inspector of railways of the reliability of such transport.

Mr. Freeman: Under the provisions of section 11 of the London Docklands Railway Act 1984 the London Transport Executive was required to submit to the Secretary of State for his approval plans of its proposals with respect to, among other things, signalling and rolling stock. These plans were assessed and approved on behalf of the Secretary of State by Her Majesty's railway inspectorate.

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will meet the chairman of the docklands light railway to discuss its meeting of its quality of service objectives in relation to reliability and punctuality of (a) the bus service and (b) the rail service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Sir Peter Levene has just been appointed as the new chairman of the docklands light railway and one of his primary tasks is to ensure that the quality of docklands light railway services improves as quickly as possible. London Transport is responsible for providing or securing the provision of bus services in docklands, as elsewhere in London. It has been set exacting service quality objectives some of which it has achieved ahead of the April 1992 target date.

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will meet the chairman of docklands light railway to discuss the provision of information to the public regarding major changes of routes and the replacement bus service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: London Transport makes every effort to publicise changes to its bus routes in docklands. I understand that, in order to publicise the next major changes in November and December, London Transport plans to place advertisements in local papers and to distribute 100,000 free newspapers in the area. This is in addition to the on-bus publicity and press releases which normally accompany London Transport bus route changes.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which bodies and councils he consulted before announcing his decision to transfer responsibility for the docklands light railway to the London Docklands development corporation; if he will publish the results of those consultations, including a list of those councils which supported and those which opposed the proposal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 15 November 1991]: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State's reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Battersea (Mr. Bowis) on 12 November. The decision in principle to transfer the DLR to the LDDC will be subject to formal consultation under section 10(2) of the London Regional Transport Act 1984. We shall consult LRT and LDDC, those councils through whose area the DLR runs or will run, and the London Regional Passengers Committee.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he plans to introduce primary legislation to transfer responsibility for docklands light railway to the London Docklands development corporation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 15 November 1991]: No. Powers are already available to LT under section 9 of the London Regional Transport Act 1984.

Local Safety Schemes

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total amount of money requested by local authorities for local safety schemes in the transport policies and programmes submissions for 1992-93.

Mr. Chope: A total of £84·6 million.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many staff within his Department have specific responsibility for (a) setting objectives for meeting targets of pegging carbon dioxide emission by 2005 and (b) monitoring those objectives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The transport policy unit with a staff of 13 is responsible for co-ordinating the Department's work on environmental matters including carbon dioxide emissions.

Motorway Service Stations

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how often his Department inspects facilities provided at service stations on motorways.

Mr. Chope: Inspections are made annually to ensure compliance with the terms of leases granted by the Secretary of State.

Copeland

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to visit Copeland.

Mr. Chope: I last visited Copeland in August and shall be in West Cumbria shortly for the commencement of works on the Dalton bypass.

West Cumbria Transport Plan

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will receive a deputation from West Cumbria led by the hon. Member for Copeland to discuss the proposals in West Cumbria's "Transport Plan for Survival in the 90s".

Mr. Chope: When I have received a copy of the plan I shall consider the hon. Member's request.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has had on West Cumbria's "Transport Plan for Survival in the 90s"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I have received one formal representation from the West Cumbria transport study group.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what response he intends to make to the report of the West Cumbria transport study group "West Cumbria's Transport Plan for Survival in the 90s"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 15 November 1991]: I understand that a summary of the report was published on 7 November. I have not yet seen a copy of the full report, but it will be studied carefully before any response is made.

Juggernauts

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has had from local authorities concerning measures to deal with overloaded juggernauts on roads.

Mr. Chope: Various representations are received during the course of regular liaison meetings with local authorities.

Lorry Loads

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will bring forward legislation to empower county councils to confiscate lorries found to be above the load limits.

Mr. Chope: No. Local authority trading standards offices already have powers to prohibit overloaded vehicles from further movement and to prosecute drivers and operators. Licensing authorities have the power to revoke operators' licences where there is persistent or serious overloading.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consult the Association of County Councils over measures to curb the hauliers of cargoes transported on overloaded lorries.

Mr. Chope: There is regular discussion with local authority associations, including the Association of County Councils, on overloading issues, and how to deal with them.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessments his Department has undertaken on the number of road accidents which have been caused by overloaded lorries.

Mr. Chope: None.

Tees and Hartlepool Port (Cargoes)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many metric tonnes of (a) chemical and (b) petrochemical cargoes were carried into and out of the United Kingdom via the Tees and Hartlepool port in 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. McLoughlin: Her Majesty's Customs and Excise figures for the import and export of chemicals and petroleum products through Tees and Hartlepool in 1989-90 and 1990-91 are as follows:

	1989-90	Thousand tonnes 1990-91 (provisional)
Chemicals
Imports	1,454	1,386
Exports	2,349	2,008
Total	3,803	3,394
Petroleum Products:
Imports	1,987	1,647
Exports	1,330	1,556
Total	3,317	3,202

Provisional Car Licences

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many provisional car licences were issued in 1990-91.

Mr. Chope: A total of 1,010,663 provisional car licences were issued in 1990-91.

Road Fund Taxes (Evasion)

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to prevent the evasion of British road fund taxes by coach operators registering their vehicles in Eire but operating them within the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Bilateral agreements with other EC states —and the treaty of Rome—provide exemption from vehicle excise duty for temporarily imported vehicles registered in other EC states. All passenger service vehicles used for journeys in the United Kingdom must comply with the relevant regulations, including those relating to cabotage.

Road Accidents

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide additional information to that published on 11 November in his "Road Safety Report 1990-91" disaggregating further the information in charts A and B into numbers of casualties at different levels of severity for each road user type in urban—speed limits up to 40 mph—and rural—speed limits over 40 mph—areas separately.

Mr. Chope: The information requested is given in the table. "Built-up roads" refers to roads with speed limits of 40 mph or less and "Non built-up roads" refers to speed limits over 40 mph.

Casualties: by built-up and non built-up road, road user type[1] and severity: 1982 to 1990

School Buses

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many representations he has received about the regulation allowing three children below the age of 14 years to occupy a two-seater bench in a school bus; and if he will revoke this regulation.

Mr. Chope: In the last 12 months we have received about 30 representations about the concession which allows three seated children under the age of 14 to count as two passengers.

There are no plans to change the regulations at present.

Fishing Vessels

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library his Department's reports into the incidents involving the snagging of fishing nets by the Royal Navy or NATO craft on 18 February 1987, Summer Mourne, 16 September 1987, Heroine, 6 December 1987, Prevail, 27 October 1988, Brilliant Star, 3 December 1988, Mount Eden, 17 April 1989, Laurel, 28 June 1989, Huntress, 12 September 1989, Contestor and 13 November 1989, Scotia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Reports into shipping accidents enable the Department to establish the cause of the accident and to consider what further action is required in the interest of marine safety. Before the setting up of the marine accident investigation branch—MAIB—in July 1989 there was no provision for making reports available for general release, unless the accident was subject to public inquiry. None of the incidents listed by the hon. Member led to such an inquiry.

With the setting up of the MAIB, provision has specifically been made in the relevant regulations for the reports of investigations submitted to the Secretary of State for Transport under the terms of the Merchant Shipping Act 1988 to be published. However, such investigations are usually reserved for serious accidents involving loss of life and the incident involving MFV Scotia did not come under this head. The MAIB has no record of the incident involving MFV Contestor on 12 September 1989. The hon. Member will be aware that it is the intention to publish the report of the chief inspector into the sinking of the Antares. Copies of that report will be placed in the Library.

Environmental Assessments

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the dates he received letters from the European Commission, and the dates of his replies, in respect of the environmental assessment of the M3 Bar End-Compton, the east London river crossing and the Hackney-M11 link road, respectively.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 14 November 1991]: The dates of the Commission's letters and the dates on which replies were forwarded to the United Kingdom permanent representative in Brussels are as follows:

	Commission's letter	Response
M3 Bar End-Compton	26 March 1991	21 May 1991
East London River Crossing	24 October 1989	20 December 1989
Hackney-M11 Link Road	21 June 1990	8 August 1990

The article 169 letter was received on 17 October 1991.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he received a copy of a faxed letter from the European Commission to Mr. Peter Kunzlik of Hammond Suddards relating to the issuing by the Commission of an article 169 letter in respect of the M3 Bar End-Compton.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 14 November 1991]: A copy of this letter was sent to officials on 29 August 1991 by a private individual.

London Docklands (Byelaws)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what byelaw-making powers the docklands light railway and the London Docklands development corporation respectively have; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 15 November 1991]: London Transport byelaws currently apply on the docklands light railway. In the ownership of the London Docklands development corporation, the docklands light railway would have powers as an independent railway undertaking to make byelaws under section 67 of the Transport Act 1962 as applied by section 84 of that Act. The London Docklands development corporation does not itself have byelaw-making powers.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give a breakdown of the planned expenditure on (a) new construction and improvement, (b) structural maintenance and (c) current maintenance on trunk roads by his Department for the years 1992-93, 1993-94 and 1994-95.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 15 November 1991]: Provisional plans for 1992-93 and 1993-94 are in the Department of Transport's report for 1991, Cm. 1507. Decisions on any reallocation of provision for these years and on the allocation of the resources available for 1994-95 following the autumn statement have yet to be made.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Immigration and Asylum

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place copies of all correspondence and the minutes or notes of all meetings or discussions between Ministers and officials in his Department, and representatives of United Kingdom Immigrants Advisory Service on the subject of the proposed withdrawal of legal aid for immigration and asylum matters in the Library.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No.

Nationality Applications

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total number of staff within his Department who deal solely with applications for British nationality.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: As at the end of October 1991, 163½.

Category A Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of prisons in England and Wales holding category A prisoners on 1 November.

Mrs. Rumbold: Twenty-three.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of category A prisoners in prisons in the United Kingdom as of 1 November.

Mrs. Rumbold: Six hundred and two in England and Wales. The position in Scotland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and in Northern Ireland for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the review by the prison service into the current policy for the classification and treatment of remand prisoners, at present given a provisional category A classification, is complete; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: This review is being finalised in the light of a security audit conducted by Mr. G. H. Lakes CB, MC, former deputy director general of the Prison Service and Mr. R. Hadfield QPM, chief constable of the West Midlands police, into arrangements for holding and managing category A prisoners. The audit report was received by my right hon. Friend on 1 November and is currently being considered.

Naturalisation

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the numbers of applications received for naturalisation for each of the months in the current year and the number currently outstanding.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of applications for naturalisation received in the nationality division's caseworking groups in each month of this year is as follows:

Month	Number
January	1,514
February	1,274
March	1,430
April	1,056
May	1,288
June	1,397
July	1,177
August	1,250
September	1,403
October	1,774

In addition, there are approximately 5,500 applications of all types for citizenship awaiting allocation to caseworkers.

As at 12 November 1991, the number of applications for naturalisation awaiting determination was 45,081.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average length of time it takes to deal with a naturalisation case.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: For the certificates of naturalisation issued in October 1991, 31 months.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to open additional offices dealing with naturalisation and immigration cases.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: None at present.

Aldington Prison

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will visit Aldington prison to discuss its future with the governor and prison officers.

Mrs. Rumbold: I hope to visit Aldington prison, but no date has yet been fixed.

Central European Time

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has to move to central European time;

(2) what estimate he has made of the effect of a move to central European time on the young, the elderly, outdoor leisure pursuits and the business community.

Mrs. Rumbold: The effects of a move to central European time were discussed in the Green Paper "Summer Time: A Consultation Document" Cm722, to which I refer my hon. Friend. The responses to the Green Paper revealed considerable differences of opinion within the United Kingdom about the options for future summer time arrangements. Policy on those arrangements therefore remains under consideration.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those EC member states which are not on central European time.

Mrs. Rumbold: Greece, Portugal, the Republic of Ireland and the United Kingdom.

Staff Vacancies

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many vacancies he has in each grade at Lunar house, Croydon and the Liverpool nationality office.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 30 September there were three vacant posts in the immigration and nationality department in Croydon, and 16 in the nationality division in Liverpool, as against planned targets. Most of the vacancies were in the grades of executive and higher executive officer. The 16 posts in Liverpool will be filled before the end of the financial year. Additional posts are being created and additional staff recruited to the immigration and nationality department, in particular to meet the needs of increased asylum work.

Circuses (Wild Animals)

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will introduce legislation to ban the use of wild animals in circuses;

(2) if he will introduce regulations to prevent wild animals in circuses from being ill treated or from being confined for long periods.

Mrs. Rumbold: Circus animals are protected by the Protection of Animals Act 1911 as well as the Performing Animals (Regulation) Act 1925. These Acts together provide for, among other things, the registration of trainers, the inspection of premises by local authorities and the prosecution of anyone who causes any animal unnecessary suffering. This gives animals both general and specific protection and we have no plans for further legislation.

Prison Building

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish details of the new prisons due to be opened in each of the next five years as a result of his Department's prison building programme; and if he will give the location of each prison and the number of places to be provided.

Mrs. Rumbold: Twelve prisons constructed under this Government's prison building programme have been opened to date. The remaining prisons in the programme are currently estimated to come into operation as follows:

1992
Elmley	Sheppey, Kent	Training prison	620
Bullingdon	Arncot, Bicester, Oxfordshire	Local prison	649
Wolds	Brough, North Humberside	Remand prison	320
Holme House	Stockton-on-Tees, Cleveland	Local prison	649
Woodhill	Milton Keynes, Buckinghamshire	Local prison	579
High Down	Banstead, Surrey	Local prison	649
Blakenhurst	Redditch, Worcestershire	Local prison	649
Lancaster Farms	Lancaster	Young offender institution	374
Doncaster	Doncaster, South Yorkshire	Local prison	779

Police Cells

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current cost of keeping a prisoner in a police cell for one night.

Mrs. Rumbold: The current average daily cost of keeping a prisoner in a police cell is £221.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of prisoners held in police cells on the last day for which figures are available.

Mrs. Rumbold: On 15 November, the latest date for which figures are available, 1,640 prisoners were held in police cells.

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost for the most recent 10-year period for which figures are available of keeping remand prisoners in police cells; and what is the comparable figure for keeping them in prisons.

Mrs. Rumbold: The costs for each complete financial year since 1981-82 of holding prisoners in police cells are given in the table.

Financial year	Actual cost £ million
1981-82	—
1982-83	3·4
1983-84	10·8
1984-85	3·4
1985-86	2·2
1986-87	6·2
1987-88	24·9
1988-89	64·9
1990-91	53·5

In 1990-91 the comparable cost of holding the prisoners in Prison Service establishments would have been £14·8 million. Figures for previous financial years are not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Prisoners

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to ensure that prisoners are placed in prisons nearest to their homes with particular reference to prisoners from Northern Ireland.

Mrs. Rumbold: In Prison Service establishments in England and Wales, the inmate's home area is taken into account when allocating him or her to a training prison following sentence. It is also open to a sentenced inmate to request a transfer, for example to make it easier for relatives to visit.

Prisoners normally serve their sentences in the jurisdiction in which they were convicted. However, the Criminal Justice Act 1961 provides that a prisoner may be transferred to another United Kingdom jurisdiction on request. Requests are considered under criteria announced to the House on 23 June 1989. A review of these arrangements is in hand in consultation with the Scottish Office and the Northern Ireland Office.

Hewell Grange

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the institutions to which 102 young offenders were transferred from Hewell Grange during September 1991.

Mrs. Rumbold: During September 1991 a total of 102 young offenders were transferred from Hewell Grange to other open young offender institutions at Prescoed (Usk), Finnamore Wood camp, Hollesley Bay Colony, Thorn Cross and Hatfield. This enabled Hewell Grange to convert from a young offender institution to a category D open prison for adult males.

Car Thefts

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to introduce legislation to tackle the problem of young people under 17 years stealing cars.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry) on 7 November at column 229.

Birmingham Pub Bombings

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the West Midlands regarding the progress of the investigation into the Birmingham pub bombings following the release of the Birmingham Six; how many officers are engaged in the inquiry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. These are matters for the chief constable of the West Midlands.

Riots

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the amount of damages paid by police authorities to residents in Brixton, the St. Paul's area of Bristol and Toxteth for damage to property following riots in those areas.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Receiver for the Metropolitan police district, the Avon and Somerset and the Merseyside county councils were the relevant compensation authorities for claims under the Riot (Damages) Act 1886 arising from the disorders in Brixton, Bristol and Toxteth in 1981. The Home Office was not involved in the processing of claims.

Mr. Mohinder Paul Singh Bedi

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis detailing what charges have now been brought against Mr. Mohinder Paul Singh Bedi; where he is being detained; and whether police inquiries have been completed.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the commissioner that Mr. Bedi has been charged with conspiracy to defraud the Secretary of State in respect of false asylum claims and with conspiracy to defraud financial institutions in relation to mortgage applications; that he has been remanded in custody to Her Majesty's prison Brixton but is currently undergoing treatment in Kings College hospital; and that the police inquiries into his activities have been completed.

Police Inquiries

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from (a) the chief constable of Devon and Cornwall as to the cost of each of the two investigations into the Birmingham Six and (b) the chief constable of West Yorkshire as to the cost of the inquiry into the West Midlands serious crimes squad; and how these bills are to be met.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. These are matters for the chief constables and police authorities of the forces involved.

Drug Dealers

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the monetary value of assets which have been sequestrated from drugs dealers over the past five years; how the money has been used; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will direct that the sequestrated or confiscated assets of convicted drugs dealers are invested back into the communities where the dealers operated, and specifically devoted to local schools and anti-drugs projects.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 15 November 1991]: The latest figures, which are in respect of confiscation orders made in 1987, 1988 and 1989, are given in table 7.25 of "Criminal Statistics England and Wales 1989", a copy of which is in the Library. These show that over £17 million was ordered to be confiscated in those years. The current estimate by the national drugs intelligence unit of the cumulative total of confiscation orders made since the Drugs Trafficking Offences Act came into force in January 1987, up to the end of 1990, is in excess of £27 million.

Under present public accounting arrangements confiscated money is treated in the same way as fine revenue, and paid directly into the Consolidated Fund from which Government expenditure generally—including substantial support for drug-related work—is financed.

In April 1991, my right hon. Friend announced that assets confiscated here under drug confiscation agreements with other countries will be recycled, through a new fund, to support work against drug misuse. Any gifts to the United Kingdom from overseas Governments, made in recognition of our co-operation in international investigations, will also be available to the fund. The fund will be available for one-off projects to help in the fight against drug misuse, either in the United Kingdom or abroad. Projects may include special investigations or equipment for the police service or HM Customs and Excise, education publicity, and treatment and rehabilitation. The first payments from the fund will be made in April 1992. We hope to announce shortly the list of projects to be funded from this source.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Begging and Sleeping Rough

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people were (a) prosecuted for begging, (b) convicted of begging, (c) prosecuted for sleeping rough and (d) convicted of sleeping rough in each police district in Northern Ireland in the year ending 31 December 1990.

Dr. Mawhinney: Six persons were prosecuted and convicted of begging in Northern Ireland during 1990. All six incidents occurred within the Belfast area. There were no prosecutions or convictions for sleeping rough.

Terrorist-related Offences

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the annual clear-up rate for terrorist-related offences since 1970; and if he will give a breakdown according to paramilitary affiliation so far as available.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 7 November 1991]: The table details the total number of notifiable offences known and cleared and the detection rate in Northern Ireland since 1970:

Year	Known	Cleared	Detection Rate percentage
1970	24,810	10,069	40·6
1971	30,828	9,822	31·9
1972	35,884	7,525	21
1973	32,057	8,850	27·6
1974	33,314	9,676	29
1975	37,239	7,771	20·9
1976	39,779	9,367	23·5
1977	45,335	9,940	21·9
1978	45,335	10,535	23·2
1979	54,262	11,308	20·8
1980	56,316	14,391	25·6
1981	62,496	16,802	26·9
1982	62,020	11,768	19
1983	63,984	17,775	27·8
1984	66,779	20,491	30·7
1985	64,584	22,581	35
1986	68,255	25,336	37·1
1987	63,860	27,743	43·4
1988	55,890	25,226	45·1
1989	55,147	23,808	43·2
1990	57,198	21,475	37·5

Information regarding the detection rate for terrorist-related offences is not available.

Security Force Operations (Deaths)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the total number of people who have died since 1970 during security force operations; how many of these people were members of a paramilitary organisation; and if he will list their affiliations.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 7 November 1991]: Since 1970 a total of 299 persons have been killed in Northern Ireland by the security forces. It is not possible to state how many of these persons were members of a paramilitary organisation.

PRIME MINISTER

United Nations Environment Conference

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister what report has been prepared on progress made at the seminar held on 9 and 10 October, sponsored by the United Kingdom and the United Nations Environment Programme, on the role of United Kingdom non-governmental organisations in the United Nations conference on environment and development to be held in June 1992.

The Prime Minister: The Department of the Environment is currently providing financial assistance through the United Nations Environment Programme-United Kingdom for a series of non-governmental meetings and seminars in preparation for the 1992 United Nations conference on environment and development.

The report on this seminar will be an important contribution to the preparatory process for the conference. The United Nations Environment Programme-United Kingdom committee is currently preparing the report and it should be published by the end of January 1992.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister what plans Her Majesty's Government intend to put forward at the fourth preparatory committee meeting for the United Nations conference on environment and development to be held early next year.

The Prime Minister: The Government are currently considering their plans for next year's fourth preparatory committee meeting for the United Nations conference on environment and development.

National Heritage Memorial Fund

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Prime Minister whether he will make it his policy to appoint a woman to succeed Lord Charteris of Amisfield as chairman of the National Heritage Memorial Fund; whether he has received any representations to this effect; and whether he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I expect shortly to announce a successor to Lord Charteris of Amisfield, whose term as chairman of the National Heritage Memorial Fund ends on 31 March 1992. I have received confidential advice from a number of quarters, and the final choice will depend on the aptitude and relevant experience of available candidates of either sex.

Museum and Gallery Trustees

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Prime Minister whether he will take powers to remove from office trustees of national museums and galleries who have been convicted of serious offences; and whether he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans at present to take such powers.

EC Powers

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to veto any extension of EC competence into economic policy and economic advice.

The Prime Minister: The Government support the co-ordination of member states' economic policies. A process of multilateral surveillance of national economic policies has been established under the 1990 convergence decision, under which the Council of Ministers can publish non-binding recommendations directed at particular member states. The Government have argued in the intergovernmental conference on economic and monetary union that treaty provisions must be consistent with the principle that member states should retain primary responsibility on economic policy.

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to veto any extension of EC competence into the field of social security.

The Prime Minister: Some limited EC competence in the field of social security already exists in article 51 of the current treaty of Rome. The Government see no case for any further extension.

Women Cabinet Members

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to have women in his Cabinet.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 15 November 1991]: I look forward to appointing a woman to my Cabinet from amongst the strong group of women Ministers in the Government. There are excellent candidates among the six Ministers of State.

ENERGY

Wave Energy

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he intends to appoint a replacement for Mr. J. E. Marrow on his Department's study team on wave energy; and if he will make a statement on the composition of the team.

Mr. Moynihan: In the early stages of the wave energy review, Mr. J. E. Marrow and Dr. T. Thorpe worked part time in support of the work of the steering group. Since then, Dr. Thorpe has been engaged full time on the review and as the methodology evolved the emphasis has moved to use of consultants for specific aspects of the work.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to publish the results of the 1989 United Kingdom study announced by the then Minister of State, Baroness Hooper, on 6 April 1989.

Mr. Moynihan: The steering group reviewing wave energy is due to complete its work at the end of the year. Two progress reports were circulated in 1990 to the wave energy community and an interim report will be published shortly. A final report is expected to be published early in 1992.

Coal Imports

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the amount of coal imported for each year since 1979, from Poland, Colombia, South Africa and Bolivia.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The information requested is as follows:

(thousand tonnes)

	Country of Origin
	Poland	Colombia[1]	South Africa	Bolivia
1980	446	—	66	—

[1] Some imports previously recorded by Customs and Excise as originating in the Netherlands have been re-allocated to other countries including Colombia. This re-allocation has been carried out for 1991 and an estimate of Colombian imports previously classified to the Netherlands has been included for 1990. Figures for earlier years have not been re-allocated.

Mining Accidents

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list (a) the number of miners employed by British Coal, (b) the number of the work force employed in opencast mining and (c) the number of fatal accidents and injuries in British Coal mines and opencast mines for each year since 1980.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I understand that British Coal currently employes approximately 54,000 colliery industrial workers. British Coal does not collect details of the number of people employed by the opencast coal industry, but an approximate total, taking into account those employed directly and indirectly at British Coal's contract sites and licensed opencast sites, is likely to be in the order of 17,000. Information on the number of fatal accidents and major injuries in the coal industry is a matter for the Health and Safety Executive.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what consultations he has had with retailers of white goods concerning the introduction of a voluntary energy efficiency labelling scheme for refrigerators, freezers and other domestic electrical appliances; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what consultations he has had with (a) the Electricity Association, (b) the 12 regional electricity companies' chairmen and (c) the Association of Manufacturers of Domestic Electrical Appliances concerning a voluntary labelling scheme for domestic freezers and refrigerators and other domestic electrical appliances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: On 5 October last year the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry), called a meeting of representatives of retailers, the electricity industry, manufacturers and consumers to discuss the findings of a report on the energy efficiency of domestic electric appliances which had been prepared for my Energy Efficiency Office. At that meeting my EEO proposed that a voluntary energy efficiency labelling scheme should be developed. Subsequently, my Energy Efficiency Office consulted the chairmen of the regional electricity companies and the Electricity Association who agreed to proceed with the development of a voluntary scheme. My officials recently met the Association of Manufacturers of Domestic Electrical Appliances to discuss the scheme and have written to major manufacturers and retailers of domestic appliances to fully inform them of the scheme and invite them to participate.

All 15 electricity supply companies have agreed to participate and the scheme was launched, by the Secretary of State on 12 November.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he intends to introduce compulsory energy rating schemes for dwellings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Government's intention is that home energy labelling should be sufficiently developed to enable it to be incorporated into the Building Regulations when these are next amended. In the mean time, it is one of the aims of the Government's publicity campaign, with the title "Helping the Earth Begins at Home", to encourage the take-up of home energy labels. The Government will be discussing with the commission and other member states EC proposals on home energy labelling in the context of the SAVE programme.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assistance his Department is prepared to give to local authorities to encourage them to improve heating efficiency in all their dwellings to achieve a good score on the energy rating scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Government, under the Department of the Environment's greenhouse energy efficiency demonstration programme, are providing £60 million over three years for selected projects to improve the energy efficiency of local authority housing stock. More widely, the Department of the Environment's estate action programme provides local authorities with additional resources to improve their housing estates. In 1990-91 some 20 per cent. of the estate action budget, representing some £35 million, was geared towards energy efficiency improvements.

In addition, my Energy Efficiency Office's best practice programme is providing assistance in the form of technical advice, information and guidance to local authorities through its publications, workshops and seminars.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what consultations he has had with the energy directorate of the European Commission concerning the introduction of a directive on the relative energy efficiency of domestic electrical appliances; and what is the likeliest date for its introduction for (a) freezers and refrigerators and (b) other domestic electrical appliances.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My Department has been fully consulted by the European Commission on its proposals for a directive on the indication by labelling and standard product information of the consumption of energy and other resources of household appliances. The proposed directive is a framework directive which sets out the procedures to be adopted by member states to ensure that domestic appliances displayed for sale bear energy labels which give potential purchasers information on the energy consumption of the appliances.

There is at present no timetable for discussions on the preparation of the subsequent implementing directives which will set out specific requirements for energy labels for individual types of appliance. However, it is expected that freezers and refrigerators will be one of the first types of appliance to be covered by an implementing directive and this is likely to be ready for introduction early in 1993. Other domestic appliances will be dealt with quickly thereafter.

My Energy Efficiency Office has therefore worked with the regional electricity companies—RECs—to introduce a voluntary energy labelling scheme which was launched on 12 November. Refrigerators and freezers in all the RECs' showrooms will by now bear energy labels that tell customers how efficient the appliance is compared to similar appliances and how much electricity it will use in a year.

Waste Recycling

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has commissioned a comparative energy audit of incineration of material solid waste and separation of waste at source followed by recycling; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I have been asked to reply.

The choice between waste management options should be based on an assessment of all the associated costs and benefits, and not just on the cost of energy. The Government are continuously reviewing these options. Waste management paper No. 1 provides advice on how the costs and benefits should be assessed. This paper is currently being revised.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Privatisation

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the public assets which he intends to privatise to reach the £8 billion income from sales outlined in his autumn statement.

Mr. Maude: The Government expect £8 billion of proceeds in 1992-93. The precise components of the forecast are subject to future decisions on, inter alia, the balance between debt and equity proceeds.

National Heritage Land

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Chancellor of the exchequer if he will list the circumstances under which landowners are released from their obligation to comply with their undertakings for which they have been granted exemptions from inheritance tax for national heritage land of outstanding scenic, historic or scientific interest; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: There are no circumstances in which landowners are released from their undertakings and continue to benefit from conditional exemption. If an undertaking is broken or comes to an end on the disposal of the heritage property, inheritance tax is normally chargeable, except in the case of a gift or bequest where the new owner gives a fresh undertaking.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the organisations to which he supplies information about the land which is granted exemption from inheritance tax for national heritage land of outstanding scenic, historic or scientific interest; from what date they are able to give this information; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: Where a claim is made for conditional exemption the Inland Revenue consults the relevant heritage advisory body. The main advisory bodies for land in England and Scotland are the Countryside Commission and the Countryside Commission for Scotland, and for land of scientific interest the respective Nature Conservancy Councils. In Wales and Northern Ireland the relevant bodies are the Countryside Council for Wales and the environment service of the Department of the Environment, Northern Ireland. Information about individual cases is covered by the normal rules of tax confidentiality. However heritage bodies are able to supply information about public access to heritage land including conditionally exempt land, although land will not be identified as conditionally exempt.

Tobacco

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his forecast revenue from tobacco taxes in 1991-92.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Revenue from excise duties on tobacco is forecast to be £6·1 billion for 1991-92.

Debt

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what was the figure for the annual amount of corporate debt in the United Kingdom for each year from 1978-79 (a) expressed in actual terms and (b) expressed at current prices;

(2) what was the annual amount of personal debt in the United Kingdom for each year from 1978-79 (a) expressed in actual terms and (b) expressed at current prices.

Mr. Mellor: The figures, on a calendar year basis, are as follows. Financial year figures are not readily available.

Total liabilities at market values
(£ billion, end of year)

	Industrial and commercial companies		Personal sector[1]
	Real terms[2]	Current prices	Real terms[2]	Current prices
1978	404·1	165·2	159·2	65·1
1979	396·5	189·8	164·4	78·7
1980	390·4	218·4	163·2	91·3
1981	415·8	247·0	184·5	109·6
1982	460·0	292·5	202·9	129·0
1983	513·2	341·9	229·2	152·7
1984	571·1	402·3	252·8	178·1
1985	621·0	455·8	282·6	207·4
1986	744·2	562·3	321·5	242·9

1989	1,017·7	936·3	430·7	396·2
1990	929·5	929·5	441·7	441·7

[1] Includes unincorporated businesses and non-profit making bodies serving persons as well as individuals.
[2] End-1990 prices based on the GDP(E) at factor cost implied deflator.

Public Services (Opinion Poll)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer with regard to the opinion poll he has commissioned to investigate public attitudes towards public services, if he will indicate (a) how much the survey will cost, (b) how many members of the public will be involved in the survey, (c) when he expects the questionnaire to be finalised, (d) when he expects the survey to be completed and (e) when the results will be published.

Mr. Maude: I have not yet commissioned an opinion survey.

Trade Statistics

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, further to his answer of 12 November, Official Report, column 501, what was the net effect of each of the changes set out in the Chief Secretary's answer of 12 November in each month since it was introduced.

Mr. Mellor: Following is the available information:

(a) Adjustments to statistics of oil exports: Prior to October 1989 direct exports of crude oil were under-recorded in Customs and Excise data, and in the trade figures published by the Central Statistical Office, by amounts which average £40 million—440,000 tonnes—per month in the first three quarters of 1989. Since October 1989 this under-recording has been eliminated, but some oil exports are still reported with a delay. The Central Statistical Office therefore includes in its statistics estimates of the amount of exports still to be reported. The adjustments for the latest month have averaged £12½ million—120,000 tonnes—per month over the last three months.

(b) Improved seasonal adjustments: Some indication of the impact of regularly updating seasonal adjustment factors can be obtained by comparing the adjusted figures initially published for each month with the revised figures published a month later, though these revisions also incorporate any necessary amendments to raw data. Since January 1990 when the regular updating was initiated the revisions to the balance of visible trade, irrespective of sign, have averaged £30 million per month.

(c) Progressive development of detailed methodology: The various refinements referred to in the earlier reply are such that they have been integrated into the monthly cycle of processing and without retrospectively reconstructing the statistics using the old methodology it is impossible to determine what their effect has been.

£20 Note

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning the size of the new £20 note.

Mr. Maples: I have received a number of letters concerning the size of the new £20 note. However the size and design of banknotes is the responsibility of the Bank of England.

Contracted-out Services

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy on extending contracting-out of services in central Government and the national health service; and if he will list those individual services his Department considers most suitable for putting out to tender.

Mr. Maude: This information is given in the White Paper "Competing for Quality" which is published today.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Serious Fraud Office

31. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Attorney-General what plans he has to increase resources for the Serious Fraud Office.

The Attorney-General: I announced on 6 November increased funding of £1·07 million for the SFO in the current financial year in view of the additional demands placed upon it by the BCCI case. Subject to parliamentary approval, expenditure provision of an additional £5·4 million has also been agreed for the SFO for1992-93.

Women Judges

33. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General what steps the Government are taking to ensure that more women are appointed to high judicial office.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor has repeatedly made clear his wish to appoint more suitably qualified women to judicial office. The number of women in the legal profession in the appropriate age groups and with the right experience will increase significantly over time and will undoubtedly lead to the welcome appointment of more women judges.

Immigration Cases

32. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the length of the waiting time for the hearing of immigration cases.

The Attorney-General: It is estimated that at present an average appeal to an adjudicator is determined within five to 12 months of its receipt by the immigration appellate authorities. This includes the time taken by the parties themselves to prepare for the hearing, which is typically between two and six months.

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General how many vacancies there are for solicitors and barristers at the Crown prosecution service.

The Attorney-General: The Crown prosecution service currently has 231·5 vacancies for lawyers, in a revised total manpower requirement of 2,136. A total of 112 legal trainees are in post.

Judges

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General how many (a) High Court judges, (b) circuit judges and (c) registrars of county courts are at present in office; and how many of them are (i) black, (ii) Asian and (iii) women.

The Attorney-General: The information requested, at 1 November 1991, is set out in the table. Records are not held on the ethnic origins of all office holders, but the numbers relating to black and Asian origin are believed to be as given.

	In office	Black	Asian	Women
High Court judges	82	—	—	2
Circuit judges	450	—	2	20
County Court District judges[1]	230	—	—	10

[1]From 1 January 1991 the title of County Court Registrar was changed to District Judge.

Immigration Appeals

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Attorney-General what plans he has to bring about a reduction in the length of time taken to conclude immigration appeals; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The workload of the immigration appellate authorities—IAA—has increased significantly in recent years. There was a 60 per cent. increase in 1988, 30 per cent. in 1989, 30 per cent. in 1990 and the increase for 1991 is projected to be 15 to 20 per cent. In response to these increases, the Lord Chancellor's Department has recruited additional staff and part-time adjudicators for the IAA to help keep waiting times for cases to be determined to a minimum. The Lord Chancellor's Department has also installed a multi-terminal case-tracking system at Thanet house in London and this will be operational by January 1992. This system will allow the IAA to monitor accurately and frequently the movement of appeals and so assist in the efficient disposal of cases, and help reduce waiting times for cases to be determined.

Furthermore, the Government intend to create a right of appeal for asylum seekers refused refugee status. The draft asylum appeals procedure rules set out the procedure and timetable envisaged for asylum appeals, and the recruitment of additional staff and adjudicators will facilitate their speedy and efficient disposal.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General how many people are awaiting hearings at the immigration appeals tribunal.

The Attorney-General: As at 31 October 1991, a total of 547 appellants were awaiting a hearing before the immigration appeal tribunal. This figure represents 389 cases.

Sara Thornton

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Attorney-General if he will arrange for a copy of the judgment in R v. Thornton, Court of Appeal, 29 July 1991 to be placed in the Library.

The Attorney-General: I have, as requested, arranged for a copy of the judgment in R v. Thornton, Court of Appeal, 29 July 1991 to be placed in the Library.

WALES

GCSE

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether his Department has made any assessment of GCSE; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department provided financial support for a study by University college, Swansea, of the impact of the General Certificate of Secondary Education on the teaching of history, geography and Welsh. The university published its findings earlier this year and I believe the study is a valuable contribution to the pool of knowledge about the teaching of GCSE. I shall send the hon. Gentleman a copy of the report and arrange also for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

Training Expenditure

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of expenditure on (a) youth training and (b) employment training in 1991-92; and what is his estimate for each of these programmes in 1992-93 in actual and real terms.

Mr. David Hunt: Estimates of expenditure on youth training and employment training in 1991-92 should be available soon. Provision for expenditure on these programmes in Wales for 1992-93 has not yet been determined and an announcement will be made in due course.

Unemployment

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps will be taken to reduce unemployment in north Pembrokeshire during next year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department, the Welsh Development Agency and other Government agencies operate a wide range of measures aimed at combating unemployment. The Welsh Office and all the other bodies will continue to look for and respond swiftly to opportunities that arise which have the potential to reduce unemployment.

I have asked particularly that the Welsh Development Agency and the West Wales training and enterprise council look together at action which needs to be taken, in consultation with the local authorities, to alleviate the effects of the proposed closure of Royal Navy armaments depot Trecwn.

Home Improvement Grants

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much of the additional money announced for home improvement grants will be available for discretionary grant applications in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: With the £80 million additional resources which my right hon. Friend announced last week, the provision for mandatory home renovation grants next year will be £143 million. Further provision will be made for local authority spending on discretionary grants. My right hon. Friend will be announcing details of Welsh local authority capital programmes in due course.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the number of applicants for home improvement grants who did not qualify after losing community charge benefit.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: No application for house renovation grant will have become ineligible for assistance as a result of losing community charge benefit.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) mandatory and (b) discretionary home improvement grants were made in Wales in 1989, 1990, and his latest estimate of the number for 1991; and how much these grants have cost.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The grants system based on the Housing Act 1985 was replaced by that of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 in July 1990, from which time approvals for grants were made only under the new Act. However, since then, a number of grants already approved under the old Act have been completed. The numbers and amounts of completed mandatory and discretionary home improvement grants under the old and new Acts are given in the table:

Grant completions under the Housing Act 1985

	Mandatory (intermediate)		Discretionary (improvement, repair and special)
	Number	Amount (£)	Number	Amount (£)
1989	2,511	6,954,543	17,563	58,889,413
1990	2,172	6,195,853	22,940	77,722,006
1991	665	2,203,782	6,801	29,891,532

Smoking

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he intends to take to curb smoking among teenage girls in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The Health Promotion Authority for Wales—HPAW—features the prevention of smoking predominantly in its Youth Life Wales programme, which includes support for school health education and other youth sector projects. Two life education centres are currently touring schools throughout the Principality. The authority also contributes, along with ASH in Wales and Tenovous cancer information centre, to the running of Smokebusters Wales/Mygu Mwg Cymru. This anti-smoking project was launched on 30 October 1991 and is aimed at children between the ages of nine and 13. The Department is supporting the project financially.

The HPAW in association with other organisations has mounted a number of national and local campaigns including No Smoking Day in Wales. The authority also encourages public transport operators and the retail and catering trade to provide no-smoking areas, to help to create supportive environments which discourage smoking.

Much sterling work with young people is also being carried out by district health promotion units of district health authorities. My Department also provides financial support for ASH in Wales.

More generally, it is an offence to sell cigarettes to anyone under 16 years of age and the Government are examining means of tightening up the law on illegal sales.

House Repossessions

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many homes have been repossessed as a result of mortgage payment defaults (a) in Merthyr Tydfil and Rhymney, (b) in Mid Glamorgan and (c) in Wales in 1990 and the latest number known for 1991.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Only the total numbers of warrants of repossession are available; those relating specifically to mortgages are not collected separately. However, separate data are available on the number of repossession orders made following mortgage actions. The numbers given in the table relate to totals of orders made through courts within an area and as such do not correspond directly to the number of homes within that area on which orders were made.

Repossession orders made following mortgage actions[1]

	1990	1991 (January to September)
Merthyr Tydfil and Rhymney[2]	253	315
Mid Glamorgan	1,170	1,203
Wales	4,962	5,388

Caravans (Parking)

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he is having with local authorities in mid-Wales regarding the overnight parking facilities for touring caravans in the area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: None, except in respect of a request to issue directions to Powys county council under section 9 of the Caravan Sites Act 1968 in relation to gipsy sites.

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many overnight parking sites there are in Wales for touring caravans; what were the corresponding figures for 1970 and 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested is not held centrally except in relation to gipsy sites. There are currently two transit sites for gipsies in Wales; one at Welshpool and one at Llandegai near Bangor. Comparable figures for 1970 and 1980 are not available.

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many caravan sites there are in Cardiganshire; what are the corresponding figures for 1965, 1975 and 1985, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested is not held centrally except in relation to gipsy sites. Statistics supplied by the local authority show that there were no authorised gipsy sites in Ceredigion district in July 1985 or in July 1991. No figures are available for 1965 or 1975.

Universities

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has made to help Welsh university colleges meet the demands of increased numbers of students expected in the next five years in terms of (a) capital available for buildings and (b) staffing.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The existing system of funding the universities has enabled a higher proportion of young people to enter universities by providing an incentive to institutions to expand efficiently. The proposals set out earlier this year in the White Paper "Higher Education —A New Framework" are aimed at ensuring that the higher education sector, as a whole in Wales, is better placed to meet the increased demands that will be put on it over the rest of this decade and beyond: under our proposals detailed decisions about future funding will be taken by the Higher Education Funding Council for Wales.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the sites of special scientific interest in Wales for which management agreements are currently being negotiated, giving details of the damage threatened in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: This information is not held centrally, and is treated as confidential by the parties to the agreement.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidance is given to the Welsh Development Agency about identifying and handling possible conflicts of interest in the employment of consultants where one of the principals in the consultancy is employed in a senior capacity by the Welsh Development Agency; and if he has any plans to revise this advice.

Mr. David Hunt: Current guidance is contained in "Non Departmental Public Bodies: A guide for Departments". The WDA staff rules on the disclosures of possible conflicts of interest comply with the guide. The guide is kept under review.

Pembrokeshire Health Authority

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 11 November, Official Report, column 415, how many representations he has received supporting the application for national health service trust status from Pembrokeshire health authority.

Mr. David Hunt: Thirty-one respondents have written in to support the application, with a further 21 expressing no clear opinion.

Departmental Land Holdings

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the hectarage, number of holdings and numbers of tenants of holdings of agricultural land owned by his Ministry in each county in Wales in (a) 1980 and (b) 1990.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 6 November 1991]: The information is shown in the table:

	1980		1990
	Area of holding to nearest hectare	Number of holdings	Area of holding to nearest hectare	Number of holdings	Number of tenants
Clwyd	159	5	19	3	3
Dyfed	32	5	2	1	1
Gwent	32	2	2	1	1
Gwynedd	60	3	32	1	1
Mid Glamorgan	24	2	27	3	3
Powys	13	3	34	7	6
South Glamorgan	12	2	8	1	1
West Glamorgan	26	2	—	—	—

Information on the number of tenants in 1980 is not available.

The substantial decrease between 1980 and 1990 in the amount of land owned or held by the Secretary of State reflects the ongoing process of rationalisation by the Department to ensure disposal of any land or property which is surplus to requirements.

In addition in 1990 the Secretary of State owned or held on long lease the following three holdings at the Pwllpeiran experimental husbandry farm in Dyfed:

	Hectares
Holding 1	647·47
Holding 2 (999 year lease)	[1]318·6
Holding 3	[1]58·2

[1]Managed by Forestry Commission.

Information on land held in 1980 for experimental purposes could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Forestry Commission land in Wales is vested in the Secretary of State. A total of 11,000 hectares of agricultural land were held in 1980.

Figures for 1990 are:

	Number
Area	4,467
Number of tenancies	100
Number of grazing lets	48

Information is not kept centrally on the number of holdings or the distribution by county. This information and a breakdown of the 1980 figure could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Nursing Statistics

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on (a) the establishment and (b) the actual numbers of district nurses, midwives and health visitors practising in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett [holding answer 11 November 1991]: Complete information on staff numbers is available only for all nursing and midwifery staff, and not for occupational groups such as district nurses, midwives and health visitors. At 31 September 1991, the whole-time equivalent number of nursing and midwifery staff in Wales was 27,991. Information on establishment is not available centrally.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Textile and Footware Factories

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many (a) footwear factories and (b) textile factories he has visited in the last 12 months.

Mr. Leigh: My ministerial colleagues and I have regular contact with representatives of the footwear and textile industries and have visited several factories over the past year.

Post Office

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what plans he has to privatise Post Office Counters Ltd;

(2) what plans he has to privatise Parcelforce;

(3) what plans he has to privatise Post Office Letters.

Mr. Lilley: I have no present plans to privatise the Post Office or any constituent part of it.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give details of the real unit cost target for 1992 in respect of the Post Office.

Mr. Lilley: The Government set efficiency targets in the form of a cumulative percentage change in real unit costs —RUC—for Royal Mail Letters and for Post Office Counters Ltd., but not for Parcelforce, in recognition of the strongly competitive environment in which it operates.

The current RUC targets relating to the three-year period 1989-90 to 1991-92 are minus 1 per cent. for Royal Mail and minus 2 per cent. for Counters. New targets for 1992-93 onwards have not yet been set.

Deregulation Unit

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many regulations were abolished as a result of an initiative taken by his Department's deregulation unit over the latest 12-month period for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The deregulation unit is responsible for monitoring and co-ordinating progress under the deregulation initiative. The initiative has three aims: to abolish unnecessary regulations and licences; to improve the clarity and effectiveness of all rules and regulations where these remain necessary; and to ensure that the compliance costs to business are assessed and taken into account in developing new regulations. The initiative covers regulation by central and local government in the United Kingdom as well as regulations originating in the European Commission. On 13 May, I announced publication of "Cutting Red Tape for Business", the latest record of achievements under the initiative. A copy is in the Library. The benefit of these achievements is cumulative and, taken together, they have saved business many millions of pounds in time and administrative effort.

For example, self-employed people whose annual turnover is below a certain threshold now need only send the Inland Revenue a simple three-line statement of profits instead of full accounts. The threshold has recently been raised to £15,000. Again, the annual turnover threshold for VAT registration has been increased by 38 per cent. from £25,400 to £35,000, keeping small businesses out of the VAT net for longer. The unit would welcome suggestions of new areas for action.

Libya (Trade)

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report details of trade between Britain and Libya in each of the past five years to the latest available date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Information on United Kingdom visible trade is regularly published in "Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom", which is available in the Library of the House.

Investor Protection

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the review of investor protection and advice to investors will be published.

Mr. Redwood: The Securities and Investments Board's review of retail regulation is a matter for the board.

Cigarettes

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his estimate of the market share of imported cigarettes.

Mr. Redwood: Information on the market share of imported cigarettes is published in table D4 on page 67 of the 1990-91 report of the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, a copy of which is in the House of Commons Library.

Caravans

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has estimated the number of caravans needing to be brought up to current safety standards; what assessment he has made of the availability of sufficient expertise to complete this task by 29 February 1992; if he has estimated the cost of attention and certification likely to fall upon the holiday parks industry; if he is willing to consider financial aid to those unable to meet the cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: I welcome the constructive attitude taken by the National Caravan Council and the British Holiday and Home Parks Association on this matter of improving caravan safety following the tragic fatalities earlier this year. All parties involved have demonstrated that the first consideration must be the safety of caravan occupants.

It has been estimated that there are 300,000 caravans distributed over 300 sites. Of these, it is thought that nearly all will need modification to bring them up to the current safety standards for water heater flues. I welcome the speed with which the industry has organised training courses to ensure that there are enough competent people to complete the work by the start of the next holiday season. It is expected that most modifications will be made by the site staff in the closed season, with the average cost for the parts to complete the work expected to be approximately £15 per caravan.

Scotch Whisky

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action has been taken by the Government to obtain the elimination of the discriminatory tariff and taxation faced by Scotch whisky exported to the Republic of Korea.

Mr. Redwood: Ministers and senior officials, in London and Seoul, raise the problems facing the Scotch whisky industry in the Korean market as a result of discriminatory tariffs and taxation with their opposite numbers in the Republic of Korea at every opportunity.

In addition, we are discussing the possible handling of a GATT case with the European Commission.

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action has been taken by the Government to ensure that exports of Scottish whisky to Canada continue to be recognised and protected under Canadian legislation.

Mr. Redwood: Both the British Government and the European Commission have represented strongly to the Canadian authorities that the existing protection provided by Canada should not be withdrawn. The Canadian Government are considering these representations now that the formal period for public comment on their proposed amendments to the existing legislation has ended.

Banks

Sir Robert McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what plans he has to meet the chairmen of individual banks to discuss their status as an independent financial adviser; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what discussions he has had with regulators under the Financial Services Act 1986 on ways to encourage banks to provide independent financial advice or advice based on tied association with a provider but not both; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The arrangements governing the provision of investment advice under the Financial Services Act, which are primarily a matter for the Securities and Investments Board, are being considered as part of its review of retail regulation.

ECGD Insurance Services Group

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he has reopened negotiations with NCM of Amsterdam on the terms for the acquisition of the Insurance Services Group of the Export Credits Guarantee Department;

(2) what further progress he has to report on the proposed sale of the Insurance Services Group of the Export Credits Guarantee Department to NCM of Amsterdam; whether there will be further invitations to tender or re-tender for the sale; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what is his most up-to-date assessment of the date for completion of negotiations with NCM of Amsterdam regarding the sale of the Insurance Services Group of the Export Credits Guarantee Department.

Mr. Lilley: Negotiations with NCM have been continuing since its selection as preferred purchaser, which was announced to the House on 1 July this year. Substantial progress has been made. The negotiations are now nearing completion and the sale is expected to take place on 1 December 1991.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will now make it his practice to answer questions on the supply of arms by British companies to Yugoslavia.

Mr. Lilley: It is not the practice to comment on individual export licence applications.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether British companies have supplied cluster bombs to the Yugoslav National Army.

Mr. Lilley: Yes. All export licences for military equipment to Yugoslavia were revoked on 3 July 1991.

Iraq

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his current assessment of the contribution that British firms made in supplying materials that were used by Iraq to detonate nuclear initiators.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 13 November 1991]: We have not received full details of information obtained during the inspections in Iraq carried out by the United Nations Special Commission and the International Atomic Energy Agency.

I am, therefore, not yet able to assess whether any British firms supplied materials used by Iraq to detonate nuclear initiators.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will detail the breaches of the arms embargo with Iraq now known to his Department.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 11 November 1991]: Inspections in Iraq by the United Nations Special Commission and the International Atomic Energy Agency have revealed the names of many companies, around the world, which have traded with Iraq, including some from Britain. It is possible that more names will be revealed as time goes on.

The information provided by these agencies is being carefully reviewed, but there is no evidence that the vast majority of the United Kingdom companies that have already been named have done anything wrong. Until the invasion of Kuwait, trade with Iraq was not illegal provided strategic export controls were not breached.

Prosecutions for offences under the Export of Goods (Control) Order are a matter for Her Majesty's Customs and Excise. It would not be appropriate for me to comment on current cases.

Information Technology

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will place in the Library a copy of the document published recently giving guidelines of practice by Her Majesty's Government of information technology goods and services.

Mr. Maples: I have been asked to reply.

I assume that my hon. Friend is referring to the "Review of the Information Systems/Information Technology Procurement Processes" undertaken by CCTA—the Government centre for information systems—and involving extensive consultation with industry and Government departmental customers. A management summary entitled "1991 Update" was published recently and I have placed a copy of this in the Library. A comprehensive guide giving detailed advice on best practice is due for publication next week and a copy of that will be placed in the Library as soon as it is available.

SCOTLAND

Govan Dry Docks

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from the organisation Clydebuilt about the future of Govan dry docks; and what replies he has sent.

Mr. Allan Stewart: None.

Begging and Sleeping Rough

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people were (a) prosecuted for begging, (b) convicted of begging, (c) prosecuted for sleeping rough and (d) convicted of sleeping rough in each police district in Scotland in the year ending 31 December 1990.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Neither begging nor sleeping rough is, by itself, a criminal offence in Scotland.

Correspondence

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the Lord Advocate will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Cunninghame, North dated 22 July 1991 requesting a fatal accident inquiry into the deaths of certain of his constituents in a house fire.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Lord Advocate's private secretary replied to the hon. Member on 13 August 1991 and 18 October 1991 indicating that inquiries were still proceeding into the circumstances of the deaths of certain of the hon. Member's constituents in the house fire to which he refers.

The procurator fiscal's inquiries are not yet complete. Once they are, the report will be submitted to Crown Office for the consideration of Crown counsel and the decision will then be taken whether a fatal accident inquiry should be held. Once it has been taken, the Lord Advocate will advise the hon. Member of the decision.

HEALTH

NHS Trusts

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the total deficit of hospitals and units with trust status.

Mr. Dorrell: The 57 first-wave trusts are currently not reporting an overall deficit.

Spokes Inquiry

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which of the recommendations of the Spokes inquiry report, Cm 440, have been implemented; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The Spokes report made 30 recommendations. Four of these—recommendations 22, 25, 26 and 27—are covered by the care programme approach, HC(90)23/LASSL(90)11, which health authorities in collaboration with local authority social services departments were required to implement as from 1 April 1991.

A clarification of health and local authorities statutory duties to provide after-care for former mentally disordered hospital patients—recommendation 23—is contained in the Mental Health Act 1983 code of practice, laid before Parliament in 1989.

The Royal College of Psychiatrists has prepared a document entitled "Good Medical Practice in the Aftercare of Potentially Violent or Vulnerable Patients discharged from Inpatient Psychiatric Treatment" which it plans to circulate to its members in December 1991—recommendation 24.

The new diploma in social work is being introduced. This allows students to specialise in their final year of training. One area of specialist study is mental health. The training of social workers for approval under the Mental Health Act 1983, section 114, now lasts for 60 days and local authorities are also expected to provide their approved social workers with refresher training—recommendation 21.

The Housing Corporation's special needs housing programme provides accommodation for people with special needs, including the mentally ill, at the rate of 3,000 bedspaces per year. In addition, revenue funding for special needs is due to increase from £36·5 million to over £95 million in the period 1990-93. The needs of single mentally ill people will continue to receive high priority—recommendation 28.

The remaining recommendations are regarded as matters of good practice on which no further Government action is required. The recommendations have been drawn to the attention of health and local authorities and the relevant professional bodies which are expected to have taken them into account in developing their own working and training procedures.

Counterfeit Medicines

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what information he has on the import, production and sale of counterfeit medicines in the United Kingdom;

(2) what steps he is taking to eradicate the import, production and sale of counterfeit medicines in the United Kingdom;

(3) what assessment he has made of the damage being done to British pharmaceutical companies by the import, manufacture or sale of counterfeit medicines.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Section 118 of the Medicines Act 1968 restricts the disclosure of information regarding any alleged importation, sale or production of counterfeit medicines. Any reports of alleged import, production or sale of counterfeit medicines in the United Kingdom are urgently investigated by the enforcement unit of the Medicines Control Agency. The United Kingdom licensing system covering the import, sale and production of medicinal products is continually kept under review to ensure appropriate safeguards against counterfeit products are maintained. No information is available about any damage being done to pharmaceutical companies arising from alleged trade in such products.

"The Health of the Nation"

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration was given in the preparation of the Green Paper "The Health of the Nation" to the 1985 targets set out by the World Health Organisation in respect of housing and equal access to education.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The World Health Organisation, which has warmly welcomed the approach taken in "The Health of the Nation", has made it clear that its health for all by the year 2000 initiative—HFA—is meant to be adapted to the specific needs of individual countries. All aspects of the WHO approach were taken fully into consideration in preparation of the Green Paper proposals for a health strategy for England. The Green Paper also included a report on England's progress towards meeting the HFA targets.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on how environmental, transport, housing, food and agriculture considerations were integrated in the Green Paper "The Health of the Nation."

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government recognise the importance of a wide range of factors affecting health. This was reflected in the prominence "The Health of the Nation" gave to the responsibilities of specific Government Departments. We have established a ministerial group on which the 14 Government Departments are represented, to oversee development of the health strategy and co-ordinate the Government's contribution to it.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how often progress towards health for all is assessed.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Progress towards the World Health Organisation health for all by the year 2000 targets is reviewed periodically. The last two reports of progress were published in the Chief Medical Officer's report "On The State of the Public Health for the year 1989" and in an annex to "The Health of the Nation", June 1991, copies of which are available in the Library.

NHS Reforms

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much consultation occurred on the recent national health service reforms before they were instituted.

Mr. Dorrell: The NHS reforms White Paper "Working for Patients", was published in January 1989. The Government have always been prepared to consider constructive proposals for implementation of the policies it set out. The NHS and Community Care Bill was introduced to Parliament on 22 November 1989, where it was subject to the scrutiny of both Houses, and the NHS and Community Care Act received Royal Assent on 29 June 1990. Under the Act NHS hospitals and other units seeking to apply for NHS trust status are obliged to conduct a three-month period of consultation with their local community health council and other bodies as appropriate.

Asthma

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the reasons behind the apparent increase in the prevalence of asthma.

Mr. Dorrell: Unfortunately, and despite the availability of effective preventive therapy, the prevalence of asthma and the occurrence of acute asthma attacks has been rising. This is not a phenomenon confined to this country. New Zealand and the United States of America have seen similar increases. There are a number of possible reasons, including increased levels of pollution, but firm evidence that this is a cause of the increased prevalence of asthma is lacking.

Community Care

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what mechanisms exist to facilitate co-ordination between Government Departments on community care.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Close contact is maintained through ministerial and official groups.

Back Pain

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many awards the Health Service Superannuation Branch makes each year to staff suffering back pain or back injury for (a) National Health Service permanent injury benefit and (b) National Health Service temporary injury benefit;

(2) what is the number of claims each year for national health service ill-health retirement pensions because of back pain or back injury;

(3) what is the amount of national health service ill-health retirement pensions paid out each year for retirement due to back pain or back injury;

(4) how many claims the national health service's superannuation branch receives each year for (a) national health service permanent injury benefit and (b) national health service temporary injury benefit, due to back pain or back injury;

(5) what is the total amount of (a) permanent injury benefit or (b) temporary injury benefit paid out each year to national health service staff suffering back pain or back injury;

(6) how many ill-health retirement pensions awards the national health service makes each year for retirement due to back pain or back injury;

(7) what is the total number of awards paid for (a) national health service permanent injury benefit and (b) national health service temporary injury benefit;

(8) what is the total number of claims each year for national health service ill-health retirement pensions;

(9) what is the total amount of national health service ill-health retirement pension paid out each year;

(10) what is the total number of claims each year for (a) national health service permanent and (b) national health service temporary injury benefit;

(11) what is the total amount paid out each year for all awards of (a) national health service permanent injury benefit and (b) national health service temporary injury benefit;

(12) what is the total number of ill-health retirement pension awards the national health service makes each year.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In England and Wales during 1990-91, the NHS pension scheme received approximately 7,400 applications for ill-health retirement pension of which 7,092 were awarded. In the same year, approximately 1,200 permanent injury benefits were claimed and 1,097 were awarded. Six hundred and thirty of these were one-off lump sum payments, the remainder included a continuing pension. By the end of the year, continuing injury benefit pensions totalled 2,636. Total permanent injury benefit expenditure for the year was £6,493,000, including one-off lump sums and pensions increase. Total temporary injury allowance expenditure was £1,441,000.

Details of temporary injury allowance numbers, separate costs for ill-health retirement pensions and applications, awards or expenditure divided by medical condition are not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

There are parallel schemes for the NHS in Northern Ireland and Scotland. Information for these is a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Northern Ireland and for Scotland.

Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the European Community's HELIOS programme promoting the economic and social integration of disabled people.

Mr. Dorrell: The Government have supported all aspects of the European Community's HELIOS programme promoting the economic and social integration of disabled people since it was agreed by the Council of Ministers in 1988. In order to determine what benefits the programme has provided for United Kingdom participants, an independent evaluation of the United Kingdom's part in the programme is being prepared by a team of researchers from Southampton university.

Discussions are currently taking place in the Council's working groups to establish a further five-year programme, HELIOS II, to run from 1992 to 1996.

Hospices

Sir Robert Rhodes James: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the total value of extra help provided by the Government for hospices over the last 12 months.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government have earmarked funds of £17 million this year to enable health authorities in England to increase the support they give to voluntary hospices, bringing the total estimated NHS contribution to £41 million. This is in addition to the cost of specialised palliative care services provided directly by the NHS, estimated at £21 million. These sums do not include social security benefits for hospice residents, which I understand the Department of Social Security does not separately identify.

Nasogastric Feeding Tubes

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated cost of nasogastric feeding tubes being available on prescription from general practitioners.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I am not able to add to the reply I gave the hon. Member on 11 November at column 409.

Tobacco Advertising

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations he has received on the banning of tobacco advertising; how many of these were in favour and how many against; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: A total of 614 representations have been received on this subject; these contain arguments both in favour of and against banning tobacco advertising.

Radiotherapy

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the waiting time for patients needing radiotherapy treatment for cancer at each hospital in the Northern regional health authority area in May 1991; and what is the latest waiting time for those patients.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no patients waiting for in-patient radiotherapy treatment at any of the hospitals in the Northern region in May 1991 or at present. Out-patients—non-urgent cases—in Newcastle general hospital were waiting for an average of four weeks in May 1991; this has increased to an average of six weeks. New facilities costing £3·2 million now coming on stream will reduce the waiting time to four weeks by early spring 1992.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will increase the level of funding to the Northern regional health authority to provide for the repair of inoperative radiotherapy equipment.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Northern regional health authority is currently investing £3·2 million at Newcastle general hospital in the most up-to-date radiotherapy facilities in the United Kingdom including the latest linear accelerator equipment. The regional health authority announced on 9 November that an additional £190,000 has been allocated to the hospital for an additional consultant and radiography staff. It is expected that this will have a speedy effect on waiting times. Non-urgent cases waiting times will reduce to about four weeks by February 1992.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients in the Northern regional health authority area who were on the waiting list for radiotherapy treatment have died in the current year before receiving treatment; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not available.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will initiate a full inquiry into the treatment of cancer patients in the area of the Northern regional health authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. I understand from the chairman of Northern regional health authority that 4,600 patients have been treated by the Northern RHA in 1990-91: an increase of 11·3 per cent. over the previous year. This level of radiotherapy treatment is entirely consistent with levels and patterns of treatment in England as a whole.

Abortion

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he has taken to fulfil the commitment given in his response to the tenth report of the Social Services Committee in Session 1989-90 on the conscience clause of the Abortion Act 1967 that he would draw to the attention of medical schools the recommendation that candidates for places at such schools should not be asked questions about their attitudes to abortion, and upon what date that action was taken.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Officials of the Department of Education and Science wrote to the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals of the United Kingdom on 9 May 1991 asking them to draw the attention of medical schools to the Committee's recommendation. The CVCP wrote to the deans of medical schools on 24 May 1991.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of the monitoring system for advertisements for hospital posts referred to in his response to the tenth report of the Social Services Committee in Session 1989-90 on the conscience clause of the Abortion Act 1967; how many breaches of guidelines have been monitored; and what action has been taken in each of those cases.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: These monitoring arrangements have identified one breach of the guidelines. The health authority concerned was contacted and withdrew the advertisement.

Patients Charter

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients in (a) England and (b) the United Kingdom are likely to fall within the ambit of the patients charter at any one time.

Mr. Dorrell: The rights set out in the patients charter apply to everyone entitled to NHS care in England, and the national standards defined in the charter apply to all NHS providers in England. Information relating to Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales, for Scotland and for Northern Ireland.

Wheelchairs

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the weight of the current national health service-issue wheelchair for the disabled; when was the last significant change in the design and weight; and what plans he has for introducing and making available through the national health service a new, significantly lighter weight design of wheelchair.

Mr. Dorrell: The target weight for an adult self-propelled wheelchair, including leg rests, foot rests and arms, detailed in the current NHS performance specification is 36lb. The NHS purchases wheelchairs to performance specifications which in 1990 replaced the previous Disablement Services Authority design specifications. Lighter weight wheelchairs from a number of suppliers are also available through the NHS.

Oral Health Strategy Group

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the names and current responsibilities of the members of the oral health strategy group convened by the chief dental officer together with the group's terms of reference; and if he will make a statement concerning the discussions which took place at the meeting held on 4 and 6 October.

Mr. Dorrell: The oral health strategy group comprises:

Members

Mr. R. B. Mouatt (Chairman)—Chief Dental Officer, Department of Health.
Miss M. R. Edwards—Assistant Secretary, Department of Health.
Professor J. J. Murray—Department of Child Dental Health, University of Newcastle-upon-Tyne.
Professor C. J. Smith—Department of Oral Pathology, Charles Clifford Dental School, Sheffield.
Mr. N. B. A. Entwistle—Advisory Board in General Dental Practice, Faculty of Dental Surgery, Royal College of Surgeons of England. Senior Dental Officer, Community Dental Service dental research and information unit, University of Wales.
Mr. W. Allen—General dental practitioner and Regional Adviser in general dental practice.
Mr. R. C. Ward—Consultant in dental public health, East Suffolk Health Authority.
Dr. S. Griffiths—Regional Director of Public Health, SW Thames Regional Health Authority.
Professor M. A. Lennon—Department of Community Dental Health, University of Liverpool.
Professor A. Sheiham—Department of Community Dental Health, University College and Middlesex Hospitals, London.
Mr. G. O. Taylor—Consultant in dental public health and Regional Dental Officer, North Western Regional Health Authority.
Miss J. Todd—Statistician, Dental Practice Board.
Professor N. H. F. Wilson—Department of Conservative Dentistry. Turner Dental School, Manchester.
Mr. R. Thompson—Association of Community Health Councils of England and Wales.
Mrs. F. M. Baker (Secretary)—Dental officer, Department of Health.

Observers

Mr. N. K. Colquhoun—Chief Dental Officer, Scotland.
Mr. D. M. Heap—Chief Dental Oficer, Wales.
Mr. W. Collins—Chief Dental Officer Northern Ireland.

The group's terms of reference are:

To revise the 1981 oral health strategy and to advise on the development of an oral health strategy for England, in particular to:

define oral health;

assist in the development of a consultative document which would invite nationwide comment on the development of an oral health strategy;

identify areas of oral health where there is a need for and an opportunity to effect a reduction in avoidable oral disease and where concerted activity could bring major measurable health gain; set a framework of the best possible information on current status against which progress could be measured; establish clear targets which could be translated into effective action to meet them and to indicate the manner in which those targets might be achieved."

The first meeting of the group considered the opportunities for health gain afforded by a new oral health strategy and the issues to be addressed in the consultative document. Issues considered ranged over health promotion and education, models of disease prevention, inter-agency activity, consumer participation, care delivery, and primary and secondary care boundaries.

Adult Population

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current adult, over 18 years, population of the United Kingdom extrapolated from the latest available census information.

Mr. Dorrell: The United Kingdom population aged 18 and over at mid-1990, the latest available, is estimated to be 44·28 million. The corresponding projected population at mid-1991 is 44·42 million according to the Government Actuary's latest, 1989-based, projections. These figures take no account of the 1991 census. Estimates of the population at mid-1991 reflecting the 1991 census are expected to be available in September 1992.

Mr. Frank O'Noroe-O'Neil

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will investigate what additional assistance is available to Mr. Frank O'Noroe-O'Neil of 29 Lamberton road, Braintree, Essex, in meeting the cost of his prescriptions, an eye test and spectacles for three distances.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Help under the NHS low income scheme is available for those with limited financial resources who do not otherwise qualify for exemption from NHS charges. No claim has been received from Mr. O'Noroe-O'Neil. Officials will contact him to explain the exemption arrangements and how a claim for help may be made.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy

Ms. Walley: To ask the Lord President of the Council what account the House of Commons Refreshment Department has taken of the recommendations of the Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy.

Mr. MacGregor: As part of a continuing policy of seeking to provide nutritious and appetising food of a good standard for Members, their staff, and staff of the House, the Refreshment Department retains and follows the advice of a qualified nutritional consultant. That advice takes account of the various studies and conclusions of the Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy, including those contained in the recent report of the panel on dietary reference values.

Crèche

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Lord President of the Council, pursuant to his answer of 5 November, Official Report, columns 59-60, if he will undertake to inform the Transport and General Workers Union parliamentary branch of the progress of discussions on and plans for the establishment of a nursery on the parliamentary estate.

Mr. MacGregor: It is anticipated that, as appropriate, Members, the staff associations representing their staff, the House of Commons Whitley committee and the Departments of the House will be brought into discussions on any plan to establish a child care facility in the parliamentary estate.

EMPLOYMENT

Health and Safety

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total number of accidents reported each year by all employers to the Health and Safety Executive under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985.

Mr. Jackson: The available information is provided in the table.

Occupational injuries reported to the Health and Safety Executive[1], under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985[2] 1986-87 to 1989-90[3]

Year	Employees	Number of injuries[4] Self-employed	Members of public[5]	Total
1986-87	161,442	1,734	13,859	177,035
1987-88	157,831	2,068	11,953	171,852
1988-89	158,376	2,701	11,593	172,670
1989-90	161,884	3,221	10,251	175,356

[1] Excludes injuries reported to local authorities and HSC agency inspectorates, namely the petroleum engineering division of the Department of Energy and the railway inspectorate.
[2] Includes a small number of injuries reported to the explosives inspectorates under explosives legislation.
[3] Year beginning 1 April.
[4] Fatal, major and where appropriate, other injuries causing incapacity for work for more than three days.
[5] Members of public injured as a result of someone else's work activity—over three-day injuries are not reportable for members of the public.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total number of manual handling or back injury-related accidents reported each year by all employers to the Health and Safety Executive under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985.

Mr. Jackson: The total number of manual handling or back injury-related accidents reported each year by all employers to the Health and Safety Executive under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985 is set out in the table. Column 1 gives the number of manual handling injuries and column 2 the number of back injuries. Column 3 shows the number of back injuries which arise from manual handling injuries.

Injuries to employees reported[1] to HSE's factory and agricultural inspectorates

Year[2]	Manual handling injuries[3]	Back injuries	Back injuries caused by manual handling	Manual handling injuries reported to other HSE inspectorates[4]
1986-87	45,985	29,610	20,372	[5]
1987-88	46,967	29,958	21,031	2,208
1988-89	47,823	30,312	21,315	1,707
1989-90	49,231	30,693	21,706	1,304

[1] Fatal, major and over three day injuries reported under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985.
[2] Years commencing 1 April.
[3] Injuries caused by handling, lifting, carrying and awkward movement.
[4] Reports made to HSE's mines, quarries, explosives and nuclear installations inspectorate.
[5] Not available.

On 7 November the Health and Safety Commission published a consultative document containing proposals for regulations and guidance aimed at reducing this toll of injury. The proposals are also a response to the European Commission directive on manual handling the implementation of which is due by 31 December 1992.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number of manual handling or back injury-related accidents reported each year by the national health service to the Health and Safety Executive under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985.

Mr. Jackson: The number of injuries reported each year by the national health service is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

The table shows the total number of manual handling related or back injuries to employees occurring in all medical and other health services between 1986-87 and 1989-90.

Date of accident[1]	Number of reported[2] injuries
	Manual handling related[3]	Back injuries	Back injuries caused by manual handling
1986-87	2,937	2,259	1,861
1987-88	4,113	3,124	2,644
1988-89	4,471	3,456	2,931
1989-90	4,943	3,768	3,202

[1] Years beginning 1 April.
[2] Fatal, major and other injuries causing incapacity for work for more than three days reported to HSE's factory and agricultural inspectorates under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations, 1985.
[3] Injuries caused by handling, lifting, carrying and awkward movement.

On the 7 November the Health and Safety Commission published a consultative document containing proposals for regulations and guidance aimed at reducing this toll of injury. The proposals are also a response to the European Commission directive on manual handling, the implementation of which is due by 31 December 1992.

Redundancies, Merseyside

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have been declared redundant on Merseyside over the past three months.

Mr. Jackson: The provisional number of confirmed redundancies received for the Merseyside area in the three months to September was 2,210.

Co-operatives

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much money his Department has set aside for aiding the development of co-operatives in the present financial year; and how much of the money has been allocated or granted to (a) the United Kingdom Co-operative Council, (b) other organisations concerned with the promotion or development of co-operatives and (c) directly to co-operatives in the form of pump-priming grants.

Mr. Jackson: The amount available to support innovative projects in the co-operative sector is up to the amount that might otherwise have been spent in maintaining the Co-operative Development Agency until 1993; that is, up to £300,000 per annum.

In the present financial year £45,000 has been allocated to the United Kingdom Co-operative Council. No further sums have been allocated at present, but the Department is considering proposals from a number of organisations.

Dangerous Cargoes

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects to publish the report on the transportation of hazardous cargoes and dangerous substances by road or rail or marine transport.

Mr. Jackson: The Health and Safety Commission's report on the major hazard aspects of the transport of dangerous substances was published on 12 November 1991. Sir John Cullen, chairman of the Commission, launched the report at a press conference on the same day.

A copy has been placed in the Library.

Restart Interviews and Job Clubs

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many people in Coventry have attended a restart interview since 1 April; what were the results of those interviews; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many people in Coventry have attended a restart interview since 1 April 1991; how many of those interviewed then (a) started work, (b) began training under employment training, (c) started in a job club, (d) started a restart course or (e) attended an enterprise allowance scheme awareness day; and if he will make a statement;

(3) how many people in Coventry in the last 12 months since April 1990, and the six months since April 1991 have joined job clubs; how many have left; how many leavers got jobs; how many entered another positive outcome; if he will publish that information broken down by the ethnic origin and by gender; and what are the comparable figures for the west midlands region as a whole.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred these questions for reply.

Working Hours

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to introduce statutory rights for people working less than eight hours a week.

Mr. Jackson: None.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give for Coventry the figures of unemployment, broken down by age, sex and duration.

Mr. Jackson: Unemployment figures by age and duration are available only on a quarterly basis. The latest, relating to July 1991, can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library. Figures for October 1991 will be published on Tuesday 19 November.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the top 10 constituencies with the highest level of unemployment in England, Scotland and Wales at the latest available date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: For areas with different sized work forces, such as parliamentary constituencies, the only meaningful comparisons are based on unemployment rates. These are not available at the level of parliamentary constituencies.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many persons under the age of 21 years are unemployed in the Liverpool travel-to-work area at the most recent date.

Mr. Jackson: Unemployment figures by age and duration are available on a quarterly basis and provide separate figures for those under 20 years of age. In July 1991, the latest available date, there were 6,804 unemployed claimants aged under 20 in the Liverpool travel-to-work area.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the percentage rate of unemployment in Liverpool, Riverside constituency at the latest date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The smallest geographical areas for which unemployment rates are available are travel-to-work areas. The unemployment rate in October 1991 for Liverpool travel-to-work area was 14·7 per cent., 6·2 percentage points lower than at the peak in January 1986. The figures are on the unadjusted basis and comparisons are affected by changes in the coverage of the count over the period and by seasonal influences.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will produce a table to show, for each of the last 12 months, the number of (a) unemployed in Coventry, (b) the number of vacancies available at (i) the local jobcentre and (ii) the careers office and (c) (a) divided by (b).

Mr. Jackson: The information on unemployment and jobcentre vacancies can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the House of Commons Library. Information for vacancies at career offices in Coventry can be found in the west midlands regional press notice, copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on unemployment figures for Liverpool and Merseyside at the latest date.

Mr. Jackson: In October 1991, the unadjusted level of unemployment in the county of Merseyside was 93,485. In the Liverpool travel-to-work area, part of which falls in the county of Merseyside, the unadjusted level of unemployment was 71,150.

Manufacturing Jobs

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of manufacturing jobs in the northern region in 1979 and the number in 1991 or the latest date available.

Mr. Jackson: The information is shown in the table.

Employees in manufacturing in the Northern Region

TECs

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has issued any strategic guidance to training and enterprise councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I issued my strategic guidance for 1992-93 to TECs on Friday 15 November. The guidance sets out the key issues I would like TECs to address in their plans for the coming year. At the same time, the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and I issued a joint statement setting out ways we see the relationship between TECs and his Department being strengthened. I have placed copies of the guidance and the joint statement in the Library.

Libya

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration he has given to the resumption of direct flights between the United Kingdom and Libya to assist British workers and businesses operating there.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no plans to propose the resumption of direct flights between Britain and Libya. Any such move would be particularly inappropriate in view of the charges that Libyans were responsible for the Lockerbie bombing.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance he is providing to British businesses to try to obtain contracts in connection with (a) the great man-made river project and (b) the Melita power station in Libya.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None. We have neither encouraged nor discouraged British companies who wish to trade with Libya. This has been a matter for their commercial judgment alone.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek an assurance from the Libyan authorities that they do not supply arms to terrorists.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Our considered response to the charges that Libyan officials were responsible for the Lockerbie bombing will be announced shortly.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on United Kingdom relations with Libya.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Relations remain very poor, and particularly so in the light of the charges that Libyan officials were responsible for the Lockerbie bombing.

Iraq

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what inspections have so far been carried out by the United Nations Special Commission and the International Atomic Agency in Iraq under the terms of Security Council resolution 687; and what contribution Britain is making to their work.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are actively supporting the work of the United Nations special commission and the International Atomic Energy Agency—IAEA—as they carry out their mandates under the relevant Security Council resolutions. They have so far completed 20 inspections. These are listed in the table, together with details of the assistance given by Britain. A further two inspections are currently in progress.

In addition to providing assistance for specific inspections, a senior British expert on chemical and biological defence matters is a full-time member of the special commission. Other British experts have taken part in ad hoc specialist meetings, one is chairman of the chemical warfare destruction advisory panel who also took part, together with the British member of the commission, in two fact-finding missions to Iraq on chemical weapons. We have made available to the United Nations information on Iraq's weapons capabilities. The Government also suport in principle the nuclear industry's readiness to assist the IAEA, in partnership with French industry, in the IAEA's task of recovering irradiated nuclear fuel from Iraq.

We shall continue strongly to support the work of the special commission and IAEA, and encourage others to do likewise. It is vitally important for the security of the region and the world that Iraq should not be allowed to retain or redevelop its weapons of mass destruction.

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made by the United Nations Special Commission and the International Atomic Energy Agency in the destruction, removal or rendering harmless of Iraq's weapons of mass destruction under Security Council resolutions 687 and 707.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Nations Special Commission and the International Atomic Energy Agency have made substantial progress in dismantling Iraq's weapons of mass destruction—WMD—capability in the 22 inspections which have been mounted since May 1991, despite deception and obstruction by Iraq in flagrant breach of its obligations under Security Council Resolutions 687 and 707.

SCR 687 required Iraq to make a declaration of the locations, amounts and types of all the items related to its WMD programmes. In making its original declaration, Iraq denied having a nuclear weapons programme or a biological weapons programme, and declared only some 11,000 chemical munitions and only 52 ballistic missiles, with no mention of a supergun. Revised declarations by Iraq and subsequent inspections have revealed: an enormous covert nuclear weapons development programme; a biological research programme for military purposes; some 46,000 filled chemical munitions, 79,000 unfilled chemical munitions, over 600 tons of chemical weapon agent and some 3,000 tons of chemical precursors; 62 ballistic missiles and supergun assemblies and parts. We do not believe that the full extent of the Iraqi WMD programmes has yet been uncovered.

Under the terms of SCR 687, items relating to Iraq's WMD programmes are to be destroyed, removed or rendered harmless. Inspectors have so far supervised the destruction of 62 ballistic missiles; 10 missile launchers, 18 fixed Scud missile launch pads, 11 dummy missiles, 32 ballistic missile warheads, 127 missile storage support vehicles, a substantial amount of rocket fuel, an assembled 350 mm supergun, components for 350 mm and 1,000 mm superguns, 1 tonne of supergun propellant and over 11,800 unfilled chemical munitions. In addition, inspectors have confirmed the destruction, by coalition bombing, of several missile repair and production facilities. Plans are now in hand for the destruction of the chemical munitions and bulk agents. Destruction of the equipment used in Iraq's nuclear weapons development programme has begun and the IAEA is preparing to remove nuclear weapons usable material from Iraq.

At present sanctions apply to all exports to Iraq other than food, medicine and essential civilian supplies for humanitarian purposes. Under paragraph 22 of SCR 687 sanctions will be lifted only when the Security Council agrees that Iraq has completed all the actions concerned with the destruction of its WMD. Even then all states will be required to prevent the sale or supply to Iraq of arms, weapons technology and military training facilities for the foreseeable future, that is, until a further decision of the Security Council.

Moreover, Iraq's ability to use, develop, construct or acquire weapons of mass destruction in future should be precluded by the stringent monitoring and verification regimes embodied in two detailed plans approved under SCR 715 on 11 October. One plan, submitted by the Secretary-General pursuant to paragraph 10 of SCR 687, covers chemical weapons, biological weapons and ballistic missiles. The other, submitted by the director general of the IAEA pursuant to paragraph 12 of SCR 687, covers the nuclear field. The plans entered into force with the adoption of SCR 715 and will remain in force until otherwise determined by the Security Council.

Kenya

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the Government of Kenya regarding their relations with Renamo.

Mrs. Chalker: At the beginning of this month, the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs sent a message to the Kenyan Foreign Minister expressing the hope that Kenya would continue to use its influence in the region to promote peace in Mozambique. The Secretary of State also thanked President Moi of Kenya for his part in persuading Renamo to cease attacks on the Limpopo corridor.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Yugoslav National Army requesting it not to use cluster bombs in the present fighting.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We and our EC partners have repeatedly called on all sides to respect the ceasefire agreements in their entirety.

Mr. Anson Na Yong

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made by the post in Guatemala about the death of British citizen journalist, Mr. Anson Na Yong; what statement has been issued by the post or his Department on Mr. Yong's death; when letters from the National Union of Journalists and the International Federation of Journalists to him about Mr. Yong's death will be answered; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The British embassy in Guatemala is following the Guatemalan investigation into the murder of Mr. Anson Na Yong closely. An initial report was received and forwarded to the United Kingdom coroner. The embassy is pressing for a further progress report.

It is not the practice of Her Majesty's Government or British diplomatic posts to issue statements on the death of British nationals overseas.

The International Federation of Journalists, whose letter was acknowledged on 14 August 1991, asked to be kept informed through the National Union of Journalists. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State replied to the National Union of Journalists on 14 October 1991.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Open University

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science to what extent he proposes to enhance the broad coverage of the Open university's methods of imparting higher education.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The university is playing a prominent part in the development of new course delivery methods and technologies, with the support of the block grant it receives from the Department of Education and Science. I have every confidence that it will continue to do so when it is funded by the Higher Education Funding Council for England.

English GCSE

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what research was undertaken before the proposal to change the GCSE key stage 4 assessment system in English was introduced.

Mr. Eggar: HM inspectorate has reported that coursework is of a variable quality, may fail to bring out the best in pupils at both ends of the ability range, and may be inadequately moderated. It has, however, reported that it has a generally positive effect on pupil motivation.

Student Support

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what local education authorities have made no provision for discretionary awards to students in 1991-92 and 1990-91;

(2) what local education authorities in the United Kingdom have reduced their budget provision for discretionary awards to students at (a) further and (b) higher education levels in real terms in 1991-92 relative to provision in 1990-91.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Information is not yet available about local education authorities' outturn expenditure on discretionary awards to students in 1990-91, or their budgeted expenditure in 1991-92. The 1991-92 revenue support grant settlement increased standard spending on education by 16 per cent. over 1990-91. It would have allowed authorities collectively to spend 9 per cent. more in 1991-92 than they themselves planned to spend in total on education in 1990-91. This would have permitted some growth in overall discretionary award provision if authorities so chose. I am not aware of any authority ceasing to pay discretionary awards altogether.

Human Tissues

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what co-ordination exists between human tissue banks to prevent human material from going to waste.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Medical Research Council, which receives grant aid from my Department, provides funds for the foetal tissue bank at the Royal Marsden hospital, London and for nine brain tissue banks. The foetal issue bank is a national facility supplying material to more than 100 centres in the United Kingdom. It operates according to guidelines published in the "Review of the Guidance on the Research Use of Foetuses and Foetal Material"—the Polkinghorne report, Cm. 762. The MRC is reviewing the activities of the brain tissue banks to ensure that there is optimum co-ordination between them and their users. The health departments, university departments and medical schools may also be supporting other tissue banks. Information is not held centrally about these.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment he has made of the advantages and preferred use of human tissues compared with animal tissues in research, testing and education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: None. This is a matter for the academic and research community.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish the number, location and type of human tissue storage facilities which exist for the purposes of research, testing and education in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Such facilities may exist at higher education institutions, research establishments and hospitals. The information requested is not held centrally.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will bring forward proposals to expand the number of human tissue storage facilities.

Mr. Alan Howarth: No evidence has been put to my Department which would indicate that such an expansion was needed.

Schools (Ministerial Visits)

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the schools which (a) he, (b) the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Enfield, North (Mr. Eggar) and (c) the Parliamentary Under-Secretary, the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Fallon), have visited in their official capacity since assuming their different offices, with the date, purpose of visit, type of school and local authority concerned, in each case.

Sport (Sponsorship)

Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on the amount of financial sponsorship of sport by the private sector each year over the last 10 years, showing the percentage change.

Mr. Atkins: The Government welcome the contribution of private sector sponsorship towards the funding of sport in the United Kingdom. The mutual benefits to sport and business are clear from the increase in such funding over the past 10 years. The available figures are:

Year	Sponsorship (£ millions)	Per cent. increase
1981	60	100
1982	85	42
1983	100	18
1984	110	10
1985	125	14
1986	145	16
1987	160	10
1988	180	19

Sports Council

Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the annual grant aid provided for the Sports Council since 1979.

Mr. Atkins: The Government's annual grant aid to the Sports Council of Great Britain since 1979 has been:

Year	£ millions
1980-81	19·288
1981-82	21·032
1982-83	28·002

British Boxing Board of Control

Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on his recent meeting with the British Boxing Board of Control.

Mr. Atkins: I had a constructive meeting with the BBBC on 16 October. My purpose in calling the meeting was to encourage discussion between medical specialists and the BBBC on safety in professional boxing. I understand that, as a result, the BBBC is intending to instigate regulations to include most of the recommendations proposed at that meeting.

Manchester Olympic Bid

Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met the chairman of the Manchester Olympic Bid Committee; and what was discussed.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary for the Environment and I met the chairman of the bid committee together with representatives from the British Olympic Association and Manchester city council on 5 November to discuss progress with the bid.

School Swimming Facilities

Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects the survey of school swimming facilities to be completed.

Mr. Atkins: Schools and local education authorities have been asked to complete and return survey questionnaires to the Department by 22 November 1991. The survey is intended to provide a picture of the access schools have to swimming pools; the number of pools on school sites; the recurrent costs associated with swimming provision; and the cost of building learner pools where necessary. This information will help determine when a requirement can be introduced for all primary age pupils to be taught to swim.

Sport (Drug Abuse)

Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action he is taking to curb drug abuse in national and international sport.

Mr. Atkins: The Government have sought to counter doping through the establishment in 1988 of the Sports Council's independent drug testing programme, and through the announcement in February 1991 of a carefully targeted package of measures to tackle steroid misuse including the creation of a new criminal offence of supplying steroids to minors. Internationally, the Government have ratified the Council of Europe's anti-doping convention which came into force in 1990 and have signed a trilateral anti-doping agreement with the Australian and Canadian Governments.

Sports Clubs (Rate Relief)

Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received regarding rate relief for sports clubs and its effects on extra-curricular school sport.

Mr. Atkins: I have had many representations on the subject of rate relief for sports clubs, several of which concern its effects on sport beyond the curriculum. The Government are particularly keen to encourage more links between schools and local sports clubs in order to provide opportunities for sport outside school hours. We recognise the value of the facilities that many non-profit making sports clubs provide for the local community. That is why we have retained the arrangement from the previous rating system whereby non-profit making sports clubs can receive up to 100 per cent. rate relief at the discretion of their local authority. The Government will refund to local authorities 75 per cent. of any relief awarded. The preliminary results of a Department of the Environment survey show that more non-profit making sports clubs received more relief in 1990-91 than in 1989-90, the last year of general rates.

Sport Expenditure

Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the Government's annual expenditure on sport in 1979 and in the last year available.

Mr. Atkins: Central Government's annual grant to the four Sports Councils of the United Kingdom in 1979-80 was £21·490 million and the estimated outturn for 1991-92 is £60·49 million.

Local government gross revenue expenditure in England and Wales on sport and recreation in 1979-80 was £333 million and in 1989-90 it was £1,028 million.

Champion Coaching Project

Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the champion coaching project.

Mr. Atkins: I am delighted that earlier this year I was able to announce an additional £700,000 for the Sports Council to fund champion coaching. This pilot scheme is being run by the National Coaching Foundation and is providing sporting opportunities beyond the school curriculum for more than 6,000 children in 24 areas across England and in 11 sports. Six hundred local coaches will also be trained to work with young people. Champion coaching will provide examples of successful local partnerships which I hope will encourage the creation of further sporting opportunities for young people at local level.

Capital Allocations

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table listing (a) the amounts of capital allocations for county and voluntary controlled schools for 1992-93 for which each local education authority in England has bid, (b) the amount of capital grant for voluntary aided schools in their area which each local education authority has asked of his Department and (c) the totals of (a) and (b) for each local education authority and with totals in respect of (a), (b) and (c) for England, and for each region.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The information requested is provided in the table. The figures are taken from the capital plans for 1992-93 submitted by each local education authority to the Department. It must be borne in mind that, in most cases, the bidding process produces figures which far exceed any sum which the authorities concerned seriously expect to receive or need to spend in the year in question.

Notes:

[1] The figures should be treated with caution. They represent the initial bids made by local education authorities and take no account of subsequent amendments to those bids.

[2] All figures are in thousands.

[3] The bids for capital allocations at voluntary aided (VA) and special agreement (SA) schools do not include bids for Minor Improvement Projects. Grants for minor works will be allocated to LEAs by formula.

[4] VA and SA schools bids marked "*" include an estimate for committed projects (ie based on 1991-92 submissions) since LEA bids for such expenditure have not yet been received.

School Grants

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish an updated version of the table given in answer to the hon. Member for Blackburn, 22 November 1990, Official Report, columns 184-86, to include estimates for expenditure for 1992-93.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The updated information requested is provided in the table.

Notes:

[1] All figures are in £ million. All figures are rounded.

[2] Constant prices are calculated at 1981-82 prices using the latest DGP deflators. The index for 1981-82 is set at 100.

[3] The cash allocation figure for voluntary aided and special agreement schools for 1992-93 is provisional.

[4] The Department provides grant aid at a rate of 85 per cent. on governors' capital expenditure at voluntary aided and special agreement schools.

[5] Capital grant figures for the voluntary aided sector for 1981-82 are not separately identifiable from a single building grant figure which includes repairs and maintenance. The capital figures shown for this year are based on an apportionment of the building grant figure using the average ratio between capital and repairs during 1982-83 and 1985-86.

[6] Prior to 1981-82 local authorities did not receive block allocations, but were notified annually in the context of a rolling programme of a limit on the value of the building starts in the following year.

[7] Local authority allocations for 1989-90 and subsequent ACGs exclude institutions which were transferred to the PCFC sector in 1989-90.

Parents Charter

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many parents there are in (a) England and (b) the United Kingdom with children up to the age of 18 years in full-time education who will be assisted by the parents charter.

Mr. Eggar: Up-to-date information on the number of families with children in full-time schooling is not readily available. The latest available pupil numbers show that in 1990-91 there were 7 million pupils up to age 18 studying full-time in schools in England. The latest available equivalent figure for the United Kingdom, for 1989-90, is 8·4 million.

National Curriculum

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he intends to lay before Parliament the statutory order to introduce modern foreign languages into the national curriculum.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I have today published the document setting out the attainment targets and programmes of study for modern foreign languages in the national curriculum, and have laid an order which will bring this document into effect from the beginning of the next school year for pupils starting key stage 3—those aged 11 in September 1992.

The introduction of the requirements for modern foreign languages in the national curriculum will ensure that pupils follow challenging courses of study, leading to high standards and worthwhile levels of achievement by pupils of all abilities.

My right hon. Friend and I have also today laid a new order under section 3(2)(b) of the Education Reform Act which specifies in a single list instead of two schedules the languages eligible to be the national curriculum foundation subject.

Copies of all these statutory documents have been placed in the Library.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he intends to lay before Parliament the statutory order to introduce the geography short course for key stage 4 in the national curriculum.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Following publication in March of the national curriculum geography order, I have published today a document setting out attainment targets and programmes of study for the geography short course at key stage 4 and have laid an order which will bring this document into force from August 1994.

The publication of this document will ensure that pupils who at age 14 are not taking a course in geography leading to GCSE, are offered the choice and flexibility to continue to study geography. I expect that the short course will facilitate the development of useful combined GCSE or vocational courses: for example, geography with history, economics or a modern foreign language. My aim is to create the conditions which will enable pupils to maximise their potential.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales is making a separate order to introduce geography short course arrangements in Wales.

Teacher Training

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students were recruited to courses of initial teacher training in 1991.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: A survey undertaken by my Department shows that 28,792 students entered courses of initial teacher training in England and Wales in October 1991. This is a dramatic increase of 4,998 or 21 per cent. over 1990. Intakes to primary courses were 13·5 per cent. higher and intakes to secondary courses were 32·4 per cent. higher than last year. There were increases of 35 per cent. or more in intakes to courses in the secondary shortage subjects of mathematics—42 per cent.—science—38 per cent.—technology—57 per cent.—and modern languages —35 per cent.

Overall recruitment into teacher training this year is at its highest level for any year since 1976. It is especially encouraging to see particularly good increases in shortage subjects. It shows that teaching is once again an attractive career option for young people and that we should not face any serious problems of teacher shortage over the next four years.

I am placing in the Library the detailed results of the survey.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Eastern Europe

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received concerning aid for overseas development in eastern Europe this winter.

Mrs. Chalker: We have a continuing programme of technical assistance to eastern Europe and the Soviet Union under the know-how-fund. We discuss this regularly with recipient Governments. I am not aware of our having received any recent requests for further development assistance which relate specifically to the forthcoming winter.

OECD

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with Development Ministers of OECD countries on aid matters over the last month.

Mrs. Chalker: I met the director general of the Japanese Economic Co-operation Bureau on 30 October. We had wide-ranging discussions on aid issues.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what overseas aid projects now taking place in Sri Lanka are helped with funding from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Chalker: I announced to the House on 22 July the withdrawal of our conditional offer of £3 million assistance for Sri Lanka and said that any new major commitments would be considered in the light of Sri Lankan Government policies and practices including the position on human rights. No such projects have been agreed since then. A list of ongoing projects agreed before July has been placed in the Libraries of the House.

ENVIRONMENT

British Waterways

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing Government support for British Waterways at 1991 prices for each year since 1979, and planned support for the next three financial years.

Mr. Heseltine: The table shows in current prices the Government's grant to the British Waterway Board—BWB—in the years 1979-80 to 1991-92, together with BWB's external financing limit, EFL, which covers grant and borrowing from the National Loans Fund, for the same period.

	Grant		External financing limit
	Cash £ million	1991-92 prices £ million	Cash £ million	1991-92 prices £ million
1979-80	22·8	52·7	25·7	59·5
1980-81	25·6	50·0	30·0	58·7
1981-82	28·4	50·6	31·6	56·3
1982-83	37·6	62·6	39·3	65·4
1983-84	39·8	63·3	40·8	64·9
1984-85	41·8	63·3	42·8	64·8
1985-86	43·5	62·5	44·1	63·3
1986-87	43·9	60·9	44·8	62·2
1987-88	44·0	58·0	45·0	59·3
1988-89	45·9	56·3	44·9	55·1
1989-90	48·1	55·5	48·5	53·6
1990-91	49·3	52·8	49·4	52·9
1991-92	48·5	48·5	48·5	48·5

The BWB's external financing limit for 1992-93 has been set at £51·1 million, with guideline figures of £49·3 million and £46·4 million for the following two years.

The figures for grants fluctuate from those in the BWB accounts, since the accounts figures are amounts receivable in respect of the year, while the above figures are the amounts actually paid in each year.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to introduce a regulatory agency for British Waterways.

Mr. Heseltine: No.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what implications the policies contained in Cm. 1559, the citizens charter, have for waterways users or customers of the British Waterways Board.

Mr. Heseltine: I expect the board to take full account of the principles of the citizens charter in the customer charter it is developing. In particular, I expect to see that it has effective means for dealing with complaints from users and customers.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met representatives of the British Waterways Board; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Heseltine: The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry), met the chairman of the board on 11 November to discuss a number of matters of current interest, including financing; the board's proposed customer charter; and the Inland Waterways Amenity Advisory Council.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning the British Waterways Bill.

Mr. Heseltine: Since this private Bill was deposited on 27 November last year, a number of letters have been received from hon. Members, and the public, concerning various clauses. The replies have made it clear that it is for the promoters, British Waterways Board, to satisfy Parliament of the case for the Bill.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to introduce legislation affecting the regulation of navigation rights on inland waterways.

Mr. Heseltine: No; but as recommended by the Environment Select Committee, we are starting a review of the navigation functions of British Waterways Board and the National Rivers Authority. It is too early to say whether legislation will result from this review.

Access to Information

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to issue the consultation paper on implementing the EC directive on freedom of access to information on the environment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Many aspects of the directive have already been implemented, for example through the registers on pollution emissions set up under the Environmental Protection Act. I hope to issue a consultation paper on full implementation in the new year.

Wildlife Research

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies his Department has carried out or commissioned within the last two years on (a) the epidemiology of diseases of wild animals and (b) marine mammal strandings, including small cetacean species.

Mr. Baldry: My Department has commissioned the following studies, some of which cover both issues to some extent.

(1) Directorate of Rural Affairs. Wildlife Disease Investigation Review by the Natural Environment Research Council. Final Report published in February 1991 and obtainable from NERC.

(2) Water Directorate. Effects Monitoring using marine mammals by NERC Sea Mammal Research Unit. Final report awaited.

(3) Water Directorate Seal Epidemic and Pollutant levels by NERC/SMRU. Summary of main findings presented to the British Association for the Advance of Science 91 Conference held in Plymouth in August 1991. Published by the Association.

(4) Water Directorate Thymulin in Seals by United Medical and Dental Schools of Guy's and St. Thomas's hospitals. Final report available from DOE.

(5) Water Directorate. Variation in the prevalence of fish disease in Scottish Coastal Waters by Scottish Office, Agriculture and Fisheries Department Laboratory. Final report expected in 1992.

(6) Water Directorate. Wildlife disease—Co-ordination and sampling of marine mammal strandings by the Institute of Zoology, London. Final report expected in 1993.

Leicester (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next plans to visit Leicester.

Mr. Heseltine: I have no plans to visit Leicester in the immediate future.

Montreal Protocol

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to ratify the Montreal protocol; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The United Kingdom ratified the Montreal protocol in 1988. Next month we intend to ratify the amendments to the protocol that were agreed at the second meeting of the parties held in London last year, if possible in concert with our Community partners.

River Quality

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what grants are available for improving river water quality and regenerating waterside land.

Mr. Baldry: Grants specifically aimed at improving river water quality are not available from my Department. The responsibility for monitoring and regulating river water quality lies with the National Rivers Authority. There are a number of initiatives, such as derelict land grant, which may provide assistance in the regeneration of waterside land.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how the figure of £900 million of public expenditure in energy efficiency improvements in the public sector housing stock set out in his first annual report of the ministerial group on energy efficiency was arrived at; and to which financial year it relates.

Mr. Yeo: This figure is based on the proportion of annual expenditure on the public sector housing stock, directed at the improvement of heating and insulation, identified in the 1986 English house condition survey. The estimate of £900 million relates to the financial year 1990-91.

Local Authority Pension Scheme

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 5 November Official Report, column 16, if the equalisation of survivor benefits will extend to past contributions.

Mr. Heseltine: The intention is to provide equal benefits for widows and widowers in respect of service from 6 April 1988. In addition, women will be able to bring earlier service into account if they wish, either by means of reductions in their future lump sums, or by paying additional contributions. Children's pensions will be payable from 6 April 1988 in respect of the whole of their deceased parents' service.

Council House Sales

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the total figure held by each district authority in the south-west in capital receipts from the sale of council houses for (a) 1990 and (b) the total held at the end of the first financial quarter for the current year.

Mr. Yeo: The total of usable capital receipts held by each authority at 31 March 1991 is given in the table. Capital receipts held from the sale of council houses are not separately identifiable. Data on the stock of receipts are collected on an annual basis only.

Cable Laying, Yorkshire

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what application was submitted to the appropriate local authority for planning permission to lay a new cable between Menwith Hill station and Hunter's Stones post office tower in north Yorkshire; who submitted the application; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 14 November 1991]: No application has been received by the local planning authority or my Department in respect of cables between Menwith Hill station and Hunter's Stones post office tower in North Yorkshire.

Homelessness

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what information his Department has on the number of people without permanent accommodation or in temporary accommodation for each local authority area in the first three quarters of 1991;

(2) what information he has on the number of people in private sector housing provided by each local authority in the first three quarters of 1991;

(3) what information his Department has on the number of people in temporary bed-and-breakfast accommodation for each local authority area in the first three quarters of 1991.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 14 November 1991]: The available information relates to households dealt with by local authorities under the homelessness provisions in part III of the Housing Act 1985, which is reported quarterly to the Department.

I have today placed in the Library a table for the second quarter of 1991—the latest available—showing (a) the number of households who applied to local authorities under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 Housing Act, (b) the number for whom local authorities accepted responsibility to secure permanent accommodation (c) the number in temporary accommodation at the end of June and of those, (d) the number in bed-and-breakfast accommodation and (e) the number in private properties leased by local authorities and (f) the number which having been accepted remain in their current accommodation until permanent accommodation becomes available.

Additionally the number of persons sleeping rough on census night was published by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys in its "Supplementary Monitor on People sleeping rough", a copy of which is in the Library.

Landfill Sites

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he now proposes to bring into force section 61 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 15 November 1991]: Section 61 of the Environmental Protection Act is closely linked with and will be implemented together with the waste management licensing provisions of the Act. Under the target timetable for the implementation of part II of the Act, announced on 25 June 1991 by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside, these provisions are due to come into effect in April 1993.

The consultation paper "Improving environmental quality—the Government's proposals for a new, independent Environment Agency" issued on 3 October 1991, stated that the timing of these provisions will need to be reviewed in the light of the emerging timetable for the agency.

Docklands Light Railway

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the experience of each member of the London Docklands development corporation in running public transport.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 15 November 1991]: The present chairman of the London Docklands development corporation previously served as deputy chairman of London Regional Transport and was the first chairman of the DLR; Sir John Garlick was formerly permanent secretary of the combined Departments of Transport and Environment; and Sir Robert Reid, formerly chairman of British Rail, is an LDDC nominee to the board of DLR Ltd.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he plans to give the same statutory powers to the London regional passengers committee regarding consumer representation on docklands light railway once it has passed to London Docklands development corporation as currently exist under London Transport's management of docklands light railway;

(2) what powers the London Docklands development corporation has to call upon the British transport police; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he plans to ensure that travelcard and through ticketing arrangements will continue to operate on the docklands light railway once it has been transferred to the London Docklands development corporation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 15 November 1991]: These are all matters to be resolved as part of the process of transfer of responsibility for the docklands light railway from London Regional Transport to the London Docklands development corporation.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for the future management of the docklands light railway once the London Docklands development corporation has been wound up; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 15 November 1991]: No date for LDDC's wind-up has been set. But when the issue does arise, in keeping with the Government's overall policies, I would expect the docklands light railway to be operated by the private sector.

Local Government Finance, Gloucestershire

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps using his powers under the local government legislation to prepare a report on the finances of Gloucestershire county council.

Mr. Key: No. My right hon. Friend has no such powers.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the sites of special scientific interest in England for which management agreements are currently being negotiated, giving details of the damage threatened in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The information requested is confidential to English Nature and the owner-occupier of the SSSI.

Tenants' Charter

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many tenants in (a) England and (b) the United Kingdom currently have statutory rights under the tenants charter.

Sir George Young: At 1April 1990, in England, there were 4,370,000 tenants of local authorities and 563,000 tenants of housing associations, making a total of 4,933,000. The Department does not hold figures on the total number of secure tenants who meet the conditions of part IV of the Housing Act 1985 and have statutory rights under the tenants charter. For information about Northern Ireland, Scotland and Wales, I refer my right hon. Friend to my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Northern Ireland, for Scotland and for Wales.

SOCIAL SECURITY

National Insurance Contributions

19. Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people at the upper earnings limit pay national insurance contributions on overtime payments.

Mr. Jack: At least 3 million people benefit from the existence of the upper earnings limit and this includes those who normally earn below the upper earnings limit but whose earnings in any one week including overtime exceed the weekly limit. The upper earnings limit ensures such people pay national insurance contributions on only part of their earnings from overtime.

Pensioners

20. Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will detail the movement in pensioners' real earnings (a) between 1974 and 1979 and (b) 1979 and to the latest date and compare each with the underlying movement in average earnings for the same period.

Mr. Newton: My hon. Friend will be interested to hear that the average real value of the earnings of those single pensioners in work, or pensioner couples where one or both were working, increased by 36 per cent. between 1979 and 1988. This compared with a decrease of 6 per cent. between 1974 and 1979. The average real earnings of the whole economy rose by 1 per cent. between 1974 and 1979 and by 25 per cent. between 1979 and 1988.

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average income of a single pensioner and a pensioner couple on income support; and what is the total weekly value of their income from all benefits.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Dulwich (Mr. Bowden) earlier today.

21. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give an estimate of the trend in pensioners' real incomes since 1979.

Mr. Newton: My hon. Friend will be pleased to hear that the average total net income of single pensioners and pensioner couples increased by 34 per cent. between 1979 and 1988.

Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what will be the increase in income support rates for a pensioner couple aged over 80 years as a result of this year's uprating.

Miss Widdecombe: A pensioner couple aged over 80 years will see an increase in their income support of £7·70 at the April 1992 uprating. This is an increase of 8·7 per cent. We have increased the higher pensioner premium by £1·50 for couples and £1 for single people, in addition to the 7 per cent. increase in income support personal allowances and premiums. This premium is payable to disabled pensioners aged 60 to 79 as well as those aged over 80.

Elderly People (Services)

22. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps are being taken to improve DSS service to the elderly.

Miss Widdecombe: We are continually improving our services to the elderly. The recent introduction of the local office computer network has already resulted in a speedier service for pension claims and inquiries. For example, retirement pension claims which were taking, on average, 20 days to clear in 1990-91 are now taking only 16 days.

National Insurance

23. Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the weekly cost to someone on (a) £25,000 a year and (b) £30,000 of the removal of the national insurance upper earnings limit.

Mr. Jack: If the national insurance upper earnings limit were to be removed, someone on earnings of £25,000 or £30,000 a year would pay extra contributions of approximately £8·17 or £16·82 respectively each week.

Care Homes

24. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are expected to benefit from the increased funding from residential care and nursing home income support limits announced in October 1991.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Medway (Dame P. Fenner) earlier today.

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total full-year cost of increases in income support limits for people in residential care and nursing homes announced in the last two years.

Miss Widdecombe: The estimated full-year cost of the April 1991 increase in residential care and nursing home limits is £225 million and for the April 1992 increase £190 million.

Disabled People

148. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on help available to people with disabilities in the form of grants from the European Community.

Mr. Scott: The EC does not make grants to individual disabled people. However, disabled people do benefit from the EC's programmes which I listed in my reply to the hon. Member on 12 November at column 475.

150. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will receive a deputation of Sheffield people with disabilities to discuss the distribution of European Community grants.

Mr. Scott: If the hon. Member will write to me with details I will certainly consider the request.

151. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has received any recent representations about the funding by the European Community for helping people with disabilities.

Mr. Scott: We have received no such representations recently.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much money from the European Commission budget has been spent on projects for disabled people in the United Kingdom in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Scott: We are seeking the information requested direct from the Commission. I will write to the right hon. Member.

Sir Patrick Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the moneys available from the European Community for helping people with disabilities in member states.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Heeley (Mr. Michie) on 12 November at column 475.

Community Charge

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security by what amount income support for a single person will be reduced, pursuant upon the introduction of the council tax, based on today's rate of payments made to compensate for 20 per cent. community charge payments, assuming no increase in the cost of living.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether it is his intention on enactment of the Local Government Finance Bill to take into account in the re-rating of social security benefits the abolition of the obligation to pay a minimum of 20 per cent. of the community charge.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer my hon. Friend and the hon. Gentleman to paragraph 3.8 of the Government's consultation document "A New Tax For Local Government", which is in the Library.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the proportion of his Department's spend to be transferred to local authorities when his policy of community care is implemented.

Miss Widdecombe: We shall transfer to local authorities, via the Department of Health, the expenditure which would otherwise have been incurred by this Department on the care element of income support for people who enter residential care and nursing homes after 31 March 1993.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett), on 12 November, Official Report, column 477, what is the estimated cost for 1991-92 of the adjustments made to income-related benefit levels in April 1989 in respect of the 20 per cent. poll tax contribution, excluding the first 50p of the adjustments for single persons and the first £1 for couples.

Miss Widdecombe: The full cost of the adjustment made to income-related benefit levels is estimated to be £580 million at 1991-92 benefit levels. Reducing the personal allowances for all the income-related benefits by 50p for single people and £1 for couples would save an estimated £210 million.

Source: Modelled using data drawn from the 1986-7-8 Family Expenditure Surveys at 1991-92 prices and benefit levels.

War Pensions

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the progress of discussions to simplify the war pensions scheme; and when changes are expected to be implemented.

Miss Widdecombe: Copies of the scrutiny report which made proposals, inter alia, for the simplification of the war pensions scheme have been given to members of the Central Advisory Committee on War Pensions and various other ex-service organisations for them to comment. The report was discussed at the June meeting of the committee and will be discussed again at its next meeting on 5 December. Comments are still being received and in general they are supportive. Any changes agreed as a result of these discussions will be implemented as soon as possible. One small change, the absorption of dependency allowance into the basic war disablement pension, has already been announced to be implemented from next April following the unanimously favourable response to this improvement.

Benefit Claims

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for each quarter since October 1989, how many income support and unemployment benefit claimants in Coventry have (a) successfully and (b) unsuccessfully claimed income support under the hardship rules, showing those whose claim was in doubt due to (i) not actively seeking work, (ii) refusing suitable employment and (iii) availability for work.

Miss Widdecombe: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon.

Member with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Social Fund

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants applied for grants or loans under the social fund during the 1990-91 financial year in Coventry; how many were turned down and for what reason; what was the average size of the grant, crisis loan or budgetary loan in the year; and if he will provide comparable figures for the first three and six months of 1991-92.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make inquiries to ascertain the number of districts currently paying social fund loans where there is considered to be serious risk to health and safety.

Mr. Scott: All Benefits Agency districts are currently paying social fund loans to applicants where there is considered to be a serious risk to health and safety.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what social fund directions concerning the provision of assistance to people entering, or returning to, the United Kingdom from abroad have been issued in the last 18 months; and what they are, to whom they apply, the period for which they are in force and where they are published.

Mr. Scott: On 7 September 1990 special, temporary, arrangements were introduced to provide help from the social fund for people returning to or entering the United Kingdom, where the entry or return was as a result of war or hostilities in the country which they left, or a neighbouring country. These arrangements were made as a result of the Gulf crisis.

Details of the special arrangements were published in the main social security leaflet "Which Benefit" (FB2) and also in various other leaflets. The availability of this help was also mentioned in the annual report on the social fund 1990-91, Cm 1580, presented to Parliament by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 17 July 1991.

I have today sent the hon. Member a copy of the Secretary of State's directions, which give effect to the special arrangements, and a copy will be placed in the Library. The directions apply to any person who fulfils the conditions laid down in them. The directions will be withdrawn on 27 November, since the purpose for which they were put into place no longer exists. The directions are as follows:

"Settlement or resettlement loan
Direction 3A. A Social Fund payment may be awarded to assist an eligible person to meet, for a temporary period following his entry or return to the United Kingdom from another country, reasonable settlement or resettlement expenses where his entry or return is a result of war or hostilities in that or a neighbouring country.

Travel grant
Direction 4A. A Social Fund payment may be awarded to assist an eligible person with reasonable travel, accommodation or subsistence expenses arising from his or a member of his family's entry or return to the United Kingdom from another country where the entry or return is as a result of war or hostilities in that or a neighbouring country to the extent that those expenses have been or are likely to be necessarily incurred whilst in transit between the port of entry and his likely place of stay in the United Kingdom.
Direction 6A. An award within direction 4A is referred to in these directions as a travel grant and shall not include a determination that it is repayable.

Settlement or resettlement loans and travel grants
(a) Eligibility
Direction 29A. A person is eligible for a settlement or resettlement loan under direction 3A or a travel grant under direction 4A if he is aged 16 or over and the conditions of that direction are satisfied and the applicant has no available or insufficient resources to meet the expenses to which that direction relates at the date when the application is determined.

(b) Effect of capital on settlement or resettlement loans
Direction 29B. Where the total capital resources available to the applicant and his partner exceed £500 (£1,000 if the applicant or partner is aged 60 or over) any settlement or resettlement loan which would but for this direction be awarded, shall be awarded only to the extent that the amount exceeds the amount by which the available capital resources exceed £500 (£1,000 if the applicant or partner is aged 60 or over).

(c) Maximum amounts
Direction 29C. The maximum amounts which may be awarded—
(a) under direction 3A is £2,500 but, if an amount has already been awarded under that direction to the applicant or his partner, the maximum amount must not exceed the difference between any sum already repayable to the Social Fund by the applicant or his partner in respect of any award under that direction and £2,500;
(b) under direction 4A in respect of the applicant and each member of his family is £500."

Local Offices (Coventry)

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the current targets for his Department's offices in Coventry for meeting (a) delivery and (b) accuracy for benefits administered.

Miss Widdecombe: The setting of targets for district offices is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) permanent and (b) temporary staff were employed in each category in his Coventry offices on 1 January 1991, 1 May 1991 and at the latest convenient date; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The staffing of district offices is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action he is taking to improve the services his Department offers for people in Coventry; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Customer service in local offices is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Pension Schemes

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the regulations following his review of the disclosure requirements for occupational and personal pension schemes, including unit-linked personal pension plans, to which he referred in his answer of 20 December 1990, Official Report, column 318, will be laid.

Miss Widdecombe: Draft regulations on disclosure requirements for occupational and personal pensions schemes, including unit-linked personal pension plans, were referred to the Occupational Pensions Board. The board has now reported to the Secretary of State and regulations will be laid shortly.

Mrs. Edith Hirons-Wing

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will ensure that Edith Mary Hirons-Wing of 9 Molesworth road, Cobham, Surrey receives her pension book this week.

Miss Widdecombe: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that a retirement pension order book was sent to Mrs. Hiron-Wing on 1 November 1991.

Mrs. Mary Trotter

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when Mrs. Mary Bryant Trotter, reference FY/123/63A, submitted a claim for night allowance; and if he will ensure that a decision on her claim is sent to her within the next week.

Mr. Scott: Mrs. Trotter applied for higher rate attendance allowance on 13 March 1991. The result of her application together with payment in full was sent to her on 15 November 1991.

Local Offices

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set up an inquiry into the extent of closing of benefit claim offices during official opening hours.

Miss Widdecombe: We have no plans to do so. Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 5 November, Official Report, column 90, what information is available concerning the closure of benefit claim offices during official opening hours; and what procedures or regulations govern closure during official opening hours and what discretion is left to the local managers.

Miss Widdecombe: The closure of benefit claim offices is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Income Support

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 5 November, Official Report, column 83, on transitional protection, if he will break down the number of income support transitional claimants by pensioners, long-term sick and disabled, families with children and others.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is as follows:

	Number
Pensioners	10,000
Long-term sick and disabled people	5,000
Families with children	5,000
Others	10,000
Total	25,000

Note: Figures may not sum to total due to rounding.
Source: Based on modelling using data drawn from the May 1990 Annual Statistical Enquiry of Income Support recipients.

Family Credit

25. Mr. Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security by how much rates of family credit will change in April 1992.

26. Sir William Shelton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security by how much rates of family credit will change in April 1992.

Mr. Jack: In April 1992 all the rates which are used in the calculation of family credit will be increased by 7 per cent. Families receiving family credit will also gain from the increase in child benefit.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in Coventry are currently receiving family credit; and what were the figures six and 12 months ago.

Mr. Jack: Operational issues of family credit are a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Child Benefit

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what will be the total value to a two-child family of the three increases in child benefit which will have taken place in the year to April 1992.

Mr. Beaumont-Dark: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what will be the total value to a two-child family of the three increases in child benefit which will have taken place in the year to April 1992.

Mr. Jack: I refer my hon. Friends to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Erewash (Mr. Rost) earlier today.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what will be the full-year cost of the last two increases in child benefit and next April's proposed increase.

Mr. Jack: The full-year cost in 1992-93 will be over £1 billion. This represents an increase of 22 per cent. compared with the expenditure for 1990-91.

DEFENCE

Armed Forces (Housing)

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement of his Department's plans to ensure there is sufficient housing provision for members of the armed forces prior to their discharge into civilian life.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Serving members of the armed forces are provided with accommodation, if they require it, as part of their conditions of service.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many residential properties his Department currently owns in the Woolwich area; how many of these are empty; how many have been disposed of during the past five years to (a) public housing bodies or (b) private purchasers; and how many are currently being leased to public housing bodies.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As at 30 September 1991, the latest date for which figures are available, the Ministry of Defence owned 628 such properties in the Woolwich area, of which 87 were empty.

Over the past five years 100 properties have been disposed of, 90 to public housing bodies and 10 to private purchasers. Currently there are no properties on lease.

MV Polar Circle

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the MV Polar Circle will (a) embark Royal Navy helicopters, (b) be armed and (c) embark Royal Marines during its forthcoming voyage to the South Atlantic.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: For HMS Polar Circle's forthcoming deployment in the Antarctic, she will embark two Royal Navy Lynx helicopters and a small detachment of Royal Marines. The ship will not be armed.

Nuclear Tests

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now make it his practice to answer questions on plans for future nuclear tests.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Libya (Minefield Records)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make available to Libya relevant second world war minefield records; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Libyan authorities were provided with maps and information about British minefields in Libya in 1981.

Northern Ireland (Duty Tours)

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average interval between short tours of duty in Northern Ireland for (a) infantry battalions and (b) armoured regiments over the last decade.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It has been our aim that intervals between all emergency tours—deployments to Belize, Cyprus and the Falkland Islands as well as Northern Ireland—are 24 months long, but this has not always been achieved. Only one armoured regiment has served in the short tour role in Northern Ireland in the past 10 years; the 3rd Royal Tank Regiment in 1990. The reduction in tension in Europe means that units based in BAOR can now be used on a more frequent basis; this should ensure that the 24-month tour interval target is usually achieved.

Rapid Reaction Corps

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans have been made to deploy British units of the rapid reaction corps to Northern Ireland.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Units assigned to the ACE rapid reaction corps, ARRC, will be available to undertake short, unaccompanied operational tours in Northern Ireland and elsewhere—as is at present the case with units assigned to NATO. So far as United Kingdom-based units are concerned, this represents no change from the present situation. But, as my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State made clear during the defence debate, in future, while still maintaining appropriate levels of readiness for NATO tasks, it will be possible for units based in Germany to take a greater share of these tours than when we faced the threat of surprise Soviet attack.

Anti-Ballistic Missiles

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has received from his Soviet and American counterparts regarding their bilateral discussions on anti-ballistic missile systems.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United States has kept us and other allies informed of progress on this issue. The details of discussions between Governments are confidential.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what declassified assessments have been made available by his Department on the changes that have occurred in the development plans of Soviet anti-ballistic missile defences in the last decade.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave the hon. Member for Western Isles (Mr. Macdonald) on 13 November, Official Report, columns 613-14.

Friendly Fire

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what actions have been taken to prevent friendly fire incidents as a result of investigations into the incident on 26 February 1991.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As I outlined in my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Amber Valley (Mr. Oppenheim) on 24 July, Official Report, column 706, the board of inquiry into the incident in the Gulf on 26 February recommended that a study should be initiated to identify a suitable air recognition system for future use. The board also recommended that target co-ordinates should be specifically included in mission briefs and acknowledged by pilots. Studies in pursuit of these recommendations are under way.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further action has been taken to investigate the death of nine British soldiers on 26 February 1991 in the Gulf as a result of friendly fire, since the publication of the board of inquiry's report.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Hexham (Mr. Amos) on 15 November, Official Report, column 704.

Northern Ireland (Duty Tours)

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what length of time is required for (a) infantry battalions and (b) armoured regiments to train for short tours of duty in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The same length of time is allocated for pre-tour training for both infantry battalions and non-infantry units, but during that time the latter receive additional tuition on those infantry skills with which they are not familiar.

Regiments

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, further to his answer of 11 November, Official Report, column 338, to the hon. Member for Bexleyheath (Mr. Townsend), if he will set out the timetable for the merging of the Ulster Defence Regiment with the Royal Irish Rangers.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The planning date for the merger of the UDR and the Royal Irish Rangers continues to be July 1992. The formation of a single general service battalion from the 1st and 2nd Battalion of the Royal Irish Rangers will follow as soon as practicalities permit, but should be complete in 1993.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many deaths have occurred in the British military advisory team to Zimbabwe over the last five years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There has been one. A sergeant was killed in September 1990 as a result of a road traffic accident.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Serious Fraud Office

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Attorney-General how many staff, both police or civilian, are employed by the Serious Fraud Office; and how many there have been in each year since its creation.

The Attorney-General: The Serious Fraud Office currently employs 116 permanent civil servants. The figures for previous years are as follows:

Sixty-two in 1988-89, 83 in 1989-90 and 101 in 1990-91. The permanent civil servants employed are supplemented by temporary staff whose number varies with operational requirements. The number of temporary staff so employed is currently 57. The Serious Fraud Office does not employ police officers. Police officers work in conjunction with the Serious Fraud Office and are attached to cases under the control of the Serious Fraud Office by agreement with the appropriate police force.

TRANSPORT

Locomotives

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when he gave financial approval for expenditure on the electric locomotives used on the Stoke on Trent–Euston service; and how many (a) class 90 electrics and (b) class 86-2 electrics (i) were approved and (ii) are currently in use;

(2) how many 1987-88 InterCity new 110 mph class 90 electric locomotives were (a) approved and (b) delivered to InterCity for use on the west coast main line out of Euston, and of those how many are used on (a) the InterCity sector (b) Railfreight and (c) parcels;

(3) how many class 90 locomotives built between 1988 and 1990 were allocated from InterCity to Railfreight; and what impact this reallocation has had on InterCity's capacity to meet its quality of service objectives.

Mr. Freeman: Approval for 50 class 90 locomotives was given in 1984. Fifteen were allocated by BR for use on InterCity services on the west coast main line, of which the Stoke-Euston route is a part. All are currently in use on that line.

The remaining 35 class 90 locomotives were allocated to what are now the freight and parcels sectors.

Approval for class 86/2 locomotives was given in the mid-1960s. Information on their original deployment is no longer available. Twenty-two class 86/2 locomotives remain in service on the west coast main line.

Freight Operations

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he plans to commission a study on the implications of continental-gauge freight operations into the United Kingdom and the effect upon existing freight operations to and from the existing regions;

(2) when he last discussed with the chairman of British Rail the implications of building a continental-gauge freight route to London.

Mr. Freeman: BR is confident that it has sufficient capacity on its existing lines to cope with forecast increases in international freight and its limited programme of structure gauge enhancements on specific route sections will enable some 95 per cent. of swap bodies and containers used on the continent to travel to the BR network of regional channel tunnel freight terminals. Operating continental gauge freight wagons in the United Kingdom would require either the construction of new lines or very costly modifications to existing lines and rolling stock. It is envisaged that the new channel tunnel rail link to London would be built to continental gauge. My Department is considering with British Rail the revenue and cost implications of designing this link to accommodate freight as well as passenger trains, compared with alternative ways of providing additional capacity for freight movements.

King's Cross

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what provision is included in his Department's expenditure plans for 1991 to 1994 published in February 1991 and adjusted in the Chancellor of the Exchequer's autumn statement for the construction of the proposed new terminal at King's Cross.

Mr. Freeman: It is for British Rail to decide its investment programme and priorities within the resources available.

High-speed Rail Link

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what advice he has received from British Rail about the amounts of revenue income from high-speed rail link services along the Ove Arup route that will be attributable, respectively, to the financing of the proposed new terminal at King's Cross and that of the planned station at Stratford East.

Mr. Freeman: For each of the routes studied, the forecast revenues associated with proposed stations were treated as an integral part of the route and not individually identified.

Goods Vehicle Instructors

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to introduce minimum standards for large goods vehicle instructors; and how this will be implemented and monitored.

Mr. Chope: I have no plans at present to do so.

Road Safety Schemes

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the average typical first-year costs and rates of return for local road safety schemes.

Mr. Chope: A report published by the Transport and Road Research laboratory in 1989 showed that the average local safety scheme cost about £7,000 and saved just over one casualty accident per year, valued at £16,690, where both figures are in 1987 prices.

Splash and Spray Suppression

Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the British standard for splash and spray suppression to be upgraded to the higher European directive standard.

Mr. Chope: I hope that a revised standard will be available by the middle of next year.

Lorry Overloads

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the number of lorries stopped and checked for possible overloading expressed as a percentage of total lorry journeys.

Mr. Chope: It is estimated that in 1990 about 0·06 per cent. of all HGV journeys were checked for excessive weight.

This statistic relates to vehicles weighed by Department of Transport and local authority trading standards enforcement staff. The police also weigh vehicles, but no information on the numbers they weigh is available.

Highways (Damage)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the damage and wear inflicted on highways by private cars.

Mr. Chope: The damage and wear inflicted on highways by private cars is very small in relation to that caused by lorries.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the annual cost over the past five years of the damage caused to (a) highways and (b) under-road services by lorries.

Mr. Chope: The road track costs of vehicles in the United Kingdom, and the amounts allocated to large goods vehicles are given in the Department's annual publication "The allocation of road track costs", copies of which are available from the House Library. Technical investigation has failed to establish any direct causal link between heavy lorry traffic and damage to underground services.

Speed Limits

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will give details of any time limits which have been set within his Department within which statutory procedures for the introduction or alteration of speed limits on principal roads must be completed; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: No statutory time limits are set for my Department to deal with speed limits on principal roads. They are dealt with as quickly as possible. I intend to set target times within which this work should be done in future.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current number of formal applications submitted by local highway authorities to his east midlands regional office seeking to introduce new or revised speed limits on principal roads; how long ago the earliest submission which remains undetermined was made to his Department; and how many full-time staff are deployed on this work.

Mr. Chope: There are currently seven applications still undetermined. The earliest was submitted on 8 February 1991. No staff work exclusively on speed limit orders. Resources are deployed as and when necessary and target times within which this work should be completed are to be set to avoid such long delays.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make a statement, with specific dates, on the involvement of his Department in approving the 40 mph speed limit on the A6003 road through Preston, Rutland; and what action he intends to take to prevent any repetition in Leicestershire or Rutland of the incident by which the signs were erected but remained covered and inoperative between January and October 1991.

Mr. Chope: The formal application from Leicestershire county council was received on 21 March 1991 and after due consideration consent was notified to the county council on 20 September 1991. The erection of the necessary signs is a matter entirely for Leicestershire county council as the local highway authority. I am unable to comment on why the council chose to erect the signs in advance of the order being sent to my Department. The signs were uncovered shortly after consent was granted.

Tube Trains (Capacity)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what consultations he has had with London Underground over the standing capacity limits in tube carriages;

(2) what representations he has received over the capacity limits of London Underground trains.

Mr. McLoughlin: We have received only one representation in the last three years about the capacity limits of London underground trains, although I understand the Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate has received a few letters.

The inspectorate has discussed with London Underground on the Secretary of State's behalf plans for refurbishing existing trains and proposals for new stock. It has been an objective of these discussions to maximise passenger-carrying capacity while maintaining safety.

Filton Airfield

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations he has had with councillors from Avon county council over proposals to develop Filton airfield into a commercial airport.

Mr. McLoughlin: Filton is one of the 10 locations being considered by a working group, chaired by my Department, in terms of their ability to help meet air traffic demand after the turn of the century. The local authority input to the group's work, including that from Avon county council in respect of Filton and Bristol Lulsgate, is being coordinated by Serplan.

Yachts

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out the estimated cost to an average yacht owner of installing the necessary safety equipment and crew required by the proposed Merchant Shipping (Pleasure Yacht) Regulations; and when he plans to bring these regulations into force.

Mr. McLoughlin: There will be no cost to the average yacht owner. The proposed regulations will apply only to commercially operated yachts. It is intended that the regulations come into force on 1 April 1992.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which yachts will be subject to the proposed Merchant Shipping (Pleasure Yacht) Regulations; and how many such yachts he estimates there are in the United Kingdom.

Mr. McLoughlin: Only commercially operated yachts will be subject to the proposed regulations. Yachts used solely for the sport or pleasure of the owner are excluded from the regulations. Information on the numbers and use of yachts is not held by the Department.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on similar regulations to the proposed Merchant Shipping (Pleasure Yacht) Regulations in force in each of the other EC countries; and if he will report when such legislation was enacted.

Mr. McLoughlin: Scandinavian standards, which detail extensive requirements, for commercially operated pleasure craft are being implemented in 1992 by Denmark. The Netherlands are incorporating similar regulations next year and Belgium in 1993. No information on the requirements of other EC countries is available at present.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many surveyors from his Department will be employed, and at what cost to the Exchequer, to enforce the proposed Merchant Shipping (Pleasure Yacht) Regulations; and what he will charge yacht owners to have their vessels surveyed.

Mr. McLoughlin: Application of the regulations will require no additional surveyors or cost to the Exchequer. Any survey required on commercially operated yachts will be charged for surveys in accordance with the Merchant Shipping (Fees) Regulations 1991, SI 1991/784.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) angling boats, (b) charter yachts, (c) cruising yachts, (d) diving boats and (e) sailing schools, respectively, will be affected by the proposed Merchant Shipping (Pleasure Yacht) Regulations.

Mr. McLoughlin: Information on the various types of craft, used commercially, is not held by the Department. Sailing schools can operate under the terms of the code of practice for sail training ships. Compliance with the code, which was developed with the industry, gives exemption from the requirements of legislation. If agreement can be reached with those concerned it is proposed to introduce further codes of practice to cover other categories of pleasure craft used commercially.

Train Accidents

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the total cost of the single track train accidents at Bellgrove, Hyde and Newton, including loss, damage, repair, replacement of rolling stock, other assets and equipment, related staff, resource and disruption costs, legal fees and all forms of compensatory payments made to passengers, British Rail's staff and relatives.

Mr. Freeman: Details of these costs are matters for British Rail.

Trains (Servicing)

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on progress in securing the introduction and servicing of the class 159 DMU trains due to operate on the Waterloo-Andover-Exeter service from October 1992, to which he referred to his answer of 19 November 1990, Official Report, columns 35-6.

Mr. Freeman: I understand that BR expect the new class 159 DMU trains to be delivered during the summer of 1992 and to enter service from September 1992. I can confirm that British Rail are now able to go ahead with the construction of the new depot at Salisbury to service and maintain these trains, within the finance available to them within the autumn statement. The Government's decision to provide a substantial increase in funding for investment in the railways has enabled BR to allocate money to this project.

ENERGY

Wave Energy

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when the report of the wave energy review being carried out by his Department will be published.

Mr. Moynihan: The interim report on the wave energy review is published today and I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Libraries of the House. The report explains the methodology being used in the review. All interested parties are being consulted in this work as it progresses. The final report containing the results of the review will be published early next year.

Joint European Torus Laboratory.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the amount of energy recently produced by the joint European torus laboratory at Culham.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: In the experiment on 9 November, the JET device is reported to have produced an energy release equivalent to 1 MW for two seconds. Many times this amount of energy was required to operate the device.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the cost to date of the JET programme at Culham.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The cost of the JET programme to the European Community and associated partners Sweden and Switzerland has been about £750 million to the end of 1990.

SOCIAL SECURITY

State Benefits

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many families were dependent on state benefits in 1964; and how many families are dependent on state benefits in the current year.

Miss Widdecombe: Provisional figures show that 353,000 families were receiving family credit in August 1991. In 1990, the latest yar for which figures are available, there were 1.15 million families receiving income support. Figures are not available for 1961.

Sources: Family credit statistical sample and annual statistical inquiry 1990.

PRIME MINISTER

Executive Agencies (Disabled Workers)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 11 November, Official Report, column 356, if he will list the six Departments and agencies which exceeded a 3 per cent. level of staff registered as disabled in 1990.

The Prime Minister: In 1990 more than 3 per cent. of employees were registered disabled in each of the following departments and agencies: Crown Estate Office; Department of Employment Group; Land Registry; National Investment and Loans Office; Paymaster General's Office; Registers of Scotland.

Departmental Annual Report

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if he will arrange for the common core memorandum on departmental annual reports issued by Her Majesty's Treasury in July to be further revised to include in section D research and development undertaken by or sponsored by the Department;

(2) if he will make it the practice for all departmental annual reports to include as part of their common core information a statement of research and development activity sponsored by or undertaken by the Department.

The Prime Minister: All departments with significant levels of spending on research and development already include relevant material in their departmental annual reports. Past and planned spending by departments on research and development was set out in table 4.13 of the "Statistical Supplement to the 1990 Autumn Statement", Cm. 1520. Up-to-date information will be published early next year in the "Statistical Supplement to the 1991 Autumn Statement". Extensive additional information is published by the Cabinet Office in the annual review of Government-funded research and development. The requirements for the 1993 departmental reports will be reviewed in the light of comments on the 1992 reports from Select Committees and others.

Health Promotion

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to co-ordinate the activities of the Departments of Health and of Education and Science on including health promotion and self health care into the national curriculum; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: It is already the policy of both Departments to work together closely in order to secure that young people are equipped with the knowledge, skills and attitudes to promote their immediate and long-term good health. To that end, aspects of health education are already included, wherever relevant, in several national curriculum foundation subjects.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for 19 November.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

ENVIRONMENT

Right-to-buy Legislation

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to enable local authorities to introduce identical service charges for people's properties purchased under the right-to-buy legislation, where the properties are similar and receive the same services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: There are no plans to amend the legislation, which provides that a tenant exercising the right to buy a flat may be required to bear a reasonable part of the costs of repair and other services provided by the landlord.

The protections of the Landlord and Tenant Act 1985 apply to purchases of local authority flats under right to buy as well as to purchases in the private sector. Leaseholders have the right to information on how their service charges have been made up and may challenge unreasonable demands in court.

UN Environment Conference

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what matters were discussed and decisions taken at the third preparatory committee meeting for the United Nations conference on environment and development in August; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The preparatory committee for the United Nations conference on environment and development—UNCED—held its third session at the United Nations Office in Geneva from 12 August to 4 September 1991.

The preparatory committee considered reports on the activities of the conference secretariat and of other intergovernmental bodies. In its plenary sessions, the preparatory committee considered the structure and organisation of the UNCED action programme and cross-sectoral issues such as finance and technology. The preparatory comittee also considered the arrangements for UNCED, which will take place in Rio de Janeiro from 1 to 12 June 1992.

Working group I of the preparatory committee considered proposals relating to the atmosphere, land resources, biological diversity and biotechnology. It also began work on a statement of principles on the management, conservation and development of all types of forests. Working group II considered proposals relating to the oceans and seas, freshwater resources, wastes and chemicals, while Working group III discussed legal and institutional matters, including proposals for a declaration of principles on general rights and obligations in the field of environment and development.

Many of the decisions the preparatory committee adopted requested the UNCED secretariat to prepare revised proposals for the preparatory committee at its fourth session, which will take place in New York from 9 March to 3 April 1992.

The United Kingdom presented reports by consultants on the role of technology transfer in the conservation of biological diversity and in tackling global climate change, and a discussion paper on the linkage between population, environmental degradation and development. These documents will be laid before the House.

River Quality

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to receive the National Rivers Authority report on river quality.

Mr. Baldry: I understand that the National Rivers Authority expects to publish its report of the 1990 river quality survey in December.

Local Government Finance Bill

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what account was taken of the ideas submitted to him by the Liberal Democrats in the preparation of the Local Government Finance Bill.

Mr. Key: We welcomed the Liberal Democrats' decision to take up our offer of discussions on the future of local government finance. We do not, however, believe that a local income tax is the way forward.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will quantify the net value of transfers —gross transfers minus reverse transfers from housing revenue accounts to general funds—from local authority general funds to their housing revenue accounts for each calendar year between 1980 to 1990 both on an England and Great Britain basis.

Mr. Yeo: The information requested for English local housing authorities for the financial years 1980-81 to 1989-90 is shown in the table.

Year	Net Value of Transfers to Housing Revenue Accounts £
1980-81	308,697,811
1981-82	327,383,247
1982-83	251,723,321
1983-84	291,333,242
1984-85	287,590,281
1985-86	257,615,638
1986-87	276,691,862
1987-88	279,016,885
1988-89	308,841,920
1989-90	82,580,313

The figures are taken from housing subsidy claim forms and are not audited.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authorities in (a) Great Britain and (b) England made transfers from their housing revenue accounts to their general funds during 1990-91 and 1991-92; what is the estimated total value of such transfers; and if he will provide similar information on a projected basis for 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Mr. Yeo: Schedule IV to the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 requires a local housing authority to make a transfer from its housing revenue account to some other revenue account if its housing revenue account subsidy calculation results in a negative amount. The transfer must be equal to that amount. An authority not entitled to housing revenue account subsidy may also transfer any end-of-year surplus on its housing revenue account to some other revenue account. In 1990-91, a total of 19 English authorities transferred an estimated total of £23,227,569 from their housing revenue accounts. In 1991-92, a total of 14 authorities are expected to transfer an estimated total of £21,741,658 from their housing revenue accounts.

The level of transfers from housing revenue accounts in 1992-93 and 1993-94 will depend largely on annual decisions about rent guidelines and management and maintenance allowances for those years and the amount of rent rebate expenditure incurred.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many local authorities in England failed to attract a positive housing borrowing capital account during 1990-91 and 1991-92 and the total aggregate value of the annual housing capital guideline allocations to such authorities;

(2) how many local authorities would continue not to attract a positive borrowing capital account if total gross capital housing allocations to local authorities in England were raised to (a) £5 billion, (b) £7 billion and (c) £10 billion, assuming that the pattern of distribution of that allocation prevailing during 1991-92 between authorities remained unchanged and both their RTIAs and the capital grants provided to them for housing purposes did not change; and what would be the aggregate value of their annual housing capital guideline allocations.

Mr. Yeo: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will update the information given in his answer of 28 March 1991, Official Report, column 533, on how much the estimated cost of housing revenue account rent rebate subsidy for years 1990-91 and 1991-92, and its planned provision for years 1991-93 and 1993-94 would be were it not for the assumed transfer of rental income from the tenants of some councils.

Mr. Yeo: The total contributions to rent rebates which local authorities made from their housing revenue accounts in 1990-91 is estimated to be £195 million. It is estimated that authorities will make contributions of £302 million in 1991-92 and £530 million in 1992-93. The estimate for 1992-93 is subject to the outcome of the current consultation exercise on proposals for rent guidelines and management and maintenance allowances for that year. No decision has been made for 1993-94.

Local Authority Notices

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a complete list of all those local authorities that have been issued with (a) section 13 notices, (b) section 14 notices, both under the Local Government Act 1988, (c) section 19a notices and (d) section 19b notices, both under the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980, giving dates of issue in each case, and indicating for each case the reason for issuing the notice.

Air Pollution

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the EC directive of 28 June 1984 on the combating of air pollution from industrial plants (84/360/EEC) has been transposed into United Kingdom law.

Mr. Baldry: Implementation of the air framework directive in Great Britain has been by means of the Alkali &c. Works Regulation Act 1906, the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974, and regulations made thereunder. This will be reinforced by the new controls introduced under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Implementation in Northern Ireland is also by means of the Alkali Act. The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland intends to make regulations to bring into effect the residual requirements of the directive relating to public access next spring.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review government classification of ozone levels so that they are in line with World Health Organisation guidelines and report exceeding of eight hour guidance values.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 11 November 1991, Official Report, column 394.

Lincolnshire

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether Lincolnshire will be in the first batch of local authorities that will be recommended for consideration by the local government commission when it is established.

Mr. Portillo: We are still considering what would be the most balanced and manageable programme of reviews for the Local Government Commission.

Parish and Town Councils

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the university of Aston business school to report on the national survey of parish and town councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: We have received the results of this survey. The university of Aston business school is preparing its final report which we hope to publish in the new year.

Volatile Organic Compounds

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environmnent what progress has been made in the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe on a protocol controlling emissions of volatile organic compounds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Negotiation of a protocol to the 1979 convention on long-range transboundary air pollution, which would control the emissions of volatile organic compounds—VOCs—or their transboundary fluxes, has now been successfully completed and the United Kingdom today became one of the first signatories to the protocol.

VOCs are major precursors of ground level azone, a pollutant which can affect human health and damage crops and trees. Ground level ozone is an international problem, and some of the worst ozone episodes in the United Kingdom have significant contributions of continental origin. It therefore needs to be tackled by international agreement.

The new protocol is the first international commitment to VOC abatement across the board. It obliges most parties to secure a 30 per cent. overall reduction in their VOC emissions between 1988 and 1999. Other basic obligations include requirements, two years after the protocol enters into force, to apply national or international emission standards to new sources of VOCs, taking account of guidance on control technologies given in the protocol; to apply national or international measures to products that contain solvents and promote the use of products with low or nil content; and to foster public participation in VOC emission control.

The United Kingdom is already taking a number of steps which will help it to comply with the protocol, which represents an important step forward in international action to improve the quality of our environment. I am arranging for a copy of the protocol to be placed in the Library of the House.

Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will be meeting members of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee.

Mr. Trippier: I am meeting members of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee today following the inaugural meeting of the reconstituted committee. I have asked members of the new committee to look at the three particular subjects. First, I have asked them to review the radioactive waste disposal issues which are likely to arise over the next 20 years. Secondly, I have asked them to review the overall national radiation monitoring programme following the installation of phase 2 of the radioactive incident monitoring network and to make recommendations. Thirdly, I have asked them to consider and advise on the extent and nature of the Department's radioactive substances research programme.

The members of the reconstituted committee are:

Members of the reconstituted RWMAC

Chairman: Professor John Knill—Chairman of NERC

*Dr. Jack I. Abernethy—Member of the Institute of Professional Managers and Specialists (BNFL)

*Professor Kathleen J. Anderson OBE—Depute Principal, Napier Polytechnic of Edinburgh, Biologist

Dr. Helen ApSimon—Imperial College, Senior Lecturer—Atmospheric Modelling

Professor Andrew Blowers—Professor of Social Services, Open University

*Professor Keith Boddy OBE—Head of Regional Medical Physics Department, Newcastle General Hospital, Northern Region Health Authority

Professor Charles Brown—Heriot-Watt University (Marine Biologist)

Mr. Wilf Cassidy—Scientific Advisor and County Analyst Somerset CC

Dr. Roger H. Clarke—Director, National Radiological Protection Board

Dr. Martin Courtis—Director of Environmental Services Environmental Health, Carlisle DC

*Professor H. John Evans—Director of the MRC Human Genetics Unit at Western General Hospital, Edinburgh

*Dr. Ron H. Flowers—Chief Technologist (Nuclear), AEA Technology

Mr. Michael Folger—Managing Director, UK Nirex Ltd

Dr. Eleanor James—Lecturer Mathematics, University of Aberystwyth, Member of Executive Committee of the Council for the Protection of Rural Wales

*Professor Gilbert Kelling—Professor of Geology and Pro-Vice-Chancellor, University of Keele

Miss Angela M. Killick—Chairman, Hampstead District Health Authority

Dr. John McKeown—Director of Safety, Scottish Nuclear

Mr. George J. Medley OBE—Director World Wide Fund for Nature UK

Dr. Les A. Mitchell—Director of Technology, Nuclear Electric PLC

*Dr. William L. Wilkinson CBE—Deputy Chief Executive, BNFL

*Professor David R. Williams—Professor of Applied Chemistry, University of Wales

Those names marked with an asterisk are members who have previously served on RWMAC.

Council House Sales

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by district authorities in the south-west region all capital receipts from the sale of council houses received each year since the introduction of right to buy.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 18 November 1991]: The total discounted value of all sales of houses and flats for each year from 1980-81, as reported by local authorities, are in the table. Actual cash receipts in any year will depend on the extent to which the sales were financed by loans from the authorities.

Cats

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice his Department offers to land owners and others concerning the control of straying domestic or feral cats.

Mrs. Rumbold: I have been asked to reply.
None. I am not aware of any demand for such advice.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Baltic Gold

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on the negotiations with the Baltic states on the Baltic gold.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Talks were held with an Estonian delegation on 7 November; a Latvian delegation on 8 November; and a Lithuanian delegation on 13 November. The discussions were friendly and useful progress was made. In each case it was agreed that a further round of discussions be held soon.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his meetings with representatives of Lithuania concerning repayment of the Baltic gold.

Mr. Garel-Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs discussed the question of the gold when he met President Landsbergis in Blackpool on 8 October. Subsequently talks on the gold and other financial issues were held in London on 13 November with a Lithuanian delegation led by the Lithuanian deputy Foreign Minister. It was agreed that a further meeting be held soon.

Libya

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if there are any plans to reopen diplomatic relations with Libya; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: There are no such plans.

Yugoslavia

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the number of refugees fleeing Yugoslavia and going into Italy, Hungary and Austria.

Mr. Garel-Jones: A total of 35,000 Yugoslav refugees have registered in Hungary. Between 5,000 and 8,000 refugees are believed to have arrived in Austria. Since there is no visa requirement for Yugoslavs travelling to Italy, no figures are available for refugees there.

Libya

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the numbers of British citizens employed in Libya during the past five years to the latest available date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Figures are available only for 1988, 1989 and 1990. We estimate that 5,000 British nationals, including dependants, were living and working in Libya in 1988 and 1989 and around 5,500 in 1990.

EC Competence

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will veto the extension of EC competence into any areas not directly related to the establishment of the single market.

Mr. Garel-Jones: A number of proposals have been put forward in the intergovernmental conference on political union for extensions of EC competence. We consider them on their merits, but the Government have made clear that a significant increase in competence would be undesirable.

Media Funding

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, further to his answer of 13 November, Official Report, column 525, if he will place copies of the papers concerning the Morning Star and Pergamon Press in the Library.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We will do so when they have been translated.

Nuclear Test Ban Treaty

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy towards the negotiation of a comprehensive test ban treaty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We are committed to a comprehensive test ban within the context of general and complete disarmament. Because our security will depend for the foreseeable future on deterrence based in part on the possession of nuclear weapons, we have a continuing need to carry out nuclear tests to maintain the effectiveness and safety of our deterrent.

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how the United Kingdom delegate voted on the draft resolution on a comprehensive test ban treaty (Document A/C. 1/46/L.4) at the United Nations on 11 November.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The United Kingdom abstained on the resolution in the first committee.

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's policy towards a moratorium on United Kingdom nuclear tests.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We have a continuing need to carry out tests to maintain the effectiveness and safety of our nuclear deterrent.

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's policy towards a negotiated gradual reduction in the number of nuclear tests worldwide.

Mr. Garel-Jones: This is primarily a matter for the United States and Soviet Union. The United Kingdom has only a limited test programme.

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's assessment of the potential impact of a comprehensive test ban treaty on the futher proliferation of nuclear weapons.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The 1968 non-proliferation treaty—NPT—is the cornerstone of the international nuclear non-proliferation regime. A comprehensive test ban would not change the policies of those states not parties to the NPT, or prevent certain countries like Iraq who are parties to the treaty from seeking a nuclear capability.

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's assessment of the potential impact of a comprehensive test ban treaty on the United Kingdom's nuclear weapons arsenal.

Mr. Garel-Jones: For as long as the United Kingdom's security and that or our allies relies on our possession of a minimal nuclear deterrent, the United Kingdom will have a requirement to carry out tests from time to time.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Drugs (Foreign Prisoners)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of (a) men and (b) women who are foreign nationals and are at present serving prison sentences in prisons in England and Wales for conviction for seeking to import illegal drugs into the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information readily available does not distinguish the different types of drugs offence.

On 30 June 1990, the latest date for which information is available, about 1,090 males and 160 females recorded as foreign nationals were held in prison service establishments in England and Wales under sentences for drugs offences.

Prisoners in Police Accommodation

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the total cost (a) to his Department and (b) to police authorities, of holding prisoners in police accommodation during the action by prison officers to limit numbers at Cardiff prison (i) as a total to date and (ii) in each month to date.

Mrs. Rumbold: Separate information on the cost of holding Cardiff prisoners in police cells is not collected centrally. It could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Car Theft (Guidance to Magistrates)

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance he has issued to magistrates on passing those convicted of taking away a motor vehicle without consent to a higher court for sentencing.

Mrs. Rumbold: The power to commit for sentence does not apply to the current offence of taking a vehicle without consent, which is triable summarily only. We shall shortly bring forward proposals for a new offence of aggravated taking carrying more severe punishment in the Crown court. Magistrates would be able to commit an offender convicted of the new offence to the Crown court for sentence.

Bail Offenders

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the number of crimes committed by individuals granted bail during the last 12 months;

(2) how many police officers have been injured or assaulted by persons who were on bail at the time of the offence during the last 12 months.

Mr. John Patten: Information on the number of recorded offences committed by persons who were on bail is not available separately.

Correspondence

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Parole Board was informed about the case of a prisoner about whom the hon. Member for Birmingham, Hodge Hill wrote to the Minister of State in the Home Office on 17 September; and when he expects to receive a reply from the Parole Board.

Mrs. Rumbold: The case was referred to the Parole Board on 28 October 1991 and is scheduled for consideration on 27 November. I will write to the hon. Member once the outcome is known.

Immigration

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average cost of putting a potential immigrant through a test to determine whether he or she has sufficient knowledge of the English, Welsh, or Gaelic languages.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There is no language test for potential immigrants. In a small number of cases, it may be necessary to make special inquiries to establish that applicants for naturalisation meet the statutory requirement to have a sufficient knowledge of the English, Welsh or Scottish Gaelic language. The cost of these inquiries cannot be separately identified from the cost of other inquiries that are made in particular applications.

Prisoners (Police Cells)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning convicted and remand prisoners being kept in police stations because prisons are full; whether he has any immediate plans to reduce the number of prisoners being held in police cells in Leicester; and whether he has any timetable for ending the holding of convicted and remand prisoners in police stations nationwide.

Mrs. Rumbold: I have received a large number of representations from hon. Members and others about this problem. As my hon. Friend has made clear, he has taken a number of steps to reduce the numbers held in police cells, by converting young offender establishments to adult use, deferring the closure of wings, and retaining in use establishments which would otherwise have closed.

Because the arrangements for holding prisoners in police cells are co-ordinated nationally through the police mutual aid co-ordination centre, it is not possible to predict the effect of these measures on police cells in particular areas. While not being able to predict accurately when the problem will be solved, I can say that I believe the measures taken, together with new prisons opening, will relieve the pressure in the foreseeable future.

Sunday Trading

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on which Acts of Parliament are in force governing which shops and markets may open and what goods may legally be sold on Sundays in England; and who has responsibility for enforcing such Acts.

Mrs. Rumbold: Part IV of the Shops Act 1950 contains the general prohibition on Sunday trading in England and Wales. It also contains provisions for partial exemption from, and modification to, that general prohibition, and for there to be, in schedules 5, 6 and 7 to the Act, lists of exempted transactions. Special exemptions from the general prohibition are also made in the Tyne and Wear Act 1976 for the Quayside market in Newcastle upon Tyne; in the West Midlands County Council Act 1980 for the national exhibition centre in Birmingham; and in the Greater London Council (General Powers) Acts 1981 and 1983 for exhibitions, trade fairs and conferences held at certain specified premises in Greater London.

Local authorities are responsible for enforcing this area of the law.

Street Lighting

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what evidence he has on the link between the level of crime and poor street lighting.

Mr. John Patten: Recent independent research for the Home Office ("The Influence of Street Lighting on Crime and Fear of Crime", Crime Prevention Unit paper 28 and "The Effect of Better Street Lighting on Crime and Fear: a Reveiw", Crime Prevention Unit paper 29, both papers published in August 1991 and copies available in the Library) has shown that good street lighting is helpful in reducing the fear of crime but has little effect on crime itself, except perhaps in small localised spots where lighting is particularly inadequate. Other research has shown that it can also, in some cases, reduce the incidence of anti-social behaviour.

Personation

Mr. Brando-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the guidelines to presiding officers at polling stations in order to minimise the risk of personation.

Mrs. Rumbold: No. Revised and updated Home Office guidance for acting returning officers was issued in September of this year. If my hon. Friend is aware of a particular problem with regard to personation, perhaps he would consider writing to me about it.

Retailers (Crime)

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the percentage of annual retail turnover lost through unauthorised entry to premises by retailers in the United Kingdom; and what information he has on the percentage lost by similar crime from retailers in other EC countries.

Mr. John Patten: It is estimated that retailers lose some 2 per cent. of turnover annually through the disappearance of stock. This loss includes thefts of all descriptions; the proportion attributable to unauthorised entry is not known and cannot be ascertained.

Information about losses elsewhere in the EC is not available.

Publicity

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give separate figures for spending by the Metropolitan police on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material in 1979-80 and in each following year; and what are his latest estimates for 1991-92 and budgets for 1992-93.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 5 November 1991]: I understand from the Commissioner that expenditure by the Metropolitan police on all forms of recruitment and other advertising, and other promotional material in each financial year since 1979-80 is as follows (it is not possible to give separate spending figures for the years before 1987-88):

1980-81	967,000

Decisions on expenditure for 1992-93 have yet to be settled.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total expenditure by the Metropolitan police on press and public relations in 1979-80 and in each following year; and what is his estimate for 1991-92 and budget for 1992-93.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 5 November 1991]: I understand from the Commissioner that expenditure on staff and accommodation costs of the directorate of public affairs, and on recruitment and other advertising and other promotional literature, in each financial year since 1985-86 and estimate expenditure for 1991-92 are as follows:

1986-87	4,444,103
1987-88	4,555,000

Information for the years prior to 1985-86 is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Decisions on expenditure for 1992-93 have yet to be settled.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Local Education Expenditure

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the percentage element of central Government support in local education authority expenditure for each financial year since 1979-80.

Mr. Eggar: The bulk of central Government support for local authority expenditure is channelled through revenue support grant, which is not hypothecated to individual services. Latest available published data suggest that specific and special grants to local authorities falling within the Department of Education and Science programme have accounted for the following percentages of local authority recurrent education spending:

	Per cent.
1980-81	7
1981-82	7
1982-83	6
1983-84	6
1984-85	6
1985-86	6
1986-87	5
1987-88	6
1988-89	6
1989-90	[1]7

[1] estimated

Expenditure by local authorities on education is also supported by grants within the programmes of a range of other Government departments, including grants made under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966, the urban programme, the technical and vocational education initiative, and the work-related further education programme.

Health Care

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science is he will make it his policy to include individual self health care in the national curriculum; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: My Department's policy is to secure that young people are equipped with the knowledge, skills and attitudes to promote their immediate and long-term good health. To that end, aspects of health education are already included, wherever relevant, in a number of national curriculum foundation subjects.

Computer Board for Universities and Research Councils

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he will publish the final report of the Computer Board for Universities and Research Councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The final report of the Computer Board for Universities and Research Councils is published today, covering the period 1 April 1988 to 31 March 1991. The board's responsibilities were transferred to the Universities Funding Council and the Advisory Board for the Research Councils on 1 April this year.

The computer board's remit was to:

—assist United Kingdom universities in keeping at the forefront of information systems (IS) developments in support of their academic research;

—promote innovation, sound practice and value for money in the provision and use of information systems; and

—foster universities' interaction on IS matters with the wider academic and research community.

I pay tribute to the computer board's achievements over the past 25 years. Thanks to the board, the use of computers in the universities is now spread extensively over all subject areas. Before it began its work it was the preserve of only a few specialists.

The board's vital contribution to this process was in helping and encouraging the universities to develop information systems strategies while also taking account of the rapid pace of technological change, initiating developments and promoting sound procurement procedures.

Agricultural and Food Research Council

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to lay before parliament the annual report of the Agricultural and Food Research Council for 1990-91; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The annual report of the Agricultural and Food Research Council—AFRC—has been submitted to my right hon. and learned Friend as required by the Science and Technology Act 1965. A copy is being placed in the House today.

During the period covered by the report a new chairman, Mr. Alistair Grant, and a new director general, Professor Thomas Blundell FRS, have been appointed to the council.

I am pleased that the AFRC has continued to make notable achievements under their leadership. For example, scientists at its Institute of Plant Science Research have identified and isolated a single plant gene which controls the development of flowers—the most productive part of the plant and also the source of grain, fruit and seed for propagation. Research on seed oils is providing new options for industry, including use of enzymes to upgrade low value oils and expansion of the industrial use of oilseed crops in the manufacture of plastics, lubricants and pharmaceuticals.

In 1990-91, the AFRC launched a new £9 million programme over four years on the biology of spongiform encephalopathies, involving seven universities, including an award to the AFRC centre for genome research in Edinburgh, the AFRC institute of animal health and the joint AFRC/MRC neuropathogenesis unit. AFRC scientists are also co-ordinating a 1·2 million ecu programme, involving 16 laboratories in eight European countries, to produce a genetic map of the pig. This will allow breeders to identify genes that determine commercially important traits, such as temperament, litter size and meat quality, and will greatly advance livestock breeding programmes. AFRC's scientists are participating in more than 50 EC co-ordinated programmes and the council has signed a five-year memorandum of understanding with its Dutch counterpart and has commenced a programme of joint research fellowships with its French counterpart.

I congratulate the council on these and numerous other achievements.

Science Budget

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what rates of inflation he has applied in estimating the real increases in the science budget over the three years 1992-93 to 1994-95.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. and learned Friend used the forecast Treasury GDP deflators of 4·5 per cent. for 1992-93, 3·75 per cent. for 1993-94 and 3 per cent. for 1994-95 announced in the 1991 autumn statement.

Women's Institutes

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from women's institutes concerning their responses to the White Paper on education and training for the 21st century; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a large number of such representations. I met representatives of the National Federation of Women's Institutes on 31 October.

Science Policy

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what preparations have been made by his Department to make an input on science policy for the 21st century, to the United Nations conference on environment and development in June 1992.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Department and the research councils are providing input to the Department of the Environment, which is responsible for co-ordinating the Government's preparation for the United Nations conference on environment and development.

Global Science Conference

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether his Department will be represented at the ASCEND 21 global science conference organised in Vienna on 24 to 29 November by the International Council of Scientific Unions.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The ASCEND 21 global science conference in Vienna, attendance at which is by personal invitation to scientific experts, will be attended by 12 scientists from the United Kingdom, including a member of the Natural Environment Research Council and three members of its staff.

Higher Education

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how he proposes to ensure parity of treatment for students in higher education.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The higher education funding councils, set up under the Further and Higher Education Bill now before Parliament, will be required to eliminate unjustified differences in funding methodologies between universities, polytechnics and colleges, while safeguarding the best of the distinctive missions of individual institutions.

Pupil Numbers

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list all local education authorities in rank order by percentage change of total pupil numbers for each of the last three years giving in each instance the percentage change for each authority in (a) primary, (b) secondary and (c) 16 to 18 years age groups.

Mr. Fallon: Information on the percentage change of full-time equivalent pupil numbers, in each of the age groups requested, within each local education authority and the rank order of each local education authority in England for the years 1989, 1990 and 1991—provisional—has been placed in the Library.

WALES

Local Government Finance Bill

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what effect he estimates the proposals in the Local Government Finance Bill will have on inward migration into Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I do not expect that the Local Government Finance Bill will have any material effect on the pattern of migration.

New Dwellings

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total number of new dwellings constructed in Wales in each of the past 10 years by (a) councils and (b) housing associations.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Annual data from 1975 to 1990 were published in table 2.3 of "Welsh Housing Statistics No. 11, 1991", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

TECs

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to meet the chairmen of training and enterprise councils to discuss their budget plans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have regular meetings with the TEC chairmen in Wales and arrangements are being made for our next meeting at which a range of issues will be discussed.

Employment Initiatives

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will propose initiatives amongst the young males in Wales who are unemployed.

Mr. David Hunt: The Government are providing a wide range of employment and training programmes focused on both young men and women. All those under 18 not in full-time education or training are guaranteed the offer of a training place, recruitment into employment training affords priority to those aged 18 to 24 who have been unemployed for between six and 12 months, and the employment action scheme enables the unemployed to contribute their skills and efforts to work of value for their area while at the same time gaining work experience. The training and enterprise councils are tailoring these schemes to local labour market and are also able to introduce their own initiatives to meet the needs of young people in their areas. In addition the Employment Service has a range of measures to help young people into work.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Auditors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether, since 1988, any auditing firms have been criticised in more than two DTI inspectors' reports.

Mr. Redwood: Yes. Once such firm has been criticised in more than two inspectors' reports published since 1988.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has plans to propose legislation under which companies would be required to publish the fees paid to auditors for recruitment of company executives.

Mr. Redwood: No.

Accountants

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether any staff from accountancy firms criticised by his Department's inspectors are currently seconded to his Department.

Mr. Redwood: The Department currently has one secondee who is a staff member of an accountancy firm which has been criticised in a published inspector's report during the period since June 1979. A further two secondees are from an accountancy firm, the predecessors of which have been criticised.

Political Donations

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to propose legislation under which all political donations by any company would require a specific resolution at the annual general meeting.

Mr. Redwood: No. There is a general requirement in the Companies Acts for directors' reports to disclose the amount and beneficiary of any money given for political purposes exceeding in aggregate £200. This report must be circulated to all shareholders before the annual general meeting. Shareholders may then comment on the donations and put down resolutions on them in the same way as they can for other aspects of the management of the company's funds. In the Government's view this gives shareholders sufficient protection.

AGIP (Africa)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the inquiries he has conducted into the AGIP (Africa) affair.

Mr. Redwood: It is not our practice to confirm or deny the existence of Companies Act inquiries in relation to a particular case unless there has been an announcement of an investigation.

Supervisory Bodies

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what rights the public has under the terms under which he has given recognition to the supervisory bodies (a) to know the findings of the bodies' monitoring activities and (b) to require the bodies to investigate complaints against auditing firms.

Mr. Redwood: The recognised supervisory bodies' monitoring reports on individual auditing firms are intended to be internal documents. However, I understand that the Chartered Association of Certified Accountants proposes to include in its annual report a report of its monitoring unit, and the other bodies are considering what information to publish. It was a precondition for recognition that the supervisory bodies had effective arrangements for the investigation of complaints, details of which are readily available from the bodies.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any plans to propose legislation under which any member of the public will have a right to know shortcomings in auditing firms discovered by the recognised supervisory bodies.

Mr. Redwood: No.

Accounting Standards Board

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will propose legislation under which the Accounting Standards Board will be required to open all its meetings to the public.

Mr. Redwood: No.

Fraud, Tenerife

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make representations to the Spanish Government over the alleged fraud which has led to the forthcoming foreclosure of 101 apartments on the Parque Don Jose, Costa Del Sileneis, Tenerife; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: I sympathise with the owners of the apartments at Parque Don Jose, but I believe that the applicable contracts are subject to Spanish law in which case neither the United Kingdom Government nor English law has any jurisdiction. Even if the contract was subject to English law, in so far as this is a civil dispute between purchasers and the developers, it would be for the civil courts to resolve. If an allegation of fraud or other criminal activity is involved it would be a matter for the police. It would not therefore be appropriate for me to make representations to the Spanish Government.

Hostile Bids

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what period he will allow for negotiation of undertakings relating to a hostile bid under section 75G of the Fair Trading Act 1973 as amended in 1989 to protect the public need for relevant information.

Mr. Redwood: The timetable established for negotiating undertakings under section 75G of the Fair Trading Act 1973 will depend on the circumstances of each particular case. The Secretary of State will wish to secure undertakings as soon as practicable while ensuring that third parties are given a reasonable opportunity to comment on what might be appropriate to remedy the adverse effects expected to arise from the merger situation.

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the degree of proof a hostile bidder under section 75G of the Fair Trading Act 1973 as amended in 1989 must provide to satisfy him that assets acquired in a hostile bid will be sold to avoid a reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Redwood: Undertakings given by a company under section 75G of the Fair Trading Act 1973 to divest or separate part of a merged business in lieu of a reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission are enforceable in the courts. Alternatively, the Secretary of State may make an order to remedy the expected adverse effects of the merger when it appears to him that an undertaking has not been or will not be fulfilled.

Footwear

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he has taken and intends to take to discourage foreign manufacturers producing fraudulent imitations of United Kingdom manufacturers' footwear products.

Mr. Redwood: Our legislation provides effective remedies against the sale of counterfeit goods in the United Kingdom. The Government also recognise the importance of discouraging international trade in counterfeit goods. One of their chief objectives in the current GATT Uruguay round negotiations on trade-related aspects of intellectual property is to achieve strengthened multilateral rules for combating trade in counterfeit goods, which should be of benefit to all sectors of United Kingdom manufacturing.

Political Risk Insurance

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to ensure that political risk insurance is readily available to British exporters on terms which enable them to compete on equal terms with their overseas competitors.

Mr. Lilley: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made by my hon. Friend the Minister for Trade during the debate on the Lords Amendments to the Export and Investment Guarantees Bill on 22 October, Official Report columns 815-17, in which he described the two forms of reinsurance which the Government, through ECGD, will provide to the insurance services business after the latter's privatisation.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the resignation of the chief executive of the Export Credits Guarantee Department, Mr. Malcolm Stephens.

Mr. Lilley: Mr. Stephens will be leaving ECGD later this year to take up the post of chief executive of the London Chamber of Commerce. I should like to record my gratitude for his effective and professional leadership of ECGD over the last four and a half years. I wish him well in his new career in the chamber movement, to which the Government attach great importance.

Astra plc

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on what date, on what grounds, and by reference to which section of legislation he referred problems at Astra plc to his inspectors; if he will name the inspectors involved in this investigation; and when he expects the inspectors to report.

Mr. Redwood: Following an application by the company, Colin Percy Farquharson Rimer QC and John White FCA, were appointed inspectors on 16 August 1990 under section 431(2)(c) of the Companies Act 1985 to investigate and report on the affairs of the company. My right hon. Friend has asked them to look in particular at the events surrounding the rights issue by the company in July 1989. The inspectors are making good progress, but I cannot say when they will complete their report.

Film Industry

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any proposals to help stimulate investment in films; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: A working party, chaired by my Department, is looking at ways of increasing private sector investment in film production in the United Kingdom. It will report to me when it has completed its work.

Industrial Policy

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will next meet representatives of the Yorkshire and Humberside regional CBI to discuss industrial policy.

Mr. Lilley: I have no plans at present to meet representatives of the Yorkshire and Humberside regional CBI, but officials of my Department keep in touch with them on a wide range of business matters. I met a large number of CBI representatives when I attended their national conference on 4 November 1991.

Relocation Assistance

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he carries out of the financial viability of companies before providing them with relocation assistance.

Mr. Redwood: Grants are not normally made available by my Department solely for the purposes of relocation. Where such a case may qualify for regional selective assistance, a financial appraisal of the commercial prospects of the company would be undertaken to enable a judgment to be made about the viability of the business, before any offer of grant is considered. A simplified appraisal is used for smaller value cases.

Copenhagen Conference

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether his Department was invited to participate in the conference on ecologically sustainable industrial development in Copenhagen on 14 to 18 October 1991.

Mr. Lilley: Yes, my Department was represented. I will place a copy of the conference's report in the House Library as soon as possible.

UN Environment Conference

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will make it his policy to put forward proposals for the promotion of hand tools as part of a strategy for appropriate technological support to the United Nations conference on environment and development to be held in June 1992;

(2) what preparations have been made by his Department to make an input on business, trade and technology issues for the United Nations conference on environment and development in June 1992.

Mr. Lilley: I draw the hon. Member's attention to the report "Global Climate Change: the Role of Technology Transfer" which was prepared for UNCED by Touche Ross and funded jointly by my Department and the Overseas Development Administration. A copy is available in the Library of the House.

This report aimed to offer a constructive contribution to UNCED's discussions on technology transfer in the context of climate change. I am pleased to say it has been well received by delegates to the preparatory meetings for UNCED and has helped focus on this subject in a positive way.

One of the findings of the report emphasises the importance of appropriate technologies reflecting the different technological needs, abilities and circumstances of developing countries.

Officials in my Department have also established contact with the Business Council for Sustainable Development—BCSD—the body set up by Mr. Maurice Strong, secretary-general to UNCED, to provide the business input to UNCED. Links have also been established between BCSD and the Advisory Committee on Business and the Environment set up by my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for the Environment, and myself.

Post Offices

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, further to his answer of 5 November, Official Report, column 61, how many Post Office Crown branch offices in (a) Great Britain and (b) South Wales are currently in each of the three categories A, B and C specified by Post Office Counters.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 18 November 1991]: The numbers of Crown post offices currently in categories A, B and C in (a) Britain and (b) South Wales Counters district are as follows:

	A	B	C
Britain	484	430	161
South Wales	20	12

The categories A, B and C referred to represent very broad sizing guidelines indicating large, medium-sized and small offices respectively. As such, the number in each category should not be regarded as hard and fast.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Single European Act

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will arrange for copies of the Single European Act to be available at the Vote Office ahead of the debate on 20 November.

Mr. MacGregor: Copies of the Single European Act were placed in the House Library on a Command Paper basis—Cm 372—in 1988.

I understand that copies will also be placed in the Vote Office in advance of the debate. Members can, of course, also order a copy from HMSO on a "green form" basis.

Empty Offices

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many offices are currently empty in the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. MacGregor: Thirteen.

Members' Offices

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many hon. and right hon. Members now have a single office; and when he expects that all hon. and right hon. Members will be so provided for.

Mr. MacGregor: As a result of the occupation of No. 1 Parliament street, 334 Members now have single offices either in the Palace of Westminster or one of the parliamentary outbuildings. A small number of additional offices will become available next year following the conversion of accommodation in Speaker's Court. The objective of providing a single office for each Member who wants one will be fulfilled on completion of phase 2 of the new parliamentary building. It is impossible to predict with any accuracy at this stage when this will be achieved, since to a large extent progress on this building is dependent on progress in the construction of London Underground's new Westminster station. The new parliamentary building will certainly not be ready for occupation before 1996.

Contracts of Employment

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make it his policy to publish the names of those hon. Members who have not issued a contract of employment to any of their staff paid from the office costs allowance.

Mr. MacGregor: No.

Medical Facilities

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Lord President of the Council what plans he has to increase medical facilities within Parliament for the benefit of hon. Members and their staffs.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 18 November 1991]: The Houses of Parliament occupational health service was established on 1 March 1991. It is being run by a full-time occupational health manager with assistance from a full-time nurse. The manager is qualified in occupational health and St. Thomas's hospital are providing medical back-up and the services of a part-time occupational health physician.

The aim of the service is to provide general health care and to promote and maintain the highest attainable standards of occupational health in the two Houses. The Members' medical surveillance scheme, which has operated for a number of years, continues unchanged.

There are at present no plans to increase on these arrangements, which have only recently been introduced.

EMPLOYMENT

Skills Training

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what meetings he has had with staff of the former skills training agencies sold to TICC Ltd. and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I met representatives of the staff and trade unions on 30 September 1991.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action his Department proposes to take with regard to the former employees of TICC Skill Centres Ltd. and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: With the completion of the sale of the Skills Training Agency in May 1990, all the operating businesses passed to the private sector and their subsequent activities have not been a matter for the Government. However, we are aware of the position of former civil servants employed by TICC Ltd. and am currently considering the representations made to the Department by TICC's staff and their trade union.

Unemployment

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the 10 constituencies with the lowest level of unemployment in England, Scotland and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: For areas with different sized work forces, such as parliamentary constituencies, the only meaningful comparisons are based on unemployment rates. These are not available at the level of parliamentary constituencies.

Health and Safety Inspectors

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the up-to-date figures of recruitment of health and safety inspectors over the last 12 months.

Mr. Jackson: In the year ended 1 November 1991 a total of 171 inspectors were recruited by the Health and Safety Executive. A further 63 joined the organisation with the transfers of responsibility for offshore and railway safety.

Job Losses

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment has been made of the number of jobs lost to the United Kingdom by outward divestment or the export of British jobs to overseas countries, in each of the last five years.

Mr. Jackson: I am not aware of any such assessment.

Co-operatives (Aid)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the organisations which have received or are to receive pump-priming cash or other grant aid from his Department in order to help develop co-operatives.

Mr. Jackson: The Department has agreed to provide pump priming support for the United Kingdom Co-operative Council. A number of other proposals are under consideration at present for development funding.

Co-operative ventures and other organisations involved with the co-operative sector can also receive assistance indirectly from the Department through the training and enterprise councils or local enterprise companies, bodies such as the Prince's Youth Business Trust and a range of Government initiatives available for small businesses.

Tourism

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make it his policy to reintroduce section 4 grants in England to fund tourism-related projects; how many representations he has had over the withdrawal of section 4 grants; what consultations he has had with the British Tourist Authority regarding section 4 grants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: No. Funding for the section 4 scheme in England was withdrawn in 1989 because of doubts about its value and effectiveness. Nothing since the scheme's suspension has given cause to believe that its reintroduction in England would be justified.

The Department has on occasions, received representations in support of reintroducing some form of financial assistance for tourism projects. The British Tourist Authority has not offered any comment on the withdrawal of funding for the section 4 scheme in England.

Shoe Repairing

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to provide and encourage improved training provision for the shoe repairing industry.

Mr. Jackson: Provision of training is primarily the responsibility of employers, but Employment Department funding is being provided to support youth training and employment training in the shoe repairing industry. The Department is also helping the industry to define and meet its training needs by promoting more effective industry training organisation arrangements. Funding is also being provided for the development of vocational qualifications in shoe repair.

Wages Inspectorate

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will expand the wages inspectorate.

Mr. Jackson: No. The wages inspectorate has adequate resources to enforce wages council orders effectively.

THE ARTS

Items in Lieu of Tax

Mr. Wolfson: To ask the Minister for the Arts, whether any items have been accepted in lieu of tax and allocated so far in the present Session.

Mr. Renton: Since my announcement on 25 July, at column 794, in response to a question from the hon. Member for Warley, East (Mr. Faulds), I am pleased to inform the House that an offer of English porcelain has been accepted in lieu of £77,000 tax. The porcelain was offered on condition that it be allocated to the Fitzwilliam museum, Cambridge and it has, therefore, been allocated to that institution.

AIDS

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what funds are currently being paid to the Health Education Authority for AIDS awareness campaigns;

(2) how much expenditure on AIDS awareness is targeted at ethnic minorities;

(3) how much money is paid yearly by the Health Education Authority to the National AIDS Trust and upon what conditions as to the following of an equal opportunities policy by the National AIDS Trust.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In the current financial year the Health Education Authority (HEA) has been allocated £9·5 million to carry forward AIDS mass media campaigns in the United Kingdom and for supporting AIDS educational work in England.

Of this sum £640,000 has been allocated to media, project and research work directed at ethnic minorities. In addition, health authorities have been asked to give priority attention to the HIV educational needs of ethnic minorities in developing local HIV prevention work.

Funding to the National AIDS Trust (NAT) is for specific projects, as follows:

1990-92 NAT young people's initiative and publication of a report	46,000
1991-93 Funding over three years for the NAT HIV/AIDS women's project	105,000

The HEA has also provided £3,139 in the current year to assist the NAT in co-ordinating the United Kingdom response to world AIDS day on 1 December.

The hon. Member may wish to contact the HEA direct for information about equal opportunities policy.

Manual Lifting Injuries

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many employees in the NHS suffered manual lifting injuries in 1988-89; and how many suffered manual lifting injuries in 1989-90.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally by the Department.

Under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1986, all employers, including the national health service, are required to report certain types of industrial injuries to the Health and Safety Executive. Data of a limited and broadly classified nature are maintained by the executive in respect of those manual handling injuries reported to them.

Census

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many breaches of security occurred in collecting the 1991 census data; how many of these were by individual census numerators; how many were after the individual enumerator had passed on this information to the district co-ordinators; and how many individuals' census files were subject to security failures.

Mr. Dorrell: In the 109,700 enumeration districts in England and Wales, in which some 20 million forms were collected, 24 incidents have been reported where there were actual or potential breaches of confidentiality of census documents. In eight of these incidents forms were stolen from enumerators or collected by people impersonating enumerators. Fourteen incidents were due to errors made by field staff. One incident occurred as forms were in transit between the local census officer and the census office, as a result of which two forms are missing, believed destroyed. In the remaining incident one enumeration record book containing addresses for an enumeration district was lost in the post. The total number of census forms involved was 253, of which 121 were recovered. Of the remainder, 117 were stolen or fraudulently collected and 15 are unaccounted for.

There have been no breaches of confidentiality of census documents since the forms were delivered to the census office.

Two further incidents are under investigation, involving the alleged passing by census staff of details on other census staff to third parties.

Disablement Services Authorities

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if his Department will reimburse health authorities for their expenditure in meeting the unpaid bills passed to them from the Disablement Services Authority when it was disbanded in April 1991;

(2) how much of its unspent budget for the year 1990-91 the Disablement Services Authority returned for the year 1990-91 to the Department; when the Disablement Services Authority requested the money to be returned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The Disablement Services Authority notified the Department in February 1991 of a forecast cash underspend of some £5 million on its income and expenditure account for 1990-91. That sum was transferred from class XIII, vote 3—Department of Health, administration, miscellaneous health services and personal social services, England—which included provision for the authority, to class XIII, vote 1—hospital and community health services, family health services (part) and other services (England)—in the revised spring supplementary estimates presented on 28 February 1991.

In late March 1991, the authority notified the Department that it had received invoices which it wished to settle prior to its dissolution. The sum of £1 million was made available to the authority to assist it to settle some of those accounts.

In August 1991 health authorities were allocated some £3 million to meet unpaid bills inherited from the authority that extended beyond the normal period of credit. This is in addition to the £111 million revenue resources allocated to health authorities in 1991-92 for disablement services.

Kidney Dialysis

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many national health service patients were receiving kidney dialysis at the latest date for which figures are available; what proportion of these are aged 70 years or over; and what are the comparable figures for the private sector.

Mr. Dorrell: Information in the form requested is not collected centrally. According to information provided by the European Dialysis and Transplant Association the total number of people receiving dialysis in the United Kingdom as at 31 December 1990 was 8,857. At the end of 1989 there was one such patient over the age of 70 years for every 13 under that age.

Back Pain and Injury

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the number of working days lost to the national health service each year through back pain or back injury;

(2) what is the total amount paid out in terms of damages by the national health service to staff who have suffered back pain or back injury;

(3) what are the sickness absence costs to the national health service of back pain or back injury to staff in terms of (a) sick pay and (b) additional staffing costs to cover for sickness absence;

(4) what percentage of sickness absence in the national health service is due to back pain or back injury;

(5) what is the cost to the national health service of treating national health service staff who are off work temporarily or permanently due to back pain or back injury.

(6) how many staff leave the national health service each year due to back pain or back injury.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally.

Dental Services

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action his Department is taking to reduce the incidence of cross-infection in general dental surgeries.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department has issued guidance on various occasions since the publication of the report of the Expert Advisory Group on Hepatitis in Dentistry in 1979. The chief dental officer wrote to all general dental practitioners on the subject in April 1986 and May 1988. In addition, the general principles of cross-infection control have been outlined in the publication "Guidance for Clinical Health Care Workers", a copy of which is available in the Library. The Department also contributed to the British Dental Association's revised guidance on cross-infection control. The Department regularly considers the question of further guidance on cross-infection control in the light of circumstances prevailing at the time.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will ensure that the regulation to empower family health service authorities to inspect general dental surgeries will include the provision for financial penalties and disciplinary action when such surgeries expose their patients to unacceptable risks from cross-infection.

Mr. Dorrell: The terms of service under which dental practitioners provide general dental services under the NHS already make it clear that they must employ proper skill and attention, provide suitable equipment, and provide treatment with suitable instruments for their patients. A dentist found to have acted in breach of his terms of service is vulnerable to sanctions which may be imposed by the family health service authority.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a list of those hospitals providing paediatric emergency dental services staffed by the community dental service.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not held centrally.

Fluoridation

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been carried out by his Department into the effect of the fluoridation of drinking water on the level of morbidity in human populations.

Mr. Dorrell: A number of studies have been undertaken on behalf of the Department into major causes of morbidity in relation to fluoridation of drinking water.

These include tuberculosis, cancers, cardiovascular diseases, pulmonary diseases, peptic ulcers, renal disease, congenital malformations, thyroid disease and musculo-skeletal disorders. These, and other authoritative reviews of the extensive worldwide scientific literature, have found no evidence to show that fluoridation has any adverse effect on health.

St. Paul's Eye Hospital

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the number of patients from Wales treated at Liverpool's St. Paul's eye hospital in each of the last four years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Michael Emberton, the chairman of Liverpool health authority, for details.

Rehabilitation Consultants

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many consultants in rehabilitation medicine were appointed, and salaries ring-fenced, by the Disablement Services Authority; how many are still in post; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The latest figures available show that, by 30 September 1990, 11 consultants in rehabilitation medicine had been appointed and are still in post. The remainder of these 40 newly created posts were expected to be filled by the middle of 1991, mainly by medical officers working within disablement services. Resources for disablement services are ring-fenced within total health authority cash limits for the two years, 1991-92 to 1992-93; salary costs for consultants in rehabilitation medicine are included within these ring-fenced allocations.

Hospital Social Work

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will issue guidelines to local authorities about appropriate levels of service for hospital social work.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Responsibility for providing social work services to hospitals rests with local authorities under arrangements established in 1974. Local authority circular LAC(91)14 and NHS executive letter EL(91)122 issued in October clarified the position. Copies are available in the Library.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the progress of the social services inspectorate's inspection of social care to NHS patients.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The inspection process is underway. Fieldwork in five local authorities in England is due to be completed in February 1992 and a report subsequently prepared.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress he is making on establishing agreements about funding hospital social work services in London.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department has completed a pilot exercise to provide information about the provision of health-related social work services by local authorities to non-residents. The outcome will be discussed with the Local Authority Associations at the end of November.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure that high-quality hospital social work services are part of the community care plans currently being drawn up by local authorities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: An integral part of local authorities community care plans will be their plans for health-related social work. This was made clear in local authority circular LAC(91)14, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Hospital Appointments

Sir Patrick McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish figures setting out the number of patients who failed to attend national health service hospitals after being granted firm appointments region by region for the year to March 1991.

Mr. Dorrell: The available information is given in the table.

Number of patients who did not attend for appointment at consultant out-patient and general practitioner maternity clinics in 1990-91 (provisional), national health service hospitals England

Regional health authority	Referral attendances	Consultant initiated attendances	Total

Radiotherapy

Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the length of time that patients have to wait for radiotherapy at (a) Newcastle general hospital and (b) other parts of the United Kingdom; and if he will outline the steps he intends to take to improve the position for patients who urgently need treatment in the area served by this hospital.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information on waiting times for individual hospitals is not held centrally. Information for regional health authorities can be obtained from the "Hospital In-patient Waiting Lists England at 31 March 1991", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Mentally Ill People

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimate for community care services provided jointly by the health authorities and local authorities for 1991-92 to attend to the needs of the mentally handicapped and the mentally disabled transferred into the community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Information about joint funding by health and local authorities of community care services is not collected centrally. We do however have figures for joint finance and dowry expenditure for 1989-90. In that year, health and local authority joint finance expenditure on services for people with learning disabilities and for people with mental illness was £60·4 million and £14·5 million respectively on revenue and £9·4 million and £0·8 million respectively on capital (England only; no capital figures for eight local authorities). Health authority dowry payments to local authorities for people with learning disabilities and for people with mental illness were £1·2 million and £12·3 million respectively (England only). Joint finance and dowry arrangements are described in HC(83)6, HC(84)9 and HN(86)11, copies of which are available in the Library.

Cot Deaths

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what advice is now given to parents on the avoidance of cot deaths; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what progress is being made in reducing the incidence of cot deaths.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [pursuant to her reply, 15 November 1991, c. 681-82]: To reinforce the advice on reducing the risk of cot deaths which has already been sent to all doctors, midwives, health visitors and other professionals concerned with the care of young babies, the Government are arranging an information campaign aimed directly at mothers and others who care for young babies. This will be led by advertising next month in the national and specialist press which invites people to obtain a leaflet setting out the main steps to be taken to reduce the risk of cot deaths. This leaflet—also available in ethnic languages—will in addition be widely distributed, for instance to doctors' surgeries, maternity units and public libraries. The intention is that the leaflet can be retained for reference by families with young babies.

Racial Equality

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many decisions have been taken by industrial tribunals that health authorities have discriminated against black employees or job applicants.

Mr. Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

Since 1 April this year, 38 decisions have been promulgated for cases brought under the Race Relations Act 1976 against health authorities. There were no successful applications amongst them.

SCOTLAND

Foresterhill Hospital

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the Foresterhill hospital's trust application.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland is presently considering the application and expects to make an announcement soon.

Violent Crime

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to tackle the problem of violent crime in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The detection and prevention of violent crime is given a high priority by police forces throughout Scotland. The Government continue to provide substantial resources to assist the police in maintaining law and order: since 1979 police expenditure has risen by more than 50 per cent. in real terms. The Government will also continue to ensure that an adequate range of penalties is available to the courts to deal with all crimes and offences, including those involving violence.

Hospital Services, Skye

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the future of Gesto hospital, Edinbane, Isle of Skye.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This is a matter for Highland health board.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many beds are available for the care of the elderly in Skye; and what is their occupancy.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In the year ended 30 June 1991 there were, on average, 28 staffed national health service beds available for the care of the elderly. The occupancy rate was 60·7 per cent.

Incinerator (Granton)

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received from community groups or individuals about the proposed erection of an incinerator by the Lothian Chemical Company at Granton foreshore, Edinburgh; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In the last three months, representations about the proposed incinerator have been received from six individuals. Over the same period, none has been received from community groups.

An application by Lothian Chemical Company for the registration of an incinerator at its Granton works is currently being considered by Her Majesty's industrial pollution inspectorate. In determining the application, account will be taken not only of the steps to be taken by the company to control emissions from the proposed plant, but of the representations made by members of the public about the application.

Careers Service

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what new money will be made available to education authorities in Scotland to promote partnerships between the careers service and local employers.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend expects to issue shortly further details about the development of partnerships between the Careers Service and local enterprise companies in Scotland.

Civil Actions

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he hopes to provide a substantive response to the letter of the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow to the Lord Advocate, dated 30 October, concerning the legal right of an individual to raise a civil action in the High Court; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate has today written to the hon. Member in response to his letter dated 30 October.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the sites of special scientific interest in Scotland for which management agreements are currently being negotiated, giving details of the damage threatened in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton [holding answer 18 November]: The information requested is confidential to the parties.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Norwich Office (Closure)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has had regarding the closure of his Department's office in Norwich; and if he will make it his policy to review the closure decision.

Mr. Curry: The Department has received representations, principally from staff representatives, about the future of the Norwich office. It sees no cause to review its decision to transfer grant and subsidy processing and other services from Norwich to a new regional service centre at Cambridge. The Norwich office will continue to provide a base for Ministry field officers and ADAS staff, as well as serving as an animal health office.

Stilton Cheese

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the implications for the naming of Stilton cheese if the Council of Ministers accepts the Borgo report.

Mr. Gummer: The report of the European Parliament's Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Rural Development on the Commission's proposal for a council regulation on the protection of geographical indications and designations of origin for agricultural products and foodstuffs (the Borgo report) has not yet been considered by the plenary session of the European Parliament. It remains unclear whether the Commission's original proposal or the recommendations of the Borgo report, if acceptable, would have any effect on the naming of Stilton or whether Stilton producers would be able to seek protection for the name Stilton under the terms of the proposed regulation, since Stilton cheese is not produced in Stilton.

However, Stilton is already protected by a registered trade mark belonging to the Stilton Cheesemakers' Association, and can be used to describe only a product made in the three counties of Nottinghamshire, Derbyshire and Leicestershire, which do not encompass the village of Stilton. Under the Commission proposals as they now stand, it would not be possible to register a geographical name which conflicts with a registered trade mark.

Poultry Farms

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the reports by departmental veterinary officers on matters relating to hygiene on poultry farms.

Mr. Maclean: Reports prepared by my Department's veterinary officers about hygiene on individual poultry farms are confidential and the details are not published. Information about diseases in animals including poultry are contained in such publications as the report of the chief veterinary officer, "Animal Health 1990".

Milk

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food by how much he expects the United Kingdom's national milk quota for the current year to be exceeded; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Experience of previous years suggests that production is likely to exceed quota by a small margin.

Slaughterhouses

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish hygiene-related reports on slaughterhouses within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: Local authorities—district councils—are responsible for the enforcement of hygiene standards in slaughterhouses and it is for individual authorities to decide whether or not to publish related reports.

As announced on 3 April this year, agriculture departments will take over responsibility for licensing all slaughterhouses in Great Britain when new EC rules come into force on 1 January 1993. My ministerial colleagues and I are considering what information should be made publicly available when we assume this responsibility.

Clenbuterol

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the use of clenbuterol; and if he will make it his policy to press for a Community ban on this product.

Mr. Maclean: Clenbuterol is the active ingredient within three veterinary products licensed in the United Kingdom for use on prescription to treat respiratory and calving disorders in cattle and horses. I have no plans to press for a Community ban as this would unreasonably put a stop to such legitimate use.

I am aware of reports from other member states of the illegal use of this substance as a repartitioning agent but we have no evidence of unauthorised use of clenbuterol in Great Britain at present. Nevertheless tighter controls on such substances will be introduced within the next few weeks. Interested parties have already been consulted about these measures, which amongst other things will enable animals and carcases found to contain residues of illegally administered beta agonists, including clenbuterol, to be condemned as unfit for human consumption.

Salmonella

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when and by what mechanism he proposes to implement Council directives 71/118 on trade in fresh poultrymeat and 89/662 concerning veterinary checks in intra-Community trade.

Mr. Maclean: EC directive 71/118, on trade in fresh poultry meat, was implemented in England and Wales by the Poultry Meat (Hygiene) Regulations 1976 (as amended). Similar regulations were introduced in Scotland (also in 1976) and in Northern Ireland (in 1977). Detailed discussions on a range of issues arising out of the directives on veterinary checks are still on-going in Brussels. As a result mechanisms for implementation in this country of directive 89/662, which comes into force on 1 July 1992, are still under consideration.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, what advice he has received from the Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment regarding the use of canthaxanthin; and if he will make it his policy to ban canthaxanthin in commercial egg production.

Mr. Maclean: The Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment has advised that the use of canthaxanthin in animal feeds should be discontinued. The United Kingdom has urged a prohibition on its use in feed in the EC. The Commission's export committees have advised that a decision should be made when further test data are available late next year.

I have accepted this position given that any effects on consumers from intake of canthaxanthin would only occur over a long period of time and are not of an acute toxicological nature. I also understand that the use of canthaxanthin in poultry feed has declined recently.

Pesticides

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many evaluations of pesticides under the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986 have been published; how many products await evaluation; and whether he intends to publish all evaluations of pesticide products.

Mr. Maclean: Since the introduction of the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986, a total of 41 evaluation documents have been published for new and reviewed pesticides. There are at present 54 new pesticide active ingredients that are awaiting approval, 19 of which are currently under evaluation. Evaluations will be published for each of these as and when approvals are granted. Evaluations will also be published on further pesticides considered by the independent Advisory Committee on Pesticides as part of the reviews programme. When an evaluation is issued the data underlying the published evaluation are available for public scrutiny on application to the registration authorities.

Farm Woodland Scheme

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his review of the farm woodland scheme.

Mr. Gummer: On 23 July I announced that the Secretaries of State for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland and I were undertaking a comprehensive review of the farm woodland scheme and that pending the outcome of the review we would continue to accept applications under the existing rules of the scheme until 31 March 1992. We have now completed the review and we announced on 6 November, in the context of the Government's public expenditure plans, that a successor to the farm woodland scheme, to be called the farm woodland premium scheme, will be introduced on 1 April 1992.

The new arrangements will offer increased grants for planning woodland and higher incentives to encourage farmers to convert land now in agricultural use to woodland. The aim is to enhance the farmed landscape and environment and provide a productive land use alternative to agriculture. It will also be very much easier for farmers to understand and simpler to operate than the current scheme. Detailed proposals for the new scheme have been drawn up and are being sent to the main interested organisations for comment. A copy of these proposals has been placed in the Library of the House, and they contain the following main elements:

The administration of establishment grants will be separated from that of annual incentives.

The Forestry Commission will pay the grants for planting and managing trees under the woodland grant scheme, including the better land supplement and community woodland supplement where appropriate, and Agriculture departments will pay the annual incentives under the farm woodland premium scheme. The Department of Agriculture will pay all the grants in Northern Ireland, where the enclosed land supplement is paid instead of the better land supplement.

Annual incentives of up to £250 per hectare will be paid for either 10 or 15 years, depending on the type of woodland created on arable or improved grassland. Annual incentives of £60 per hectare will be paid for trees planted on unimproved grassland in the less favoured areas only.

There will be no limit on the number of applications that can be made, but planting must not, in aggregate, exceed more than 50 per cent. of any individual agricultural unit. In addition, planting of unimproved grassland must not exceed 40 hectares of any individual agricultural unit.

The definition of "improved grassland" will now be based on the content of "productive" species. This has the advantage of being easily checked by a physical inspection and puts no restriction on the method of grassland improvement.

No quotas or targets will be set for the scheme but it will be subject to cash limits.

NATIONAL FINANCE

VAT

Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total amount received, in each of the past three years, from penalties imposed on those late in paying value added tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The total amounts received from penalties for late submission or payment of value added tax returns, in each of the past three and current financial years are as follows:

	Total revenue £ million
Financial year ending 31 March 1989	79·1
Financial year ending 31 March 1990	82·1
Financial year ending 31 March 1991	83·1
1 April 1991 to 30 September 1991	42·7

Frozen Assets

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give details of the assets of other countries currently frozen in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maples: The Bank of England issued a notice on 7 August 1990 drawing attention to the Treasury directions issued under the Emergency Laws (Re-enactments and Repeals) Act 1964, which have the effect of freezing certain Iraqi assets held in the United Kingdom. The assets of no other countries are currently frozen in the United Kingdom.

Planning Estimates

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table which provides an analysis by economic category of the 1991-92 estimated outturn for the planning total as announced in the 1991 autumn statement, on definitions consistent with those of table 3.6 of Cm. 1520.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Data for the autumn statement forecast of outturn in the current year are collected for each Department, by spending sector and in total. No economic category analysis of spending by Departments is collected at this time of the year.

It is possible, however, to provide an approximate analysis by economic category of forecast outturn in 1991-92 on the definitions used in table 3.6 of Cm. 1520, taking broad account of the nature of spending by individual Departments. This is set out in the following table. An economic category analysis of forecast outturn for 1991-92 based on Departments' assessments of the economic category composition of their spending will be provided in the supplement to the 1991 autumn statement to be published around the end of January 1992.

Planning total forecast outturn 1991-92

Economic category	(£ billion)
Current expenditure on goods and services	72·1
Subsidies	5·8
Current grants to persons[1]	66·3
Current grants abroad[1]	2·1
Current grants to local authorities	33·3
Distribution of non-domestic rate revenue	14·3
Net capital expenditure on assets	7·2
Capital grants to local authorities	1·4
Other capital grants	5·4
Credit approvals	4·3
Lending and other financial transactions	0·5
Privatisation proceeds	−8·0
Adjustment	0·3
Planning total	204·9

[1] These categories were combined in Cm. 1520. The figure for current grants abroad is net of other governments' contributions to the cost of the Gulf conflict.

National Heritage Land

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what arrangements are imposed upon a landowner for the payment of tax if the agreement for inheritance tax exemptions on national heritage land of outstanding scenic, historic or scientific interest has been broken; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: If a landowner breaks an undertaking given in respect of conditionally exempt land, inheritance tax is chargeable on the current value of the property.

Wildlife Trade

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will state the level of resources allocated in 1992-93 for wildlife trade control by officers of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Customs involvement in wildlife controls extends over a wide area, embracing both health and conservation aspects. It also covers a diverse range of activities, from checks on the validity of import and export licences to investigation, as the need arises, of suspected fraud. All those activities take place within the broad framework of Customs enforcement generally, with no individual officers specialising in wildlife controls. It is therefore impracticable to identify separately those resources which are, or will be, allocated specifically to those controls.

Tobacco

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much the total tax burden on the leading United Kingdom cigarette brands has increased since May 1979.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The total tax burden on the leading five cigarette brands has increased on average from 69 per cent. in May 1979 to 76 per cent. in November 1991.

Income Tax

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the proportion of income tax paid by the top 10 per cent. of taxpayers (a) now and (b) in 1979-80.

Mr. Maude: It is estimated that in 1991-92 the top 10 per cent. of taxpayers will be liable to pay about 42 per cent. of the total yield of income tax. The corresponding figure for 1979-80 is 34 per cent.

VAT Returns

Sir John Farr: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average penalty imposed in Leicestershire on those who submit value added tax returns late by (a) one week, (b) two weeks and (c) four weeks, respectively.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Customs do not maintain statistics for individual counties or regions. The penalties imposed for late submission or payment of VAT returns do not vary with the length of the period between due date and receipt by Customs. Nationwide, the average penalty imposed on defaulting traders—including those who may have received more than one penalty—over the current and preceding financial years is:

	Average penalty £
Financial year ending 31 March 1989	266·24
Financial year ending 31 March 1990	375·42
Financial year ending 31 March 1991	429·39
Period from 1 April to 30 September 1991	441·41

Inheritance Tax (Business Relief)

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost to the Exchequer of increasing the present business relief on inheritance tax from 50 per cent. and 30 per cent. to 100 per cent. (a) if the increased relief included agricultural property and (b) if the increased relief excluded agricultural property.

Mr. Maude: The full-year costs of increasing these inheritance tax reliefs are estimated to be: £40 million if relief for business and agricultural property is increased to 100 per cent.; and £15 million if relief for business property only is increased to 100 per cent.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action has been taken regarding the second paragraph of article 8 of the European Community Council decision dated 12 March 1990, on multilateral surveillance and on the attainment of progressive convergence of economic policies and performance during stage one of economic and monetary union.

Mr. Maude: In accordance with the requirement in article 8 of the Council decision of 12 March 1990 to which the hon. Member refers, I have drawn the results of multilateral surveillance discussions in the Council of Economic and Finance Ministers to the attention of the House when reporting the outcome of Council meetings in answer to questions. The annual economic report has also been deposited in the Library of the House and considered by the Select Committee on European Legislation.

EC Budget Council

Mr. Paice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the recent meeting of the European Community's Budget Council.

Mr. Maude: The Budget Council met in Brussels on 12 November. I represented the United Kingdom. The Council established a second reading draft Budget for 1992 totalling 65,634 million ecu—£45,738 million—in commitment appropriations, compared with the total after the first reading of 65,606 million ecu—£45,718 million. Payment appropriations represent 1·14 per cent. of Community GNP, compared with a ceiling of 1·2 per cent. in the own resources decision, leaving a cash margin of around 3·5 billion ecu—£2·4 billion.

The Budget Council rejected most of the European Parliament's amendments and modifications to the Council's first reading draft Budget, adopting a draft Budget broadly in line with its first reading in July, respecting the existing financial perspective ceilings. In rejecting most of the Parliament's proposals the Council was able to put back into the draft Budget a provisional figure of 400 million ecu—£279 million—for technical assistance to the Soviet Union, and a total of 160 million ecu—£111 million—for emergency food and humanitarian aid. The following table summarises the second reading draft Budget, with reference to the financial perspective ceilings:

	Financial Perspective		Draft Budget[1]
	mecu	£ million[2]	mecu	£ million
Commitment appropriations
1. Agricultural guarantee	35,039	24,417	35,008	24,396
2. Structural operations	18,009	12,550	18,009	12,500
3. Multi-annual programmes	3,115	2,171	2,687	1,872
4. Other policies	5,224	3,640	5,135	3,578
5. Reimbursements and administration	4,205	2,930	3,795	2,645
6. Monetary reserve	1,000	697	1,000	697
Total: Commitment appropriations	66,592	46,406	65,634	45,738
of which:
compulsory	38,729	26,989	38,548	26,862
non-compulsory	27,863	19,417	27,086	18,875
Total: Payment appropriations[3]	63,241	44,070	62,417	43,496
of which:
compulsory	38,669	29,947	38,475	26,812
non-compulsory	24,572	17,123	23,942	16,684

[1] Council's second reading draft budget established on 12 November.
[2] The ERM central rate of £1 = 1·435 ecu is used throughout this reply.
[3] There is only a global ceiling for payments.

The European Parliament will consider the draft budget at its plenary in December. The 1992 draft budget is expected to be adopted by the Parliament on 12 December.

Economic Statistics

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps are being taken to improve the quality of economic statistics.

Mr. Norman Lamont: On 17 May 1990 my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister then Chancellor of the Exchequer, announced steps to improve the quality of economic statistics, particularly on services, companies and the balance of payments. The measures are now leading to more reliable statistics in these areas and will yield additional improvements over the next year. But if we are to have economic statistics which are sufficiently up to date and reliable, we need to build on those measures and to strengthen some of the key components not covered by them. I have therefore asked the Central Statistical Office to undertake a further programme to strengthen the reliability of statistics on retail sales, consumers' expenditure, industrial and service sector output, producer prices, stockbuilding, the balance of payments, companies' finances and the transactions of financial institutions.

Like the first initiative, these measures are designed to make the early estimates more reliable, thus reducing the need for subsequent revisions, and to reduce both discrepancies between the different measures of gross domestic product and the balancing items in the sector accounts. The first improvements in the CSO's statistics resulting from these measures are expected during 1992.

The new measures take account of recommendations from a detailed review of the way balance of payments statistics are collected and compiled. The review, carried out by Mr. Richard Eason, was commissioned as part of the initiative launched by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in May 1990. A copy of Mr. Eason's report and the CSO action plan in response to his recommendations have been deposited in the Library of the House.

The new measures, like some of those announced in May 1990, involve the wider use of existing statutory powers to secure full response and a more evenly shared burden on businesses. They include transfer to the CSO of some data collection previously undertaken mainly for national accounts purposes by the Bank of England.

In implementing the measures the CSO will consult the appropriate bodies and special efforts will be made to ensure that the burdens on businesses are kept to a minimum. A significant part of the extra burden will fall on businesses that currently have few statistical demands made of them, while some reductions will be made to other surveys.

These measures, combined with the CSO's launch today as an executive agency, demonstrate the Government's commitment to bringing about a significant and lasting improvement in the quality of the nation's economic statistics and minimising the burden imposed on business by their collection.

Central Statistical Office

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made towards establishing the Central Statistical Office as an executive agency.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I am pleased to announce that the Central Statistical Office became an executive agency today. Copies of the framework document are being placed in the Library of the House. This sets out the functions and objectives of the CSO, defines clearly the basis of accountability and the division of responsibilities between the director of the CSO and Ministers, and sets out the CSO's commitment to minimising the burden imposed on business by the collection of economic statistics. It also restates the arrangements to ensure the integrity and validity of United Kingdom official statistics.

I have set challenging targets for the agency focusing in particular on the need, both within government and outside, for reliable and timely macro-economic statistics. Since the establishment of the enlarged CSO as a separate department in July 1989, significant progress has been made in improving the quality of these statistics. Agency status will give added impetus to this process.

Sir Jack Hibbert, the director of the CSO and head of the Government statistical service since 1985, will be the agency's first chief executive until his retirement at the end of February 1992. A successor to Sir Jack is currently being recruited through open competition.

Civil Service Relocation

Mr. Speller: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to decentralise civil service offices to the south-west of England.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 11 November 1991]: Since 1988, Departments have decided to relocate or locate around 5,000 civil service posts to the south-west region. These include around 3,000 Ministry of Defence procurement executive's land, air and sea systems controllerates posts which will move to Bristol and Bath in 1994-95, and 500 Department of Social Security Child Support Agency posts due to move to Plymouth in 1993.

Duty-free Goods

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the revenue lost in granting duty-free status facilities for people travelling to and from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Adley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what he calculates will be the loss of revenue to the Treasury of the proposals to extend for a further 15 years the duty-free concession currently available at United Kingdom ports and airports.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answers 7 and 8 November 1991]: It is very difficult to provide an estimate because there is no information available on the amount of expenditure on duty-free goods purchased abroad by travellers entering the United Kingdom.

A certain amount of rather dated information is available from independent surveys by the Economist Intelligence Unit and the Netherlands Economic Institute on purchases of duty-free goods by travellers leaving the United Kingdom. Using that data, it is estimated very roughly that the loss of revenue to the United Kingdom from duty-free purchases by travellers entering the United Kingdom from the EC may be between £25 million and £50 million a year.

Inland Revenue (Structure Reviews)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will identify the number and designation of jobs which he expects to be lost following the structure reviews within the Inland Revenue department; what consultation has taken place with the appropriate trade unions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 18 November 1991]: The team reviewing the Inland revenue's organisation and structure has yet to report. The review team is consulting a wide range of staff within the Department, has invited representations from the appropriate trade unions and has had discussions with trade union representatives.

Inland Revenue

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the details of the timetable he expects to implement in respect of converting Inland Revenue departments to agency status.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 18 November 1991]: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced on 7 February 1991—Official Report, c. 205-6—a wide-ranging action plan, prepared by the chairman of the Board of Inland Revenue, to introduce changes by April 1992 which would enable the Department to operate fully on "next steps" lines and improve its service to the public. This action plan is being implemented on schedule.

The valuation offices for England and Wales and for Scotland were launched as a single Valuation Office Agency within the Inland Revenue on 30 September. Copies of the agency's framework document have been placed in the Library. The agency's objectives and targets for 1991-92, as agreed by Ministers for the valuation offices at the start of the year, are reproduced in the table.

For the rest of the department, as already announced 33 executive offices are being set up within the Inland Revenue to deal with the work of assessing and collecting the taxes and duties for which it is responsible, and for support services. The head of each office will have significant delegated responsibilities for managing the people and the resources in the office and will be personally accountable for its performance. All 33 executive offices will be set up by April 1992. Framework documents setting out their responsibilities and delegated authorities, and describing their accounting and financial systems and performance measures, will be published at that time.

The action plan also noted that the future organisation of the Inland Revenue's information technology division was under consideration. It has now been decided that the division will also become an Inland Revenue executive office in April 1992. As with the other 33 executive offices, a framework document will set out the authorities to be delegated to the director of technology and the enhanced responsibilities and accountability the director will have for providing the best quality of service and value for money. The question of an agency for IT services will be reconsidered in 1994, in the light of the department's IT needs at the time and its experience of operating on "next steps" lines.

These changes will mean that over 95 per cent. of the Inland Revenue's staff will be working in the Valuation Office Agency or one of the 34 executive offices by April 1992.

The "next steps" initiative is making good progress in the Inland Revenue and I am confident that it will enable the department to improve its efficiency and quality of service in the interest both of taxpayers and the staff of the department.

Valuation Office Agency: 1991-92 objectives and targets

The Valuation Office Agency's objectives and targets for the current year, as agreed by Ministers and published in the Inland Revenue's operating plan, include financial, efficiency, effectiveness and quality elements. They are:

—to clear 834,300 cases relating to rating work, valuations for Inland Revenue taxes and other work.

—to maintain gross expenditure within a ceiling of £125 million (excluding superannuation and capital) and to match the forecast of £126·5 million receipts from charges.

—to reduce the number of local offices from 124 to 120

—to achieve the improvements in productivity and efficiency targeted below.

Detailed targets:

	1991-92 target	1990-91 actual
Valuer productivity (weighted work outputs per valuer)	324	312
Overall local office productivity (weighted outputs per staff year)	121	119
Unit costs (full cost, constant 1990-91 prices)
—Rating work £	185	229
—Revenue work £	154	153
—Other work £	138	137
Clearance of rating work on 1990 rating list: pre-October 1990 appeals outstanding at year end	362,000	623,000
Timeliness (per cent. of work completed to external and internal time limits)	82	80
Valuations accurancy (per cent. valuations settled within ± 10 per cent. of initial valuation when facts settled)	80	78·8

Targets for work in connection with the proposed council tax will be set in due course.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give details of the organisation and structure reviews within the Inland Revenue department.

Mr. Maude: [holding answer 18 November 1991]: A review of the Inland Revenue's organisation and structure was commissioned in April 1991 as part of the department's response to the "next steps" programme.

The review is being undertaken by a team of Inland Revenue officials and consultants from Andersen Consulting and Kinsley Lord with experience of other large organisations in the public and private sectors. They will be reporting to the board by the end of December.

Schools Inspectorate

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the inquiry led by his Department into Her Majesty's inspectorate of schools.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 18 November 1991]: There has been no Treasury-led inquiry into the inspectorate.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Terrorist Murders

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number of persons convicted of terrorist murder in each of the last five years indicating how many were actual triggermen or bombers and how many were lookouts, drivers or other accessories to the persons who directly executed the murder.

Dr. Mawhinney: The number of persons convicted of the scheduled offence of murder in each of the last five years is as follows:

	Number
1986	24
1987	10
1988	12
1990	8

I regret that information on the extent of each individual's involvement in the murder for which he-she was convicted is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Drinking Water

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many drinking water supplies in Northern Ireland do not meet the EC water directive 1980.

Mr. Needham: In Northern Ireland all persons supplied receive water which complies with the overwhelming majority of the EC drinking water directive—80/778/EEC—standards. There is the potential for non-compliance with the aluminium standard in 39 of the Province's 123 supply zones and a general potential for non-compliance with the iron standard and related turbidity standard in all zones, because of the number of iron mains still in service. A programme of works to ensure full compliance with the directive standards is underway.

Cannabis and Crack

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the latest quantities of cannabis and crack seized in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: I am informed by the Chief Constable that the latest significant seizure of cannabis in Northern Ireland was in Belfast on 9 November 1991, when 1·5 kg was seized by the Royal Ulster Constabulary. There has been no seizure of crack.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which overseas countries he visited or were visited by the Northern Ireland Minister for Economic Development during the past 12 months for the purpose of seeking investment in Northern Ireland and the creation of more jobs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Since 1 November 1990, the Secretary of State has visited Belgium, the Netherlands, the United States—twice—Canada, the Republic of Korea, France and Germany. I have visited the United States—twice—Canada, the Republic of Korea, Japan—twice—Indonesia and Germany.

Drink-drive Offences

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people have been convicted of drink-drive offences in Northern Ireland in each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is:

Persons convicted of drink-driving offences in Northern Ireland[1]

	Number
1986	2,985
1987	2,990
1988	2,750
1989	2,432
1990	2,711

[1] These figures refer to convictions where the drink-drive offence was the primary offence.

The Government are fully committed to continuing their campaign against drinking and driving.

Handicapped People

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what additional resources he is making available to health boards in Northern Ireland to ensure that the needs of handicapped people are provided for in the community.

Mr. Hanley: Health and social services boards in Northern Ireland have resources of £837 million available to them in 1991-92, an increase of almost £71 million over 1990-91. Within these additional resources, the following sums of money have been earmarked for a number of initiatives which will directly benefit people with a handicap living in the community:

(i) £2·6 million towards part implementation of the Disabled Persons (Northern Ireland) Act 1989, to meet the costs of additional assessments and services;

(ii) £2·847 million to provide community support for long-stay patients discharged from psychiatric and mental handicap hospitals;

(iii) £2·95 million for implementation of "People First" particularly to enable boards to establish inspection units and a complaints procedure and to improve social work training.

Alcohol Abuse

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to deal with alcohol abuse by youngsters under the age of 18 years.

Mr. Hanley: Alcohol misuse is covered in health education programmes in many schools, and seminars on this topic are organised regularly by the youth service. Coverage in schools will increase when health education becomes a compulsory cross-curricular theme next year. In addition, the licensing laws prohibit the sale or supply of alcohol to persons under 18 and its consumption by such persons in any place other than a private residence.

Owen and James Carragher

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what date the firm of Robins AHW Ltd., loss adjusters, was appointed to deal with compensation claim ASC 24337/45 submitted on behalf of Owen and James Carragher.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave on 15 November 1991, Official Report, column 673.

Paramilitary Organisations

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total number of terrorist incidents there have been since 1970; and which paramilitary organisations have either claimed responsibility for them or have been attributed responsibility.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 7 November 1991]: It is not known precisely how many terrorist incidents there have been since 1970, nor is it always known which paramilitary organisation was responsible. I refer the hon. Member to the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary's annual reports, which gave details of some of the information requested.

Terrorism Risks

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what facilities and resources are made available to both elected representatives and other public figures at risk from terrorist organisations; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 7 November 1991]: I do not consider it appropriate to disclose information about security arrangements for individuals.

Scheduled Offences

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people have been convicted of scheduled offences since 1970; and what were their paramilitary affiliations at the time of conviction.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 7 November 1991]: Statistics on convictions for scheduled offences were not recorded prior to 1975. From that year until the end of September 1991, a total of 11,095 people were convicted of scheduled offences. Information on their paramilitary affiliations is not available.

Terrorism

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many members of the security forces have been killed by terrorists since 1969; how many were members of the armed forces including the Ulster Defence Regiment; how many members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary and Royal Ulster Constabulary Reserve; and if will give figures for those in the two categories who have been wounded.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 14 November 1991]: The following table details the number of members of the security forces who have died or who have been injured as a result of the security situation in Northern Ireland since 1969:

	1969 to 31 October 1991
	Deaths	Injuries
Regular Army	432	4,669
UDR	195	439
RUC	187	6,855
RUC Reserve	97	—

[1] Statistics on injuries of RUC and RUC Reserve officers are not recorded separately.

DEFENCE

Soviet Union (Military Threat)

5. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the Government's current assessment of the military threat from the Soviet Union.

Mr. Tom King: It is clear that the Soviet Union as we have known it no longer exists. Much of the old Soviet system has effectively collapsed and power is increasingly transferring to the republics. The most recent decision, if sustained, by Russia, the Ukraine, Byelorussia and Kazakhstan, that the Soviet Union is no longer authorised to represent their economic interests, will have the most profound economic effects and will further complicate the question of paying for their armed forces. At the same time, if the present forces are split up between the republics, Russia alone would still have conventional forces larger than any other European state, and would remain a nulcear superpower. NATO's new strategic concept agreed at the Rome summit two weeks ago takes prudent account of these continuing capabilities.

Territorial Army

12. Mr. Thorne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what role he has in mind for the Territorial Army of the future.

21. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement setting forth the rationale for the proposed reduction of the Territorial Army units in Northern Ireland, particularly the RAYC and artillery units.

23. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he is in a position to announce the future shape of the Territorial Army.

Mr. Tom King: As I have made clear on several occasions the reserves, of which the Territorial Army is an integral part, will continue to make a vital contribution to our defence effort.

In the future, the TA will provide a wide range of capabilities, including participation in the ACE rapid reaction corps and in military home defence. I hope to make further announcements on the way ahead for the TA before the end of the year.

27. Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement on the future role, strength and composition of the Territorial Army.

Mr. Tom King: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave today to my hon. Friend the Member for Ilford, South (Mr. Thorne). I envisage that the long-term future strength of the Territorial Army will settle at between 60,000 and 65,000.

European Fighter Aircraft

16. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of his plans for Tornado updates and the European fighter aircraft.

Mr. Alan Clark: On Tornado, work is currently proceeding on the development and production planning phases of a mid-life update for the IDS aircraft, with a planned deployment date of the mid-1990s.

On European fighter aircraft, I have nothing to add to the answer I gave the hon. Member on 15 October.

Trident

19. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the first Trident missile submarine to be effectively in service.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: It is not our practice to make public the exact date upon which Royal Navy warships become operational, but I can tell my hon. Friend that Trident remains on course to enter service from the mid-1990s onwards.

NATO

20. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any further plans to initiate changes to the remit of NATO; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement which my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister made to the House on 12 November. The NATO summit meeting in Rome on 7 and 8 November completed the fundamental review of NATO strategy put in hand at the London summit in July 1990. The Government welcome the success of this review which has adapted NATO's role to the changed political circumstances in the new Europe.

European Defence Co-operation

22. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next plans to meet the Secretary-General of the Western European Union to discuss the joint British-Italian proposals for European defence co-operation.

Mr. Tom King: I attended a meeting of the WEU Ministerial Council in Bonn yesterday, at which a range of issues concerning the future role of the WEU were discussed.

Submarines

24. Sir Patrick Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what approaches have been made to potential overseas buyers with a view to the disposal of the conventional submarine fleet.

Mr. Alan Clark: Whenever naval vessels are to be disposed of, an investigation is made of possible overseas interest in purchase. Details of approaches to particular countries are matters of confidence between Governments.

Experimental Ranges

25. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps his Department intends to take to ensure that proof and experimental ranges are more environmentally aware.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: In line with our policy to increase environmental awareness within the Ministry of Defence, focal points have been established at the headquarters of the proof and experimental establishments and at all ranges under is control, to ensure that such issues are accorded due attention.

South-east Asia (Personnel Training)

26. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which countries in south-east Asia have in the past 12 months sent personnel to the United Kingdom for training at MoD establishments.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In the 12 months to 1 November 1991 the following countries in south-east Asia have sent personnel to the United Kingdom for training at MoD establishments:

Brunei
Hong Kong
Indonesia
Malaysia
Philippines
Singapore
Thailand

"Options for Change"

28. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the "Options for Change" implications for MoD and related employment in south Dorset.

Mr. Alan Clark: Decisions taken to date on "Options for Change" are likely to involve relatively little change to defence-related employment in south Dorset. Other decisions remain to be taken and full consideration will be given to employment aspects where appropriate. Employment in the Defence industry is a matter for the companies concerned.

Nuclear Test Veterans

29. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has recently received from the British Nuclear Test Veterans Association on compensation.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have received no recent representations from the British Nuclear Test Veterans Association on compensation.

Senior Officers (Newspaper Interviews)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, further to his answers of 14 November, Official Report, columns 667-68, relating to HMS Vanguard and Admiral Sir Julian Oswald's interview with The Times of 29 October 1991, if he will make it his practice to give in reply to parliamentary questions any information which may properly be given by senior serving officers and officials in interviews with newspapers.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is the practice of the Ministry of Defence to give appropriate information in response to questions asked by hon. Members, taking account of security and confidentiality constraints.

Musgrove Park Hospital (Bombing)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether there was a breach of Army security at the military wing of the Musgrove Park hospital on Saturday 2 November; and if he will make a statement on security at hospitals in Northern Ireland for army personnel.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The military wing of Musgrove Park hospital is not a military base but part of a national health service hospital. The terrorists who perpetrated this disgusting attack deliberately chose to carry a bomb through a civilian wing of the hospital and place it adjacent to the military wing. Appropriate security arrangements are taken to protect service personnel but, regrettably, total security cannot be achieved.

Guards Regiments

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many horses and troops will be available compared to the current position if his proposals to amalgamate the Blues and Royals and Life Guards are implemented; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Household Cavalry mounted regiment will consist, as at present, of two mounted squadrons, one from the Life Guards and one from the Blues and Royals, as well as a joint headquarters squadron. Each regiment will also contribute two squadrons to the Household Cavalry reconnaissance regiment. This regiment, which will be one of the two regular reconnaissance regiments, will also have a joint headquarters squadron.

Training Exercises (Deaths)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what are the criteria for establishing a board of inquiry for accidents to service personnel during training; and if such inquiries are set up in every case of death or serious disablement;

(2) if he will appoint a military ombudsman with responsibility for investigating complaints of Ministry of Defence secrecy from families of service personnel who die on training exercises.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The rules governing the convening and conduct of boards of inquiry are contained in Queen's regulations for the three services. While it is not mandatory to convene a formal board of inquiry in every case, all deaths or serious accidents in service are subject to an internal investigation either by a formal service inquiry or by the service police. We have no plans to appoint a military ombudsman.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) in how many cases of death of service personnel during training in each of the past five years have (a) families requested a full report of the board of inquiry and (b) his Ministry have not complied with this request;

(2) how many complaints have been received in the last five years from the families of service personnel, who died during training, about inadequate information concerning the deaths.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information is not available in the form requested.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will issue new policy guidelines to commanding officers requiring them to provide maximum information with the minimum of delay to families of service personnel who die during training exercises.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The services have detailed regulations, governing the action to be taken in the event of injury or death to service personnel.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel have (a) died and (b) been injured during training in each of the last five years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The number of deaths and injuries attributable to training or exercises in the three services in each of the last five years is set out in the table.

	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990
Deaths	19	14	15	22	7
Injuries	1,219	1,131	1,140	896	779

Notes:

1. The figures for injuries relate to episodes of bedded sickness of 48 hours or more.
2. The figures include sports injuries sustained by personnel while specifically training or on exercises.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence by what authority his Ministry declines to disclose to families details of the deaths of service personnel during peacetime training.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence has always provided details of the deaths of service personnel killed during training in response to a request from the bereaved family. This information takes the form of a specially prepared statement giving an accurate and objective summary of the service investigation.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will ensure that families of service personnel who die on training exercises are provided on request with full medical records of a deceased person, including the autopsy report.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Requests for the release of medical records will be considered on their merits in accordance with the Access to Health Records Act 1990.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what guidance is given to commanding officers regarding providing information to the families of service personnel who die in training exercises.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Procedures for the notification and assistance of next-of-kin on the death of service personnel are laid down in the regulations of each service.

Unoccupied Homes

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Ministry of Defence homes are currently unoccupied; and what percentage they are of the total stock.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As at 30 September 1991, the latest date for which figures are available, 9,966 Ministry of Defence owned houses and flats were vacant. Of these 9,834 were service married quarters and 132 Ministry of Defence civilian houses, representing 13·4 per cent. and 9·5 per cent. of the stock respectively. Many of these properties were either undergoing or awaiting major maintenance work or modernisation, some were already allotted to service families who were due to move in shortly and others were being considered for disposal.

In addition, some 1,700 dwellings were in the process of being sold.

Regiments

Mrs. Heal: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will detail the assessment he has made on the number of service and ancillary redundancies that will result from an amalgamation of the Staffordshire Regiment and the Cheshire Regiment.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Redundancies will be spread across the Army, and will not be concentrated in Regiments that are due to be amalgamated. Until the applications for redundancy have been assessed it is not possible to provide the detail requested.

Mrs. Heal: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why he decided not to consult or warn the colonel of the Staffordshire Regiment of the likelihood of amalgamation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: All regimental colonels were invited to express their views about how the reductions were to be achieved, but none were told of the Army Board's decisions before the day of the announcement.

Mrs. Heal: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will detail the assessment he has made of the extra burden on local authority housing provision in Staffordshire and the west midlands resulting from the service job losses created by an amalgamation of the Staffordshire Regiment and the Cheshire Regiment.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I am not able to make such an assessment. Redundancies will be spread across the Army and not confined to those units which are to be amalgamated or disbanded. It is not possible to state at this time how many members of the Staffordshire Regiment or the Cheshire Regiment will be made redundant. Nor do we have any information on the proportion of those made redundant who will wish to settle in Staffordshire and the west midlands and who will be seeking local authority housing. We believe that the majority will be in a position to make other arrangements for their housing.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the inquiry to be carried out into the safety and security of Britain's nuclear weapons led by his Department's chief scientific adviser will address issues identified by the Drell report to the United States Congress in December 1990.

Mr. Alan Clark: The terms of reference of the group are:

"To review, in the light of any relevant aspects of the report of the Drell panel in the United States, the safety of the present and prospective UK nuclear armoury."

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether all transportation of United Kingdom nuclear weapons will be stopped pending the outcome of his Department's inquiry into the safety and security of British nuclear weapons in the light of the Drell report to the United States Congress in December 1990.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the inquiry into the safety and security of British nuclear weapons will use the same computer modelling techniques as those employed on United States weapons for the Drell report to the United States Congress.

Mr. Alan Clark: The working group is free to conduct the review as it sees fit.

Gulf War

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on the total number of civilian deaths caused by bombing during the Gulf war in Iraq, Kuwait and Israel, respectively.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We have no authoritative information on civilian casualties sustained in Iraq or Kuwait during the coalition bombing campaign. In the middle of February, an Israeli Minister said that 13 people had died during Iraqi Scud missile attacks and 1,305 were injured.

Greek Campaign (Commemorative Medal)

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met his counterpart in the Greek Government to discuss the issue of a commemorative medal for participants in the Greek campaign.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Secretary of State maintains regular contact with his NATO colleagues on issues of mutual interest.

Defence Industry (Job Losses)

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on plans to promote alternative jobs to offset losses in the defence industry in the foreseeable future.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 18 November 1991]: The promotion, creation and sustenance of jobs are matters for industry.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 20 November 1991

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Jasbir Singh

Mr. Madden: To ask the Attorney-General whether the Department of Public Prosecutions plans to institute any prosecutions arising out of the unlawful killing of Jasbir Singh, following the inquest held by the Bradford coroner.

The Attorney-General: On 1 November 1991 the West Yorkshire police submitted a report which is being considered at CPS headquarters.

Private Office Staff

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General what are the numbers of staff he has in his private office; and what was the equivalent number in 1981.

The Attorney-General: Three officials staff the private office serving both myself and the Solicitor-General. The private office was set up in September 1989. Previously each Law Officer was served by a senior personal secretary only.

County Courts

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General what is the income received in fees for each county court in England and Wales.

The Attorney-General: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. There are some 275 county courts in England and Wales and in 1990-91 the total income received in county court fees was £134,852,000.

Immigration Tribunal

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General how many times he has visited the offices of the Immigration Appeal Tribunal since taking office.

The Attorney-General: I have not visited the offices of the Immigration Appeal Tribunal.

Sodigar Hussain

Mr. Madden: To ask the Attorney-General when the appeal by Mr. Sodigar Hussain—TH/4303/90—was heard in Leeds; when Mr. Hussain or his representatives were informed of the outcome; what is the current position of this appeal; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The appeal of Mr. Sodigar Hussain (TH/4303/90) was heard by the adjudicator at Leeds on 21 August 1991. On 4 October 1991 the adjudicator's determination, dismissing the appeal, was dispatched to the parties' representatives in this country, and on 22 October 1991 Mr. Hussain's representatives lodged an application for leave to appeal to the Immigration Appeal Tribunal against the adjudicator's determination. The current position is that the president of the IAT has adjourned consideration of the application until 12 December 1991, to allow Mr. Hussain's representatives to submit grounds of appeal, if they so wish.

It would be inappropriate for me to comment on the decision of the adjudicator to dismiss the appeal or that of the President of the IAT to adjourn consideration of the application for leave to appeal until 12 December 1991 as they are both judicial decisions.

TRANSPORT

Cardiff Airport

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many international flights arrive from overseas destinations each week into Cardiff airport; how many flights per week arrive from Florida; and how many flights a week arrive from Amsterdam.

Mr. McLoughlin: In the 1991 summer season, there were about 88 international flights each week into Cardiff airport, of which 45 were scheduled services and 43 were charter services. Of the total number, one flight was from Florida (charter) and 18 were from Amsterdam (scheduled).

For the 1991-92 winter season there will be about 75 international flights into Cardiff airport, of which 57 will be scheduled services and 18 will be charter services. Of the total, none will be from Florida and 19 scheduled flights from Amsterdam.

Merchant Navy

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to publish his review on the strategic role of the Merchant Navy.

Mr. McLoughlin: A statement will be made on the availability of British flag shipping for defence purposes as soon as possible.

Street Lighting

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will commit funds to local authorities to improve street lighting in high crime areas.

Mr. Chope: Local authorities already have the freedom to commit funds to the improvement of street lighting.

Margaret and William II

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the progress of the investigation into the loss of the Newlyn fishing vessel, Margaret and William II.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Marine Accident Investigation Branch inquiry into this accident is complete and the inspector who carried out the investigation has submitted his findings and recommendations to the chief inspector of marine accidents. A report on the accident will be published.

White Strobe Lights

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many structures in (a) the Solent area and (b) the United Kingdom are going to be fitted with the new white strobe lights under the International Civil Aviation Organisation requirement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The application of the International Civil Aviation Organisation requirements for the lighting of aeronautical obstructions, is a matter for the Civil Aviation Authority, which has the statutory responsibility for the safety regulation of civil aviation within the United Kingdom. I have drawn the hon. Member's question to the attention of the Civil Aviation Authority and have asked it to write to him direct.

War (Shipping Requirements)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to announce what the shipping requirements in times of conflict should be.

Mr. McLoughlin: Shipping requirements in times of conflict will depend on the type of conflict. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence is considering the military requirements in the light of the NATO Heads of State and Governments' recent agreement in Rome.

Blind and Partially Sighted People.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe, of 12 November, Official Report, column 429, if he has now received a copy of the report "Blind and Partially Sighted Adults in Britain—The RNIB Needs Survey"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: I congratulate the RNIB on this comprehensive report. It will be very helpful to the Department of Transport in its continuing programme of work to improve facilities both in public transport and in the pedestrian environment for blind and partially sighted people.

ENVIRONMENT

Inland Waterways

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to alter (a) by statute or (b) in any other way, the membership or function of the Inland Waterways Amenity advisory committee.

Mr. Heseltine: We are currently considering the structure and role of the Council in the light of the citizens charter and other relevant matters in consultation with its chairman and with the chairman of the British Waterways Board. The terms of existing members expire at the end of 1991 and I am consulting both chairmen on future appointments.

House Building

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice has been given by regional controllers to local authorities concerning the treatment of funding required for new build projects, in negotiations on the level of housing investment programmes for the next financial year.

Mr. Yeo: The Department's housing regional controllers remind local authorities during annual discussions on housing investment programmes of the Government's policy that they should fulfil in the main an enabling role in their area, and should concentrate their efforts on the renovation of their own stock. Scarce resources should be directed to where they will be best employed or where best value for money may be obtained, for example by taking advantage of private finance through sponsoring housing associations' developments.

Planning Appeals

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many planning appeals have been lodged with his Department in each year since 1985 against refusal by a planning authority to allow the fitting of security shutters or other external security features on shop premises; and what percentage of these appeals were successful.

Mr. Yeo: The information held by the Department about planning appeals makes it possible to identify appeals affecting shop fronts, but not those concerned specifically with the security of shops.

Hedegerows

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about his Department's proposals to introduce grants for hedgerow maintenance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Following announcement of our proposals in July, the Department has received comments from a range of interested parties, including local authorities, landowning and farming bodies, and environmental groups. Our intention to provide new incentives for hedgerow management has been broadly welcomed and we are discussing with the Countryside Commission and others the detailed scope and terms of the proposed scheme. We shall be making a further statement in due course.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to introduce grants for hedgerow maintenance.

Mr. Baldry: We hope to make our proposed new incentives for hedgerow management available next year.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his answer of 11 November, Official Report, column 395-96, when his discussions with the Countryside Commission and others on the proposed incentive scheme will be completed; and when the proposals will be implemented.

Mr. Baldry: Our discussions on a scheme to provide new incentives for hedgerow management are making good progress, and we shall make a further statement as soon as possible. We plan to establish the proposed scheme in the coming year.

Retailers (Security)

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what quality standards are required for security features such as shutters, grilles and glass fitted in commercial or retail premises in the United Kingdom; and what information he has on comparable standards prevailing in other EC countries.

Mr. Yeo: There are no statutory requirements expressly requiring or applying to the fitting of security features in commercial or retail premises in the United Kingdom.

Voluntary guidance relating to the security of buildings against crime is contained in British standard 8220. Part 2 applies to offices and shops and part 3 applies to warehouses and distribution units.

The Department does not keep information on the technical standards and practices applying to security features in commercial and retail premises in other member states. However, information on technical standards is available from BSI's technical help for exporters service based at Milton Keynes. The telephone number is 0908 220022.

Homelessness

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress he has made since March 1991 on assisting Homeless Emergency for London People to get blankets from Government stocks.

Sir George Young: The Government are providing grants under section 73 of the Housing Act 1985 to over 80 voluntary organisations in England for practical projects to prevent and relieve homelessness. Homeless Emergency for London People, whose initiative on behalf of the homeless I welcome, has not asked my Department for direct assistance since March 1991. HELP was invited to bid for funds in February but no formal application was received from it.

Enterprise Zones

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to review his policy on enterprise zones following completion of his Department's study by PA-Cambridge Economic Consultants assessing the impact of enterprise zones; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The final evaluation of enterprise zones by PA-CEC will not be completed until 1995. Our policy remains that the creation of new zones will be considered only in exceptional circumstances.

Water (Consultations)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidelines govern the consultations on water quality, water use and flood prevention strategies to be incorporated in environmental impact assessments to accompany private and hybrid bills; and if consultations require obligatory reference to the National Rivers Authority.

Mr. Yeo: An environmental statement deposited with a new private or hybrid Bill authorising the carrying out of works will, in accordance with Standing Order 27A (Private Business), generally be expected to contain all the information set out in schedule 3 to the Town and Country Planning (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations 1988. This includes the likely effects of the proposed works on the environment by reference to their possible impacts on water. Promoters are advised when preparing their environmental statement to consult those bodies with relevant information in their possession including, where appropriate, the National Rivers Authority.

Flame Retardants

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current state of negotiations within the EC with regard to the Commission proposal 91/7 on the marketing and use of bromine-based flame retardants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The proposal is for an immediate ban on the marketing and use of seven polybrominated biphenyl ethers (PBBEs) with three more (pentabromobiphenyl ether, octabromobiphenyl ether, and decabromobiphenyl ether) banned after five years. The Government's position on this proposal was debated in the House of Commons European Standing Committee A on 17 July 1991. The proposal was last discussed in the EC in a Council working group meeting on 1 October.

There are two major problems with the current proposal. Firstly, due to a technical oversight in the wording, the three substances which the Commission had intended should remain on the market for a further five years will effectively be banned immediately. Secondly, the efficacy and safety of substitute compounds has not been addressed. The United Kingdom is concerned that, prior to a final ban, substitutes are assessed to ensure that they are effective flame retardants and demonstrably safer to man and the environment. A ban should only follow if the efficacy and safety criteria are met.

I understand that the European Parliament Environment Committee has decided to defer consideration of this proposal until a directive on flame retardant materials used in soft furnishings is drafted. This directive will help to inform the debate on the efficacy of substitutes.

Genetically Manipulated Organisms

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to publish the draft regulations on genetically manipulated organisms.

Mr. Baldry: A consultation paper containing draft regulations, "Genetically Modified Organisms (GMOs): Proposed New Regulations", was published jointly with the Health and Safety Commission on 22 October 1991.

Drinking Water

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the findings of the drinking water inspectorate into the outbreak of cryptosporidia in the Hull area during 1990.

Mr. Baldry: The investigation by the drinking water inspectorate is nearing completion, and an announcement will be made as soon as possible.

Severance Payments

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department proposes to take any action to permit the payment of local enhanced severance payments following the judgment in the case of Allsop v. North Tyneside metropolitan borough council.

Mr. Key: I understand that the metropolitan borough of North Tyneside has appealed against the judgment. The matter is therefore sub judice.

Council House Sales

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the capital receipts from council house sales in each district in his Department's eastern region for each of the last five years.

Mr. Yeo: The total discounted values of all sales of houses and flats, based on returns from local authorities, are shown in the table. Actual cash receipts in any year will depend on the extent to which sales were financed by loans from the authorities.

Oil Pollution (Kuwait)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the International Council for Bird Preservation on the subject of assistance for Kuwait in tackling the problems caused to bird populations by remaining pools of oil.

Mr. Baldry: I had an exchange of correspondence on this matter with the International Council for Bird Preservation in June and July of this year.

Lead

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what standards exist for the presence of lead and derivatives of lead in (a) soil and (b) air;

(2) what agency is responsible for the implementation of standards on the presence of lead and derivatives of lead in (a) soil and (b) air; and what guidance he has given to such agencies to report their findings and activities to his Department.

Mr. Baldry: (a) The Sludge (Use in Agriculture) Regulations 1989 set down a lead in soil standard of 300 milligrams per kilogram of dry matter. This only applies to those agricultural soils which receive sewage sludge. The regulations are enforced by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. (b) A maximum concentration of 2 micrograms of lead per cubic metre (expressed as an annual mean concentration) is set down in the Air Quality Standards Regulations 1989 which are enforced by the Secretary of State. Compliance is checked at air quality monitoring stations and results reported to the Secretary of State.

Waste (Burning)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what regulations exist for the control of the burning of chlorine or PVC-based waste; and what agency is responsible for the implementation of such controls.

Mr. Baldry: The control of existing plant burning chlorine or PVC-based waste is presently subject to the following regulations:

The Collection and Disposal of Waste Regulations 1988.
The Control of Industrial Air Pollution (Registration of Works) Regulations 1989.

The Collection and Disposal of Waste Regulations are enforced by waste disposal authorities. The Control of Industrial Air Pollution Regulations are enforced by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

Since 1 April 1991, new incinerator plant for these wastes has been subject to the Environmental Protection (Prescribed Processes and Substances) Regulations 1991, enforced by either HMIP or local authorities depending on the exact nature of the waste and the capacity of the incinerator. Existing incinerators will progressively be brought under these controls.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many sites of special scientific interest are within 100 m of proposed local road routes.

Mr. Baldry: This information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Hook Island

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if a reservoir appraisal, as outlined in appendix B of the planning circular 2/85, has been carried out in the case of the proposed Hook island, Poole harbour, development; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if the procedure outlined in appendix A of planning circular 2/85 has been invoked in the case of the proposed Hook island, Poole harbour, development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 14 November 1991]: Appendix B of DOE circular 2/85 explains the three stages of onshore hydrocarbon development: exploration, appraisal and production. Appendix A of DOE circular 2/85 explains the Department of Energy's licensing procedures which apply to all oil and gas development. BP carried out offshore appraisal drilling in Poole bay in 1988-89 following consultations with local interests and the completion of an environmental assessment.

Following successful appraisal drilling to determine the extent of the Wytch Farm oilfield, BP consulted widely on various development concepts. Its preferred option is the construction of an artificial island large enough to accommodate a well site and drilling facilities on which a conventional land-type drilling rig could be operated. Because the island would be in navigable waters, it is necessary for the construction of the island and the works associated with it to have the authority of Parliament. However, the Bill provides that the area of the sea bed on which BP proposes to construct the island will become part of Dorset for planning purposes. This means that, if the Bill is granted consent, no development will take place unless planning approval is obtained from Dorset county council, or the Secretary of State on appeal.

Sea Pollution

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response he has made to the Public Accounts Committee report on oil and chemical pollution at sea.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have been asked to reply.

The Treasury minute in response to the 40th report by the Public Accounts Committee on oil and chemical pollution at sea is currently being drafted and will be published shortly.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Crime Prevention

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which cities are eligible to apply for specific crime prevention projects funding under (a) the safer cities programme and (b) urban programme schemes; and if he will list those cities in the last 18 months which have made successful bids for specific crime prevention projects.

Mr. John Patten: The 19 areas where the Home Office has established safer cities projects, listed in the table, are eligible for Home Office grants for specific crime prevention schemes. All have received funding in the last 18 months except Derby, Leicester and Middlesbrough, where projects began operation only this autumn.

Fifty-seven designated districts, also listed in the table, are eligible to apply for Department of the Environment funding under the urban programme. Those marked with an asterisk have included crime prevention projects in their programme for 1991-92, the only period for which I understand this information is available.

Kerb Crawling

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the number of motorists convicted of kerb crawling in the Greater London area from January to October 1991.

Mr. John Patten: Information is not yet available for 1990 and 1991. In England and Wales in 1989 there were 891 males convicted of kerb crawling. Of these 49 were within the Metropolitan police district and none within the City of London police force area.

Criminal Injuries (Compensation)

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average length of time which elapses between the date of criminal injury and the payment of compensation in respect of that injury.

Mr. John Patten: The Criminal Injuries Compensation Board does not record centrally the period between the dates of incident and registration of claim. Nor does it produce an average time for processing applications. However, percentages of cases completed within certain periods of registration are shown in the board's annual reports, copies of which are in the Library.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of incidents recorded per uniformed police officer for the year 1990-91 in (a) Weybridge, Surrey and (b) Newcastle upon Tyne.

Mr. John Patten: Figures are not available.

Northumbria Police Authority

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he proposes to reply to recent representations from the Northumbria police authority.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. Friend has received a request from Northumbria police authority for a special payment to meet costs arising from the recent disturbances on Tyneside. This is receiving urgent consideration and my right hon. Friend will reply as soon as possible.

Political Asylum

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when Mr. Daya Pal Singh and his wife (S 672230/2(S)), Mr. Harvinder Pal Singh (S 672231/2 (S)) and Mr. Hari Pal Singh (S 672909/2 (S)), all relatives of Mr. Mohinder Paul Singh Bedi of Hayes, applied for political asylum in the United Kingdom; what is their current status in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No.

The hon. Member will understand that it has been the practice of successive Governments not to confirm or deny whether an individual has made a claim for political asylum in the United Kingdom.

Police Cells

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment is made of the mental health of people held on remand in police cells in England and Wales when they are remanded.

Mrs. Angela Rumbold: Arrangements for caring for prisoners in police cells are for chief officers of police. I understand that the prisoners concerned are normally assessed by a police doctor on reception.

Prison Accommodation

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are taken to ensure that prisoners for whom prison cell accommodation is not suitable are given acceptable alternatives.

Mrs. Angela Rumbold: The only circumstances under which prison cell accommodation could be considered unsuitable would be on medical grounds. In such cases the inmate would be accommodated in the establishment's health centre or, if necessary, transferred to hospital.

Children and Young Persons Act

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state (a) the number of children detained in relation to section 53 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 in each of the past 15 years, (b) the average length of detention or imprisonment undertaken by such offenders, (c) how many have been released under licence and (d) in how many cases licences were revoked; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Angela Rumbold [holding answer 13 November 1991]: The readily available information on the number of persons sentenced in England and Wales to detention under section 53 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 is given in table 1. The lengths of sentence imposed on those sentenced under section 53(2) are shown in table 2.

Further information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Information about the number of juveniles received into and detained in prison service establishments under section 53 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 are published annually in "Prison Statistics England and Wales", tables 3.2 and 3.13 of the volume for 1989, Cm 1221, copies of which are in the Library.

The numbers of prisoners released from prison service establishments in England and Wales on licence from detention during Her Majesty's pleasure under section 53(1) or for life under section 53(2), showing the average times served, are given in table 3.

The majority of prisoners discharged from determinate detention under section 53(2) are released on licence before the end of sentence. In 1987, of the 140 detainees released from prison service establishments, about 90 were released on licence; in 1988 the figures were 120 and 100.

The numbers recalled in 1990 from licence after determinate sentences under the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 are published in table 5 of the Parole Board's annual report for 1990 (HC 481), a copy of which is in the Library.

Publicity

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide an up-to-date list of each television advertising campaign carried out, or to be carried out, by (a) the Home Office and (b) the Metropolitan police during 1991-92, and of each other publicity campaign costing more than £100,000, giving for each (i) the topic, (ii) the commencement date, (iii) the duration and (iv) the advertising, promotional and public relations companies involved.

Mr. Kenneth Baker [pursuant to his reply, 5 November 1991, c. 34-36]: The Commissioner has told me that in 1991-92 the Metropolitan police service is funding one television advertising campaign, which is for police recruitment. This is a part of recruitment advertising for the service which, in this period, is the only campaign costing more than £100,000. It is a continuing campaign carried on throughout the year and is being handled by Collett, Dickenson, Pearce and Partners Ltd. and Moxon, Dolphin and Kerby.

THE ARTS

Library Association

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received from the Library Association about the views he attributed to the association in his reply to the hon. Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody) on 11 November, Official Report, column 776.

Mr. Renton: I am glad to have this opportunity of correcting a slip of the tongue in my reply to a supplementary question from the hon. Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody) on 11 November, Official Report, column 776. I referred to the Library Association when I intended to quote the report "Libraries Choice", which said that the key issues facing public library authorities were not necessarily financial but were those of attitude, choice and commitment. I have acknowledged this in a letter to the Library Association and have copied the exchange of correspondence to the hon. Members for Crewe and Nantwich and for Stoke on Trent, Central.

WALES

Special Schools

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the initiatives he has taken to assist pupils and teachers in special schools; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: It is for local education authorities to ensure that appropriate provision is made in schools for children with special educational needs. The Welsh Office has issued guidance to LEAs and others on staffing for pupils with special needs and on the procedures associated with the assessment and statementing processes of the Education Act 1981. Further, the Department has made grant available, which is being continued in 1992-93, under the grants for education support and training scheme (GEST), for the in-service training of teachers of pupils who are visually or hearing impaired or who have severe learning difficulties and for the initial training of educational psychologists.

More widely, we are providing support to LEAs under the GEST programme for the implementation of school teacher appraisal schemes. Appraisal will help teachers, including those in special schools, to improve their professional skills and develop their full potential.

Blind and Partially Sighted People

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he proposes to assist the blind and the partially sighted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) on 12 November 1991.

Hearing Impaired People

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he proposes to assist those who are deaf or hearing impaired.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Under the provisions of the NHS and Community Care Act 1990, social services authorities are to publish their first social care plans by 1 April 1992. These plans, which in Wales are to be prepared jointly with all other relevant authorities and service providers, and representatives of user and carer interests, will include hearing impairment services and set out the way in which authorities intend to assess and meet peoples needs. The Welsh Office has issued guidance to the authorities on the preparation and content of these plans and on assessment and care management.

This has recently been supplemented by the publication of the latest of the Welsh Health Planning Forum's protocols for investment in health services to achieve health gain, which covers the needs of those with physical or sensory disabilities. The Welsh Office is working closely with authorities in the preparation of draft plans to ensure that they address adequately the needs of all client groups.

The Welsh Office is making available £1·6 million in the current financial year to encourage the development of more flexible forms of community care for elderly people and those with physical and/or sensory disabilities. So far, 39 projects have been approved, with more in the pipeline, and a circular inviting applications for schemes beginning in 1992-93 was issued in October. We are also making available £600,000 in 1991-92 to organisations active at an all-Wales level in promoting the interests of the elderly and of those with disabilities. Among these are the Wales Council for the Disabled (£250,000) and the Wales Council for the Deaf (£94,000).

The Children Act, which came into effect from 14 October, lays a general duty on social services authorities to promote the welfare of children who are in need by providing an appropriate range and level of services. Section 17 of the Act defines children in need so as to include deaf or hearing impaired children. The provision of education for such children is a matter for local education authorities. However, the Welsh Office has made grant available, which is to continue in 1992-93, under the grants for education support and training programme for the in-service training of teachers of the deaf/hearing impaired. Further, the Department has invited bids for grant aid under GEST for the development of a regional centre for the educational needs of those who are deaf and blind. Bids are currently being considered.

Homelessness

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people in each district council area are (a) registered as homeless or (b) on the housing waiting list.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: (a) People do not register as homeless but present themselves, together with other members of their household, to the housing authority. The numbers of people within households accepted as homeless by local authorities under the Housing Act 1985 in the quarter ended 30 June 1991 are given in the following table:

Home Repossessions

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many homes have been repossessed by loan or mortgage companies and building societies in each county of Wales during the current year.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Only the total numbers of warrants of repossession are available; those relating specifically to mortgages are not collected separately. However, separate data are available on the number of repossession orders made following mortgage actions. The numbers given in the following table relate to totals of orders made through courts within an area and as such do not correspond directly to the number of homes within that area on which orders were made.

Geography

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to publish an order to introduce a geography short course for key stage 4 in the national curriculum.

Mr. David Hunt: I have published today an order specifying the attainment targets and programmes of study for a short geography course at key stage 4. These documents will come into effect from August 1994.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Bank Notes

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) when he last considered the privatisation of the Bank of England printing works at Loughton, Essex; what conclusions were reached; and what is the latest estimate of the proceeds that would accrue from such a privatisation;

(2) if he will make it his policy to seek competitive tenders for the production of Bank of England bank notes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maples: The printing of bank notes is the Bank of England's responsibility. The bank is, however, fully conscious of the need to ensure that bank notes are produced as cheaply as possible, consistent with maintaining the security and integrity of the note issue and it has assured me that it will take whatever steps it considers necessary to achieve that.

BCCI

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has about the invoicing of fees by Price Waterhouse to the Bank of Credit and Commerce International.

Mr. Maples: None.

Bank Regulation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any plans to create a Banking Commission to regulate all banks in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maples: No.

Income Disposal

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the percentage of gross earnings going in (a) income tax, (b) national insurance contributions, (c) VAT, (d) other indirect taxes and (e) the poll tax, of (i) a single person, (ii) a married couple both working, and (iii) a married couple with two children, on (1) 50 per cent., (2) 75 per cent., (3) 100 per cent., (4) 150 per cent., (5) 200 per cent., (6) 500 per cent. and (7) 1,000 per cent. of average earnings in each year since 1978-79

Mr. Maude [holding answer 19 November 1991]: Figures for 1978-79 to 1987-88 have been placed in the Library of the House, as noted in the Official Report, 13 April 1989, column 624. Figures for 1988-89 and 1989-90 were published in the Official Report, 5 July 1990, columns 699-702. Updated figures for 1990-91 and the latest estimates for 1991-92 are given in the tables.

Notes:

1. Income tax payments are calculated on the assumption that the households receive no tax reliefs other than the standard allowances and only have income from employment. All earners, including wives, are assumed to pay class 1 NI contributions at the contracted-in rate.
2. Since 1990-91, husbands and wives have been taxed independently. Previously the tax liability of couples depended on their joint income. To permit comparisons with earlier years, the table therefore shows income tax and national insurance contributions paid by a married couple as a proportion of their joint income, assuming, as in the earlier years, that where both partners are earners, the husband and wife share the relevant multiple of earnings in the ratio 60:40.
3. In order to provide comparability with 1978-79, when support for children was given partly through child tax allowance, child benefit is treated as a negative income tax for the married couple with two children. (For 1991-92, the child benefit figure is a financial year average).

4. Average earnings are taken to be the average gross weekly earnings of all full-time males on adult rates with pay unaffected by absence. These are estimated to be £307·00 per week in 1990-91 and £330·80 per week in 1991-92, using the Government Actuary's Department's assumption of 7¾ per cent. growth in whole economy underlying earnings over 1990-91 as published in the 1991 autumn statement.

5. The estimates of indirect taxes are based on equations derived from the 1985 family expenditure survey, uprated to later years using forecasts of aggregate tax receipts. They are based on the illustrative assumption that 10 per cent. of disposable income is saved. There are wide variations in spending patterns between households with the same composition and similar incomes and estimated payments of VAT and other indirect taxes are therefore approximate, even within the income range for which figures are shown. Outside this range, the margin of error is even higher and reliable estimates cannot be made. Because of sampling variation, there can be substantial differences between estimates obtained from family expenditure surveys for different years.

6. It has not been possible to make satisfactory estimates of the burden of the community charge in the absence of sample survey results, which would enable actual payments net of adjustments arising the community charge reduction scheme etc. to be related to earnings.

Bank Loans

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give comparable figures for the proportion of bank loans to industry which are for periods of five years or more, for each OECD country, for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Maples [holding answer 18 November 1991]: No data are available in the form requested—that is, differentiating loans for terms of more or less than five years. However, data are available for loans for more or less than two years—the standard system of national accounts split short term v. long term—for the countries shown in the table. These are published in OECD Financial Statistics Part 3, Non-Financial Enterprises Financial Statements balance sheets. The figures are for amounts outstanding in the latest year available, as indicated.

PRIME MINISTER

Debt Relief

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister whether he has any plans to extend the debt relief he announced at the Commonwealth Heads of Government summit to all low income debtor countries.

The Prime Minister: There are no plans to extend Trinidad terms beyond the poorest and most indebted countries. There is widespread agreement that these countries have the most pressing problems. It is right, therefore, that our priority should be to address their problems. So far 22 very poor and indebted countries have benefited from the existing Toronto terms debt reduction package—another United Kingdom initiative. Although the precise criteria for eligibility for the Trinidad terms package are still being worked out in practice, those that qualify will enjoy a much more generous treatment than that presently available under Toronto terms.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Salmonella

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress he has made in his negotiations in the Council of Ministers in introducing Community-wide measures to control salmonella in poultry units.

Mr. Maclean: We have continued to press for Community-wide controls on salmonella to be introduced as soon as possible. The European Commission has now published proposals for a regulation on the control of salmonella and certain other zoonoses throughout the European Community. This is a significant step forward and will provide a useful framework for discussions.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his current policy on slaughtering salmonella-infected egg-laying poultry flocks.

Mr. Maclean: Poultry laying flocks in which the presence of salmonella enteritidis has been confirmed are required to be compulsorily slaughtered with compensation. On 31 October we announced that owners of poultry laying flocks infected with salmonella enteritidis and poultry breeding flocks infected with salmonella enteritidis or salmonella typhimurium would be given the option of sending their eggs for pasteurisation. This option will become available when pasteurisation plants have applied for, and have been granted, approval to process eggs from infected flocks.

Fallen Animals

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has concerning the numbers of dead farm animals disposed of improperly; and if he will collect details from highways authorities concerning the numbers of farm animal carcasses they collect.

Mr. Maclean: We have received some reports of unburied animals and illegal dumping, but as the Agriculture Select Committee accepted in its recent report, most are anecdotal. However, the state veterinary service continues to monitor the situation very closely in consultation with all interested authorities.

Quarantine

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has concerning the number of attempts to break Britain's animal quarantine laws during the last two years; what species of animals were involved; and how many confirmed cases of rabies have been identified in animals either in or outside quarantine during that period.

Mr. Maclean: There were 80 prosecutions in 1989 and 1990 for breaches of the Rabies (Importation of Dogs, Cats and Other Mammals) Order 1974, as amended. The majority involved dogs and cats. Others related to rodents, primates, rabbits, ferrets, a hedgehog and a margay cat. Since the beginning of 1989, there has been one case of rabies identified in a dog in quarantine.

Battery Cages

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made at the Council of Ministers in respect of the development of new standards of battery cages for laying poultry.

Mr. Maclean: The Commission is reviewing egg production systems, as required by the EC battery hens directive. I understand that its report, with proposals for revised welfare standards, is likely to be submitted to the Council in the second half of 1992. The United Kingdom will be pressing for significant improvements in welfare conditions and for the directive to be extended to non-cage systems.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research he is undertaking into cattle disease indistinguishable in symptoms from BSE but not proven as BSE by post-mortem examination.

Mr. Maclean: There are several common diseases of cattle in which the clinical signs are similar to some of the symptoms of BSE, most notably hypomagnesaemia, nervous ketosis, hypocalacemia and listeriosis. A proportion of clinically suspect cases of BSE which do not have the post-mortem changes of the disease is therefore to be expected. Hypersensitivity, agression or recumbency may frequently prevent investigations into alternative causes either because farm staff will be at risk of injury, or because suspects have to be destroyed in order to prevent further suffering. Nevertheless, histopathological studies of the brains of such cattle have been carried out and no new significant neurological diseases have been detected. We will continue to monitor such cases through the epidemic.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a table for each county of England and Wales for each month of 1991 to date showing the number of cattle slaughtered as BSE suspect; and how many and what percentage of cases were subsequently confirmed by post-mortem examinations.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is in the table:

Bovine Tuberculosis

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the number of occurences of bovine tuberculosis and the numbers of cattle affected and destroyed for each of the last 24 quarters; and if he will make a statement on the evidence linking badgers to such outbreaks.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is given in the following table. None of the cattle destroyed was showing clinical signs of tuberculosis. Every confirmed outbreak is investigated and all other sources of infection are eliminated before the possibility of cross-infection from badgers is assessed. This is based upon badger activity on the breakdown farm together with historical information on badger-related infection in the parish. In the majority of cases where a badger origin has been suspected, infection has been confirmed in badgers killed during MAFF control operations.

Year/Quarter	Number of herds with cattle reacting to tuberculin test	Number of herds with infection confirmed in quarter	Cases attributed to badgers	Number of cattle destroyed having reacted to test	Number of cattle in which infection confirmed by post mortem and/or culture of organism

Sea Fish Industry Authority

Mr. Franks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make an announcement about the review of the Sea Fish Industry Authority carried out by Fisheries Departments.

Mr. Curry: Officials from Fisheries Departments were asked to carry out a fundamental review of the Sea Fish Industry Authority's future role, and the levy and basis of industry funding on the fisheries industry which would be necessary to support these activities. Their report is being made public and copies placed in the Libraries of the House. Certain other recommendations to the chairman on organisation and staffing will remain confidential.

The report recommends that the SFIA should continue to carry out the majority of its functions but should cease its generic advertising campaign, allowing the levy rate to be reduced to the level which applied before the most recent increase. The report also makes a number of other recommendations about the application of the levy, the constitution of the SFIA board and improvements to efficiency.

Fisheries Ministers have considered the report carefully and accept the broad thrust of its conclusions. We consider that the SFIA, since its creation in 1981, has contributed substantially to the development of the sea fisheries industry. We endorse the review's finding that the research and development and training role of the authority is, in general, strongly supported by the industry. We feel that it should continue to work broadly along existing lines. We agree that various functional and organisational changes should be made to make the SFIA more efficient and cost effective.

We endorse the reviewers' conclusion that the SFIA should terminate its generic advertising campaign, but should continue its more specific marketing and promotional programme. We also agree with the view from the industry that a reduction in the levy would be desirable, as it would help to lighten the industry's financial burden. The saving from ending generic advertising would be £1·3 million out of a current budget of £8·3 million and would enable the levy to be reduced to £7 per tonne. We propose asking the SFIA to take the necessary steps.

We also agree with the recommendations that the levy should not be extended to salmon, trout, canned or bottled fish or applied on an ad valorem basis.

Fisheries Ministers wish all sectors of the industry to be satisfied that their views on the SFIA's plans and budget have been properly considered and that they have adequate representation on the SFIA board. However, we feel that these issues can be taken into account without the need to amend primary legislation if the SFIA and the industry work together to follow up the report's recommendations for greater industry participation in SFIA advisory committees and in drawing up nominations for the SFIA board. We propose to ask the SFIA to consider adjustments to its organisational structure in the light of these and of the various other recommendations for improving efficiency.

Officials are today writing to organisations with an interest in the SFIA giving them a further opportunity to comment on the action now proposed before final decisions are taken. I have also met the chairman of the authority. To end the period of uncertainty about SFIA's future, our intention is to make a final announcement before the end of this year.

Japanese Cattle

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what arrangements exist between the United Kingdom and Japan covering the imports of Japanese cattle;

(2) whether he will permit the import of Kobe cattle from Japan.

Mr. Maclean: Japan is not on the list of third countries from which member states of the European Community are permitted to import bovine animals and no arrangements exist for the importation of Japanese cattle, including Kobe cattle, into the United Kingdom.

Dioxins and Furans

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what tests his Ministry has carried out on the levels of dioxins and furans in mothers and babies; and whether the results of these tests have been published.

Mr. Maclean: In 1989 the Department analysed single pooled samples of human milk from both Glasgow and Edinburgh for dioxins and furans as part of a worldwide survey conducted by the WHO regional office for Europe. The results, which were similar to those reported by other western European countries, were published in a scientific paper, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the cost of offering environmentally sensitive area grants to farmers in each of the national parks in England and Wales using similar take-up percentages as exist in those areas which are of a similar nature and region.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to the answer, 13 November 1991]: I am today announcing my proposals to designate 12 further environmentally sensitive areas. They are:

In 1992:
- Exmoor
- Hampshire Avon
- Lake District
- North Dorset and South Wiltshire Downs
- North West Kent Coast/South Western Peak;

In 1993:
- Blackdown Hills, Devon/Somerset border
- Cotswold Hills
- Dartmoor
- Essex Coast
- Shropshire Hills
- Upper Thames Tributaries.

The new designations will more than treble the amount of farmland within the 10 existing ESAs in England.

Environmentally sensitive areas have proved a tremendous success since they were first introduced in 1987. They help farmers to conserve special habitats, landscapes and features of historic interest. Their contribution to protecting areas of national environmental importance has been acclaimed by farmers and environmentalists alike, and they have paved the way for similar schemes throughout Europe.

We are starting work immediately on six of the new areas so that they can come into operation next summer. The other six areas will open for applications the following year.

The ESA scheme has proved an excellent example of the way in which agricultural and environmental policies can operate in harmony to conserve the best features of our countryside. We have pioneered this approach in the United Kingdom and I am delighted to be able to announce this major extension of the scheme.

ENERGY

Natural Gas

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give the latest estimates of natural gas reserves for which production access exists or is planned (a) in the United Kingdom sector of the North sea, (b) in the Irish sea, (c) in the English channel and (d) in the western approaches.

Mr. Moynihan: My Department's latest estimates of recoverable gas reserves in the United Kingdom are set out in table 4 of my right hon. Friend's report to Parliament of April this year on the "Development of the Oil and Gas Resources of the United Kingdom", also known as the Brown Book, which is available in the House of Commons Library. Apart from reserves for Morecambe in the Irish sea and some very small onshore sources, all figures shown for fields in production or under development relate to fields in the United Kingdom sector of the North sea.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his latest estimate of natural gas consumption by all United Kingdom users, by general category, during 1990-91.

Mr. Moynihan: The latest estimate of natural gas consumption by all United Kingdom users, by main category of user, in the period April 1990 to March 1991 is as follows:

	million therms
Fuel producers
Natural gas producers own use[1]	1,201
Power stations	87
Gas industry[2,3]	*597
Other fuel producers[2]	66
Total fuel producers	1,951
Final consumption[3]
Iron and steel industry	461

	million therms
Other industry[2]	5,222
Domestic	10,841
Other final users[6]	3,222
Total final consumption	19,746
Total natural gas consumption	21,697

[1] For drilling, production and pumping operations.
[2] Includes methane produced in collieries.
[3] Including losses in distribution.
[4] Figures for calendar year 1990.
[5] Including non-energy use of natural gas. Excluding fuel producers.
[6] Mainly public administration, commerce and agriculture.

Coal Reserves

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the latest estimate of coal reserves for which production access exists or is planned in the United Kingdom in each standard region.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: This is a matter for British Coal, which publishes estimates for total United Kingdom reserves in their annual report. My Department does not keep separate figures.

Oil Consumption

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his latest estimate of oil consumption by all United Kingdom users, by general category, during 1990-91.

Mr. Moynihan: The latest estimate of petroleum consumption by all United Kingdom users, by main category of user, in the period April 1990 to March 1991 is as follows:

	Million tonnes
Fuel producers
Refineries[1]	6·5
Power stations	6·1
Gas industry	0·1
Total fuel producers	12·7
Final energy consumption (excluding fuel producers)
Iron and steel industry	0·7
Other industry	7·7
Transport	43·0
Domestic	2·3
Other final users[2]	4·2
Total final energy consumption	58·0
Non-energy use[3]	8·9
Total petroleum consumption[4]	[5]79·6

[1] Fuel used in refineries (including refinery losses).
[2] Mainly public administration, commerce, and agriculture.
[3] Feedstocks for petrochemical plants plus other non-energy uses.
[4] Excluding deliveries to international marine bunkers.
[5] Due to rounding the sum of the constituent items may not equal the totals.

Nuclear Power Stations

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his latest estimate of electricity generated for the grid by nuclear power stations in 1990-91.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The latest estimate for electricity generated, net of electricity used on works, by nuclear power stations in the United Kingdom in 1990-91 is 60,689 GW hours. This figure covers electricity generated by Nuclear Electric, Scottish Nuclear, British Nuclear Fuels and the Atomic Energy Authority.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list, by electricity generated and efficiency, nuclear power stations operating in the United Kingdom during 1990-91.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Nuclear power stations operating in the United Kingdom during the financial year 1990-91 are listed in the table:

Nuclear Electric plc	AEA	BNFL plc	Scottish Nuclear Ltd.
Bradwell	Winfrith (from October 1990 no longer supplies the grid)	Calder Hall	Hunterston 'B'
Dungeness 'A'		ChapelCross	Torness
Hinkley Point 'A'
Oldbury
Sizewell 'A'
Trawsfynnyd
Wylfa	Dounreay
Dungeness 'B' Hartlepool
Heysham I
Heysham II
Hinkley Point 'B'

Gross electricity supplied to the grid from nuclear power stations in the financial year 1990-91 was 61 Terawatt hours. Information on output and efficiency by station is a commercial matter for the companies.

Oil Reserves

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the latest estimate of oil reserves for which production access exists or is planned (a) in the United Kingdom sector of the North sea and (b) in the western approaches.

Mr. Moynihan: My Department's latest estimates of recoverable oil reserves in the United Kingdom are set out in table 3 of my right hon. Friend's report to Parliament of April this year on the "Development of the Oil and Gas Resources of the United Kingdom", also known as the Brown Book, which is available in the House of Commons Library. Apart from a small contribution from onshore sources, the figures shown for fields in production and under development relate entirely to fields in the United Kingdom sector of the North sea.

Coal Consumption

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his latest estimate of coal consumption by all United Kingdom users, by general category, during 1990-91.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The information requested for coal consumption in the United Kingdom in the period April 1990 to March 1991 is as follows:

	million tonnes
Consumption by fuel producers:
Power stations	81·9
Coke ovens	10·7
Other fuel producers[1]	1·6
Total fuel producers:	94·2
Final consumption (excluding fuel producers):
Industry	7·4
Domestic	5·2
Other final users[2]	1·2
Total final consumption:	13·8
Total coal consumption:	107·9

[1] Includes consumption by collieries.
[2] Mainly public administration and commerce.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Nepal

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the human rights situation in Nepal following the May 1991 general election.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are convinced that the best overall safeguard for human rights in Nepal lies in the country's recent transition to full parliamentary democracy. We welcomed the Government's decision in mid-June to release all prisoners who had been detained under the previous regime for religious activities.

Guyana

20. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what efforts Her Majesty's Government have made to ensure that the forthcoming elections in Guyana are free and fair.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have urged President Hoyte and other Guyanese Ministers to take all possible steps to restore public and international confidence in the electoral system. I recently summoned the Guyanese High Commissioner to express concern at reports of serious inaccuracies in the electoral list and have made the same point to the visiting Guyanese Deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what were the results of his latest meeting with President Hoyte of Guyana.

Mr. Garel-Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has not met President Hoyte. There have, however, been numerous recent meetings between United Kingdom and Guyanese Ministers, the latest between myself and Guyanese Deputy Prime Minister, Mr. Winston Murray, on 18 November. On each occasion, the opportunity has been taken to repeat that we expect free and fair elections in Guyana.

Burma

21. Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received on the question of human rights in Burma.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have received numerous representations from members of the public, hon. Members, non-governmental organisations and others.

European Integration

22. Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about European integration.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Government see the movement towards closer political union in the European Community as an evolving process, but we hope that it will be possible to make a further step forward at the Maastricht European Council, building on the existing wide range of co-operation.

Croatia and Slovenia

23. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs by what criteria he has denied official British recognition of the democratically elected governments of Croatia and Slovenia; and what were his reasons for urging his European Community counterparts to do likewise.

Mr. Hurd: This question is constantly reviewed. Those Yugoslav republics which want independence will get it. But recognition would not stop the fighting. We have to judge whether recognition of the two republics now would increase the very real danger of civil war in the other republics.

European Frontiers

24. Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures he intends to take to ensure respect in Europe for existing frontiers.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We will continue to uphold the principles and provisions of the Helsinki final act and other CSCE documents which include respect for the territorial integrity of states and the recognition that frontiers can be changed in accordance with international law, by peaceful means and agreement.

Middle East

25. Sir Richard Luce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's position with regard to the middle east conference in Madrid.

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the middle east situation.

36. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of the middle east peace process.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Madrid conference was an important step towards peace in the middle east. We congratulate the United States Secretary of State on his achievement. We look forward to the early resumption of bilateral talks between the parties and to the launching of broader discussions of regional issues in which we expect to play a part. We shall continue to do all we can to ensure the success of the process.

35. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to visit the middle east to discuss the prospects for peace in the region; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: My right hon. Friend has no immediate plans to visit the middle east.

Sudan

26. Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to discuss the situation in the Sudan with leaders in that country.

Mr. Garel-Jones: My right hon. Friend has no such plans at present. Our embassy in Khartoum follows developments in Sudan closely and puts across to the Government our views on the situation there.

Yugoslavia

27. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement about the situation in Yugoslavia.

Mr. Garel-Jones: On 8 November, we and our EC partners made clear our condemnation of the use of force by agreeing a number of economic measures against Yugoslavia. We are now working towards a UN Security Council resolution imposing an embargo on the sale of oil to Yugoslavia.

34. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he intends to take to secure the establishment of structures to provide for the protection of minorities and minority rights before full recognition is given to any of the republics within Yugoslavia.

Mr. Garel-Jones: There can be no stability in the region without credible guarantees of minority rights. This must be a major element in any political settlement.

Foreign Affairs Council

28. Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what he intends to raise at the next Foreign Affairs Council.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The provisional agenda for the Foreign Affairs Council on 2-3 December is:

—preparation for European Council;
—Uruguay Round;
—EC/Egypt;
—Yugoslavia.

There will also be a further conclave of Foreign Ministers to discuss political union on 2 December.

United Kingdom Dependent Territories

29. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration he is giving to a review of the constitutional position of United Kingdom dependent territories.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Constitutions of dependent territories are periodically reviewed, normally at the request of the elected representatives of the territory. This ad hoc process is appropriate and flexible and fully discharges our international obligations under article 73 of the UN charter. It is implicit in article 73 that the constitutional arrangements must be tailored to the particular circumstances of each territory.

Kashmir

31. Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received concerning human rights violations in Kashmir.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have received representations from a number of hon. Members, members of the public and other interested organisations.

European Economic Area

32. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the recent agreement between the European Community and EFTA on a new economic area common to members of each organisation.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We warmly welcome the political agreement on the European economic area reached on 21 October. The EEA will extend the EC's single market to the EFTA countries from 1993, creating the world's largest single market. It will be good for Britain, the Community and the wider Europe.

Cambodia

33. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has regarding the disappearance of the leadership of the site 8 refugee camp on the Thai/Cambodia border; and what is the view of Her Majesty's Government on the implications for the credibility of the Cambodia settlement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Shortly before the comprehensive political settlement was signed on 23 October, elected administrators at the site 8 camp were summoned to Khmer Rouge headquarters in Cambodia and replaced. At the same time it appears that preparations were also made to return the inhabitants of the camps to Cambodia. At the urgent request of the United Kingdom and others, the United Nations Secretary-General intervened and all the Cambodian parties, including the Khmer Rouge, undertook that there would be no forcible repatriation from the camps that they control. Now that the comprehensive political settlement has been signed, we expect all signatories to meet their obligations under it.

Turkey

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what weight Her Majesty's Government have given, in considering whether to support the application for EC membership from Turkey, to the human rights situation in Turkey; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Her Majesty's Government believe that applications for European Community membership should be considered on their merits taking into account all the relevant economic and political criteria, including respect for human rights. The Council, in December 1989, concluded that the Turkish application was premature, but agreed that measures should be put in place to strengthen the Community's relations with Turkey.

Turks and Caicos Islands

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the current situation in the Turks and Caicos Islands; and if he will make a statement about the political, economic and financial position of this colony.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The new Government of the Turks and Caicos Islands are working closely with us to pursue their political and developmental priorities and to ensure the good government of the territory. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs will carry forward the discussion when he sees the Chief Minister, the hon. C. Washington Misick, on 28 November.

EC Treaty of Union

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will outline the areas of policy in which the EC and its institutions would seek participation in terms of the draft treaty of union considered by Foreign Ministers on 12 and 13 November; and if he will publish a list of the areas in which EC participation is not sought in terms of the draft.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The latest composite draft treaty texts circulated by the Dutch presidency, which are available in the Library, provide a comprehensive survey of all the areas where it is proposed to amend the existing provisions of the treaty of Rome. They also include the proposals for increasing inter-governmental co-operation within the framework of the Union.

Eastern Europe

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what increases he has made in the United Kingdom's diplomatic representation in eastern European countries over the past year; if he has any plans for further increases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Since November 1990 10 additional staff have been posted to eastern European countries, excluding the Soviet Union. We keep our representation in the region under constant review.

Korea

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the admission of the Republic of Korea and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to the United Nations.

Mr. Garel-Jones: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary gave on 16 October to my hon. Friend the Member for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns), at c. 156.

Vietnamese Refugees

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have been held between the British Government and the United States authorities on the recent repatriation of Vietnamese refugees from Hong Kong to Vietnam and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to the hon. Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) on 12 November 1991, at c. 480.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Vietnamese refugees have been accepted into the United Kingdom at the latest date.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Between 1975 and 31 October 1991, 18,032 Vietnamese refugees were resettled in the United Kingdom from places of first asylum in south-east Asia. In addition, a further 4,203 Vietnamese were settled in the United Kingdom under the orderly departure programme.

Lockerbie

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to inform other Governments of the results so far of the Lockerbie investigation; and what steps he is taking to ensure that high-performance plastic explosive is made only under Government authority and incorporates a substantial signature to assist detection.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We have briefed a wide range of Governments throughout the world on the issue of warrants resulting from the Lockerbie investigation.

The convention on the marking of plastic explosives for the purpose of detection was signed, subject to ratification, by the United Kingdom, and 40 other states, on 1 March 1991. The convention will require all plastic explosives manufactured by parties to the convention to be "marked" through a chemical additive which will make them detectable by existing equipment. (Official Report, 20 March 1991, column 114).

The Government are now taking steps to enable ratification of the convention.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evidence he now has on the country in which the high-performance plastic explosive used in the Lockerbie outrage was manufactured.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Air Accidents Investigation Branch report No. 2/90 and the report of the fatal accident inquiry relating to the Lockerbie air disaster refer to the positive evidence of a detonating high performance plastic explosive, similar to Semtex, being responsible for the explosive destruction of Pan Am flight 103. We have no evidence linking any one country to the manufacture of the plastic explosive used.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to Czechoslovakia and any other country manufacturing Semtex or any high-performance plastic explosive in order to ensure a readily recognisable signature is included in the manufacture to assist detecting devices and sniffer dogs.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The United Kingdom worked closely with the Government of Czechoslovakia in the preparation of the convention on the marking of plastic explosives for the purpose of detection which was signed, subject to ratification, by the United Kingdom and 40 other states, including all major producers of plastic explosives, on 1 March 1991.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Maltese Government following the findings of the Lockerbie investigation.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Maltese authorities co-operated closely throughout the Lockerbie investigation. They have been briefed fully on the findings of the investigation.

Vietnam

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the allowances paid to Vietnamese refugees returning voluntarily to Vietnam in order to help them resettle.

Mr. Garel-Jones [holding answer 18 November 1991]: All Vietnamese migrants who arrived in places of first asylum before 27 September 1991 and who volunteer to return to Vietnam receive US$410 repatriation assistance from UNHCR.

Since it was clear that this payment was acting increasingly as an incentive for clandestine departure, UNHCR announced on 27 September 1991 that for all asylum seekers arriving after that date, the level of cash assistance for voluntary returns would be reduced to US$50.

In addition, the international reintegration assistance programme aims to help all those who return to resume their lives in Vietnam by creating jobs in small and medium-sized enterprises and improving rural infrastructure and health and training facilities.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Local Government Finance

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish an estimate of the total amount of poll tax collected in 1990-91 from direct deductions from benefit in (a) Scotland, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Greenock and Port Glasgow.

Miss Widdecombe: An estimated £785,000 in community charge deductions was paid over to the local authority during the financial year 1990-91 by Benefits Agency local offices which cover the Strathclyde area. This figure includes about £37,000 collected from beneficiaries at the Greenock and Port Glasgow social security offices.

A similar estimate for the whole of Scotland could be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

Health Service Staff (Disablement)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the amount of Department of Social Security disablement benefit received each year by health service staff for back pain or back injury;

(2) what is the amount of Department of Social Security industrial injuries benefit received each year by health service staff for back pain or back injury;

(3) what is the total amount of Department of Social Security disablement benefit received each year by health service staff;

(4) what is the total amount of Department of Social Security industrial injuries benefit received each year by health service staff.

Mr. Scott: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Circulars

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many circulars have been issued by his Department (a) to local authorities and (b) to other organisations or individuals, since 1 January 1991.

Miss Widdecombe: Eighteen housing benefit and community charge benefit circulars have been issued by the Department to local authorities since 1 January 1991. The other information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Resettlement Units

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about the closure programme of resettlement units; what alternatives are in place; and what assessment he has made of the number of people who may be made homeless as a result of these changes.

Miss Widdecombe: Information on the closure programme of resettlement units is in the Resettlement Agency annual report, a copy of which is in the Library. No one will be made homeless as a result of the changes. Details of alternative provision is a matter for Mr. Tony Ward, the chief executive of the Resettlement Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy of the reply will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will list the membership of the regional review teams set up to produce and evaluate alternatives to resettlement units; and the dates each review team met; and what plans there are for future meetings;

(2) if he will list the membership of the national advisory steering group set up to advise on proposed replacements to resettlement units; the dates it met; and what plans there are for future meetings.

Miss Widdecombe: The management of resettlement units is a matter for Mr. Tony Ward, the chief executive of the Resettlement Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy of the reply will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Disabled People

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many, and what proportion, of people in receipt of income support/housing benefit (a) disability premium and (b) severe disability premium, also receive invalidity pension/allowance.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 5 November 1991]: The number of cases in receipt of income support/housing benefit with disability premium and/or severe disability premium awarded, and in receipt of invalidity pension/allowance in Great Britain in May 1990, are as follows:

		As a percentage of all in receipt of DP or SDP
		Per cent.
With Disability Premium	204,000	42
With Severe Disability Premium	7,000	10

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Overseas Aid

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the real-terms difference between United Kingdom overseas development assistance in calendar year 1989 and calendar year 1990.

Mrs. Chalker: Net official development assistance in 1990 was 12·8 per cent. lower in real terms than in 1989. The 1990 figure was low because a disproportionate amount of planned 1990-91 expenditure fell in the first quarter of 1991. Measured by financial years the aid programme has grown in real terms since 1987-88, and is planned to continue to do so.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to reduce the amount of British aid tied to the purchase of British goods and services; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The level of aid tied to British goods and services is regularly considered in the context of the effective operation of our aid programme. Proposals to untie bilateral aid within the Community are scheduled to be discussed by Ministers at the development council meeting on 28 November. We have always made it clear that we are ready to consider further untying if others are genuinely prepared to reciprocate, and there are satisfactory monitoring and policing arrangements.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he intends to link the quantity of aid given to recipient countries to his assessment of those countries' adoption of good governance.

Mrs. Challker: Individual aid programmes are regularly assessed to ensure appropriate and effective use of resources. We take into account a number of factors which contribute to good government in the country concerned. In June I announced a target of £50 million in new bilateral commitments for direct assistance on good government in the coming year.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government plan to increase United Kingdom aid to developing countries to the United Nations target level of 0·7 per cent. of gross national product.

Mrs. Chalker: The Government accept in principle the United Nations target for aid of 0·7 per cent. of gross national product. Future levels of aid will continue to depend, however, on our economic circumstances and on the many other priorities for public expenditure. The Government's public expenditure plans announced in the autumn statement provide for aid to developing countries of £1,831 million in 1992-93, £1,900 million in 1993-94 and £1,980 million in 1994-95. These figures represent an increase, over this year's originally planned figure, of 15 per cent. in cash terms and 3 per cent. in real terms.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of British aid is fully and freely available for worldwide procurement.

Mrs. Chalker: In 1989, the latest year for which figures are available, 33 per cent. of British aid commitments were untied.

Project Appraisal

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the project appraisal guidelines which have replaced the minimum test of development soundness to which he referred in his answer to the hon. Members for Esher (Mr. Taylor) and for Edmonton (Dr. Twinn) on 15 October 1991, Official Report, columns 126-27.

Mrs. Chalker: Aid and trade provision projects are now assessed to ensure that they represent sound investments which are financially viable and technically sound and are likely to bring economic benefits to the recipient country. This assessment includes the following factors.

- the market for the output;
- the best way of supplying the output;
- the rate of return on the project;
- the customer's capability for implementing the project including subsequent operation and maintenance;
- the recipient Government's policies in relevant sectors of the economy;
- the cost burden of the project on the recipient country; and
- the environmental impact.

UN Environment Conference

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance has been afforded to (a) United Kingdom-based non-governmental organisations and (b) non-governmental organisations from abroad, by his Department's Overseas Development Administration, to assist their participation in the preparatory committee meetings for the United Nations conference on environment and development in June 1992.

Mrs. Chalker: The Government pay for a representative from UNEP-UK, which is co-ordinating the views of British non-governmental organisations on the UN conference on environment and development, to attend meetings of the preparatory committee. I am considering how we might assist NGOs from developing countries.

Forestry Protection

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress made by working group I of the preparatory committee for the United Nations conference on environment and development on forestry protection.

Mrs. Chalker: At its third session in Geneva in August and September, the preparatory committee began preparing a statement of principles on the management and conservation of the world's forests. It is expected that the statement of principles will be finalised at the final session of the preparatory committee in New York in March 1992, and that it will be endorsed by world leaders at the United Nations conference on environment and development in Rio de Janeiro in June 1992.

Guyana

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much aid has been given to Guyana in 1988, 1989 and 1990.

Mrs. Chalker: Following are the figures:

	£ million
1988	0·6
1989	6.6
1990	15·3

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the threat to the greenheart tree in Guyana.

Mrs. Chalker: No such assessment has been made. Since October 1990 the bilateral aid programme has been financing a three-year research programme by Imperial college which is looking at the major problems concerning the regeneration of greenheart and other commercial timber species.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much the Guyanese Timber Company has received in World bank grants.

Mrs. Chalker: The World Bank approved a $10 million loan in October 1978 and a supplementary IDA loan of SDR8·7 million ($8·8 million) in March 1985 to the Government of Guyana for the Upper Demerara forestry project. A state-owned company, Demerara Woods, was set up to manage the project.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what present aid projects exist with Sri Lanka; and if he will list them.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 18 November, column 71.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the costs of the work of the grant-maintained schools section of his Department as a percentage of the overall budget of his Department.

Mr. Eggar: In 1991-92 the work of the grant-maintained schools division will account for around 0·7 per cent. of the Department's gross running costs recurrent budget.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many staff are employed in the grant-maintained schools section of his Department.

Mr. Eggar: There are 43 staff working in the grant-maintained schools division of the Department.

Science Budget

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a full statement of the calculations underlying the transitional arrangements in respect of dual support for science funding summarised in his answer to the hon. Member for Battersea (Mr. Bowis), Official Report, 7 November, columns 202-04.

Mr. Alan Howarth: As my right hon. and learned Friend announced on 29 July, transitional arrangements will apply to projects for which grant funding is already in progress at 1 August 1992.

The direct costs element of these projects will continue to be paid under existing arrangements but the research councils will make a contribution to indirect costs at the rate of 40 per cent. of the staff element of direct costs.

The new dual support arrangements will apply in full to all grants starting on or after 1 August 1992; direct costs for these projects will be assessed using the new boundary and these grants will also be subject to a 40 per cent. addition to the staff element to cover indirect costs.

The additions to the science budget for dual support announced on 7 November take account of the expected incidence of additional costs resulting from this phasing arrangement. They take account of the average grant profiles of the research councils; variations in the proportions of direct costs relating to staff; and the expected incidence of additional direct costs for each council. Information on the incidence of additional direct costs is based on the study undertaken jointly by heads of the research councils and the Committee of Vice Chancellors and Principals, published in July. Copies of the joint report are available in the Library.

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what arrangements as to quantum and timing of subscriptions to CERN he has taken into account in determining the changes in the science budget over the three years 1992-93 to 1994-95.

Mr. Alan Howarth: In line with usual practice, the Secretary of State determined the changes in the science budget over the three years 1992-93 and 1994-5 following advice from the Advisory Board for the Research Councils on the research councils' latest assessment of their research priorities and consequent spending requirements.

In formulating its advice, the ABRC gives due regard to the research councils' international commitments.

Schools Inspections

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he wil publish his review report on Her Majesty's inspectorate; and whether parents will in future have access to such reports as part of their entitlement to information under the parents charter.

Mr. Eggar: As my right hon. and learned Friend told the House on 6 June and repeated on 14 November, the review was set up to provide confidential advice to Ministers and would not be published. The parents charter sets out our proposals for ensuring that parents have the best possible information about local schools. Our plans for school inspection will play an important part in the process.

Class Sizes

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what estimate his Department has of the cost of reducing all registration classes to a maximum of 30 pupils.

Mr. Fallon: My Department does not collect data on the size of the classes in which pupils are registered, so no estimate of the cost of reducing them to a maximum of 30 pupils can be made.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many registration classes have more than 30 pupils.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is not available centrally.

Alzheimers Disease

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what future he envisages for accelerator mass spectrometry research relating to the possible role of aluminium in Alzheimers disease consequent upon the proposed closure of the nuclear structure facility.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Science and Engineering Research Council is currently reviewing future scientific options following the closure of the nuclear structure facility, including for research in the field of accelerator mass spectrometry.

Higher Education

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has for improvement in the quality of higher education; and to what extent they involve computer-based learning and video teaching.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Government's plans for maintaining and improving the quality of higher education were set out in the higher education White Paper, "Higher Education: A New Framework", (Cm. 1541). They are provided for in the Further and Higher Education Bill now before Parliament. The information systems committee of the Universities Funding Council has launched a number of initiatives on computer-based learning which are contributing to the development of more flexible and effective provision on the lines envisaged in the White Paper. Capital funding for the Universities Funding Council in 1992-93 will be £9 million higher than in 1991-92; this should enable a start to be made on SuperJANET, the upgraded academic computer network proposed by the ISC.

Teachers' Pay Review Body

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the expenses or honoraria which are to be paid to the members of the School Teachers' Pay Review Body.

Mr. Eggar: Under the School Teachers' Pay and Conditions Act 1991, my right hon. and learned Friend is empowered to pay the chairman, deputy chairman and members of the review body such remuneration and such allowances in respect of expenses properly incurred by them in the performance of their duties as he may determine. The amounts to be paid will be those properly claimed by each member of the review body.

SuperJANET

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the need for SuperJANET; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: We have received a number of representations from the academic and research communities about the proposed SuperJANET network. The spending plans announced in the autumn statement provide for capital funding for the Universities Funding Council in 1992-93 to be £9 million higher than in 1991-92: this should enable a start to be made on SuperJANET.

Further Education

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, further to his answer of 6 November, Official Report, column 140, on what basis he has calculated the £25 million to be provided for 1992-93 for the costs of the establishment of the Further Education Funding Council and the removal of further education and sixth-form colleges from local authorities.

Mr. Eggar: The Government intend that, subject to the passage of the Further and Higher Education Bill, funding should be available to assist colleges in preparing for independence from local authority control. The £25 million included in the Government's expenditure plans for 1992-93 has been calculated on the basis that it will allow substantial help to be given to colleges for this purpose and will also cover the costs of establishing the new Further Education Funding Council.

Teacher Training

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will undertake a review of the resource requirements of those grant-maintained schools which incur additional costs by providing teaching experience for postgraduate students who are following courses of teacher training.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Secretary of State has no plans to undertake a review of the resource requirements of grant-maintained schools for the provision of teaching experience for students on initial teacher training courses.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what funds are currently available to local education authorities and grant-maintained schools to assist them with the additional costs incurred in providing teaching experience for postgraduate students who are following courses of teacher training.

Mr. Eggar: Funding for students on courses of initial teacher training is directed, through the funding councils, to the teacher training institutions, which are responsible for making arrangements for teaching practice and other school experience for such students.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students each year from courses of teacher training undertake training placements in schools; and how many days on average each student spends each year on such placements.

Mr. Fallon: During the 1991-92 academic year, about 15,000 postgraduate certificate of education students and about 23,000 undergraduate students will be placed at a school as part of their teacher training. Postgraduate certificate of education students spend an average of 18 weeks on school experience and teaching practice during their one-year course. Undergraduate students on four-year courses spend an average of 26 weeks in schools over the whole course, with much of this being concentrated in the final year of the course.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Investors

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the range of impartial professional advice available to investors.

Mr. Redwood: The provision of independent financial advice is one of the matters currently being considered by the Securities and Investments Board in its review of retail regulation.

The Government are keen to see a wide range of suitable independent advice available in the market place through independent financial advisers and others.

Accounting Standards Board

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will bring forward proposals to make the Accounting Standards Board a statutory body.

Mr. Redwood: I have no plans to change the status of the Accounting Standards Board.

Company Disclosure Requirement

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any plans to monitor compliance with the disclosure requirement of schedule 7 paragraph 9 to the Companies Act 1985.

Mr. Redwood: No. My Department will, however, continue to respond to specific complaints about non-compliance with statutory requirements relating to company directors' reports.

Financial Reporting Council

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will provide details of the financing of the Financial Reporting Council.

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. Member to the annual report and accounts of the Financial Reporting Council Ltd. for the year to 31 March 1991, copies of which are available on request from the company.

Company Investigations

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry who carries out the investigations authorised under section 447 of the Companies Act 1985.

Mr. Redwood: Investigations under section 447 of the Companies Act 1985 as amended are carried out by those persons described in section 447(3), that is, an officer of the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry or any other competent person.

House of Fraser

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he is satisfied with the progress being made by the Takeover Panel in its inquiries into possible breaches of the takeover code in relation to the House of Fraser; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The Takeover Panel is not conducting its inquiries on my behalf, and I am therefore not responsible for its progress.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when, in accordance with the undertaking given by his predecessor to the Select Committee on Trade and Industry, he expects to report to the House on how all the regulators concerned with the takeover of the House of Fraser have carried out their duties.

Mr. Redwood: Memoranda were submitted to the Trade and Industry Committee in November and December 1990 in respect of action taken by regulators in the House of Fraser case. When further relevant information is provided by regulators, the Committee will be informed.

Guyana

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what were the results of the Department of Trade and Industry-organised seminar with President Hoyte.

Mr. Lilley: No such seminar has been organised by my Department.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what Department of Trade and Industry-sponsored trade delegations have been to Guyana.

Mr. Lilley: Since 1986 there has been one sponsored trade mission to Guyana. This was undertaken by the Caribbean Trade Advisory Group in February 1991.

Information Technology

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) how many meetings he and his Ministers have had with information technology users and suppliers, and their trade associations, to discuss policy issues and reactions to EC draft directives;

(2) if he will name all the third parties his Department has consulted during the last year on information technology and information technology-related issues.

Mr. Leigh: During the last year, DTI Ministers and officials have had numerous contacts with the suppliers and users of information technology, with their trade associations, and with other interested parties such as NEDO. Such contacts form an integral part of the daily business of my Department and cannot be quantified without disproportionate cost and effort.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last discussed information technology, or information technology-related, issues with other Ministers at the Council of Ministers.

Mr. Leigh: The Commission communication on the electronics and IT industry was discussed by the Industry Council on 29 April 1991, which Lord Hesketh attended, and again discussed by the Industry Council on 18 November. Lord Reay was unable to attend that Council as he was attending the European Space Agency ministerial meeting in Munich. IT was also discussed within the context of Community research and development at the Research Council on 28 October. Lord Reay represented the United Kingdom at that Council.

IT has also been considered in the context of other Councils in recent times, such as the Internal Market Council on 7 November, at which the proposed IMPACT programme concerning the development of the European information market was discussed.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) how many people in his Department are engaged full time in monitoring developments from the European Commission in Brussels, in the realm of information technology;

(2) how many staff work full time on information technology, and information technology-related, issues in his Department.

Mr. Leigh: My Department employs over 600 staff on information technology, and information technology-related issues. The major concentrations of these personnel are in information technology division, manufacturing technology division, telecommunications and post division and the national physical laboratory, and in respect of my Department's own use of information systems, services and management division.

Of these staff, a number of them are involved with monitoring the European Commission's activities in relation to information technology research and other programmes that relate to information technology, but none is engaged full time in that capacity.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what initiatives his Department is planning in order to harmonise European information technology legislation.

Mr. Leigh: My Department is reacting constructively to current European Community initiatives which may affect European information technology legislation.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) whether there is a central record of reviews and surveys relating to information technology sponsored by his Department;

(2) how many reviews or surveys relating to information technology, excluding those which relate to his Department's internal departmental use of information technology, are being sponsored by his Department; and what topics they cover.

Mr. Leigh: A list of management or computer consultancy contracts awarded by my Department during financial year 1990-91 was published in the Official Report on 5 June 1991, columns 241-46.

Innovation Unit

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make a statement about the new innovation unit within his Department.

Mr. Leigh: I refer my hon. Friend to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's recent press notice P/91/544 of 10 October about the launch of the innovation unit.

Spirits and Liqueurs

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on what grounds he has decided against extending the requirement to sell gin, rum, vodka and whisky in prescribed quantities to other spirits and liqueurs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: Following consultation, I announced on 25 July my decision not to extend the categories of spirits to be sold in prescribed quantities. No members of the public have complained to me about the limited scope of the legislation. Moreover, if the legislation were extended the same instrument design could no longer be used for all spirits subject to prescribed quantities. This might result in the accidental use of the wrong instrument and would place an additional burden on the trade. Some consultees also stated that many non-controlled spirits are sold as after-dinner drinks and tend to compete more with each other than with the four controlled ones.

Inward Investment (Ireland)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the inducements available in the Republic of Ireland for inward industrial investment from overseas and those available in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 19 November 1991]: Information on this subject is contained in "European Regional Incentives" prepared by the European Policies Research Centre, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received about firms relocating factories from the United Kingdom to the Republic of Ireland because of lower rates of corporation tax or other inducements.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 19 November 1991]: The hon. Member raised this issue with me when we met recently. I have received no other representations concerning relocation of factories from the United Kingdom to the Republic of Ireland because of lower rates of corporation tax or other inducements. My Department does not routinely collect information on such moves.

Scotch Whisky

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on Taiwan's application to become a member of GATT, in the light of Taiwan's treatment of imported Scotch whisky.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 18 November 1991]: The discriminatory tax treatment of Scotch whisky in Taiwan is unsatisfactory. Relations with GATT are a matter of Community competence and the Community's position on Taiwan's application to accede to GATT is still under consideration. The United Kingdom, of course, takes up the questions important to Scotch whisky with the European Commission and our European partners.

Food Prices

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will refer the lack of price competition by the large food retailers to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission for them to carry out a full investigation.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 19 November 1991]: The Director General of Fair Trading continues to keep markets under review, but I understand that at present he has no evidence of price-fixing which would justify a reference of the food retailing sector to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. Any evidence of anti-competitive practices should be referred to the director general. Recently there has been evidence of price competition.

Footwear

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to provide increased financial and other assistance to British footwear manufacturers trying to gain access to the Japanese market.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 19 November 1991]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 12 November, Official Report, col 458.

EMPLOYMENT

Ambrosia Creamery (Accident)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 11 November, Official Report, column 411, on the accident at the Ambrosia creamery, Lifton, Devon on 28 November 1990, what consideration was given to the statements taken by the employer from witnesses during the course of their investigation before reaching the conclusion about the possibility of determining responsibility for the damaged guard mechanism.

Mr. Jackson: In coming to a conclusion about the appropriate action to be taken after determination of the extent of responsibility for the damaged guard mechanism, the Health and Safety Executive took full account of the statements taken by the employer from witnesses during the course of the company's own investigation.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 11 November, Official Report, column 411, if he will list the people interviewed by the inspector when carrying out the investigation into the accident on 28 November 1990, at the Ambrosia creamery, Lifton, Devon; and what positions in the company they occupied.

Mr. Jackson: The information requested cannot be provided. It is not the policy of the Health and Safety Executive to disclose such information without the knowledge and consent of those individuals concerned.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 11 November, Official Report, column 411, what examination the Health and Safety Executive has made of the reason why an interlock switch was originally fitted to the hinged door to ensure that the conveyor was switched off whenever the door was open on the machinery in the accident on 28 November 1990, at the Ambrosia creamery, Lifton, Devon.

Mr. Jackson: The Health and Safety Executive inspector who investigated the accident on 28 November 1990 at Ambrosia creamery questioned the management team about the origins of the machine. He learned that it had been supplied from Germany without guarding at the cup feed point and that management considered that an interlocked guard should be fitted to prevent access to the feed mechanism while the power to the machine was switched on.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 11 November, Official Report, column 411, in connection with the accident at the Ambrosia creamery, Lifton, Devon, on 28 November 1990, for what period the interlocking switch which was fitted to the hinged door on the conveyor was out of action; whether the machine was made to operate after the switch was inoperative; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The information available to the Health and Safety Executive investigation indicated that the door became unhinged during the early shift on 21 November 1990. As a consequence the door interlocking switch had been put out of action to allow the machine to operate without it. HSE established that a temporary repair was made during the same shift to restore operation of the interlock switch but this repair failed at a time and date which has not been possible precisely to ascertain.

Crane Accident, St. Mary's

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 11 November, Official Report, column 413, whether the crane driver was interviewed following the accident to a crane at St. Mary's, Isles of Scilly on 13 July 1991; what observations he made; whether the safe load indicator was operating correctly at the time of the accident; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The Health and Safety Executive (HSE) inspector who investigated the accident on 13 July 1991 at St. Mary's, Isles of Scilly, did not interview the crane driver. HSE therefore has no information concerning his observations.

The inspector found that the warning bell circuit of the safe load indicator was operational at the time of his visit. However he was unable to establish whether the entire system was operational at the time of the incident, because of the damage the crane sustained when it overturned and the loss of part of the jib during the dismantling operation to make the crane safe.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 11 November, Official Report, column 413, concerning the accident at St. Mary's, Isles of Scilly, on 13 July 1991, what load it was thought was being lifted by the crane involved; and what was the actual weight lifted in tonnes.

Mr. Jackson: It was thought that the container lifted by the crane involved in the accident at St. Mary's on 13 July weighed 4 tonnes or less. The actual weight of the container lifted was later found to be 4·3 tonnes.

Health and Safety Inspectors

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for what reason the number of inspectors allocated to the research and laboratory services division at the health and safety inspectorate has been set at one; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: It is quite common practice in the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) for inspectors to be given short-term postings to non-inspectorate divisions, partly as development opportunities and partly to promote cross fertilisation of ideas. However, a great many of the professional posts in HSE's research and laboratory services division involve specialised scientific work and do not readily lend themselves to this type of approach. The division is therefore primarily staffed by professional scientific staff.

The non-scientific posts in the division are largely concerned with service delivery, involving administrative/clerical and other support duties, and would not provide the right sort of opportunities for inspectors. Even though there is little scope for postings, however, scientists and inspectors regularly work together in multi-disciplinary teams, for example, in major accident investigations.

Jasbir Singh

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will obtain from the Health and Safety Executive information about the activities of the Executive in connection with the recent death of Jasbir Singh at Idwal Fisher Ltd., Bradford.

Mr. Jackson: The fatal accident to Jasbir Singh on 9 April 1991 at Idwal Fisher Ltd., Bradford was reported to the Health and Safety Executive's (HSE) West and North Yorkshire area office immediately after it occurred. The HSE began an investigation into the circumstances surrounding the accident the same day. HSE is currently awaiting the outcome of additional inquiries being made by the police, with whom it is co-operating, before deciding what if any further action may be appropriate.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what position the Liverpool, Riverside constituency held in the list of constituencies of official unemployment on a monthly basis from 1979 to the latest available date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: For areas with different sized workforces, such as parliamentary constituencies, the only meaningful comparisons are based on unemployment rates. These are not available at the level of parliamentary constituencies. However, information relating to the numbers unemployed in the Liverpool, Riverside parliamentary constituency, can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library and is available from June 1983.

SCOTLAND

Crab Apples

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the contents of letters written by M. M. Cassie of the Scottish Department of Agriculture and Fisheries on the question of crab apples.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Only one letter was written by the official concerned on this subject. In April 1990 the Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department was notified by the United States Environmental Protection Agency of the proposed revocation of tolerances for residues of the fungicide captan on various fruits including crab apples because the use of captan on these fruits had been cancelled. Miss Cassie wrote to the agency seeking confirmation that the United States definition of crab apples was specific to that crop and did not include any variety or ordinary eating apples. The agency duly confirmed that the use of captan on ordinary eating apples was not being cancelled or the tolerances revoked.

Hypothermia

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing how many people categorised by age died of hypothermia, or illnesses associated with hypothermia, in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The figures requested are given in the table.

Disabled People (Access)

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to amend planning regulations to enhance accessibility for disabled people in all new-build projects; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office environment department is preparing amendments to the Building Standards (Scotland) Regulations 1990 which will extend access for disabled people to the upper floors of all buildings except dwellings. These amendments are generally in line with similar amendments being prepared for England and Wales and Northern Ireland. They will apply to new build projects and to alterations and extensions to existing buildings in Scotland.

Waste Disposal and Collection

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a timetable for review of the Collection and Disposal of Waste Regulations 1988 and the subsequent implementation of part II of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 to take into account an exception for Scotland equivalent to regulation 9(1) and schedule 6 case 13 to the 1988 regulations.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: We will undertake consultations on new regulations on waste disposal licensing prior to the implementation of the licensing provisions of part II of the 1990 Act. These provisions are currently scheduled for implementation throughout Great Britain on 1 April 1993. However this timetable will be reviewed in the light of the proposal to set up new environment agencies, for Scotland and for England and Wales, which will assume responsibility for waste regulation.

Information Formats

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make special financial provision to assist local authorities to provide accessible information formats, such as Braille, large print, tape or videos in sign language, in public libraries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Statutory responsibility for the local authority public library service in Scotland lies with the local authorities themselves and not with the Secretary of State. It is for each local authority to determine the nature and scale of the service in its area in accordance with its duty to provide adequate library facilities for all persons resident in the area.

Sports (Disabled People)

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide district councils with financial assistance to employ sports development officers to promote recreation amongst disabled people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is for the local authorities in Scotland to determine their deployment of staff and their expenditure on recreation among disabled people according to their assessment of local needs and priorities, in the light of the financial resources available to them.

HIV

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many non-haemophiliacs in Scotland have contracted HIV infection as a result of national health service transfers of contaminated (a) blood, (b) blood products and (c) tissue;

(2) how many non-haemophiliacs in Scotland who have contracted HIV infection as a result of contaminated national health service blood-tissue transfers (a) remain alive, (b) have developed AIDS and remain alive and (c) have developed AIDS and have since died of an AIDS-related condition.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information is not available in the form requested. There were 11 reported cases of persons claiming to have contracted HIV infection from contaminated blood, blood products or tissue.

Of the 11 reported cases, all were alive as at 31 October 1991. We have no information that any of these cases have developed AIDS.

Food Manufacturing

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by region the numbers currently employed in the food manufacturing industry.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The most recent estimates of employees in employment according to industry and by region are from the September 1989 census of employment. Data for the food manufacturing industry are given in the table.

Region	Numbers employed in the food manufacturing industry
Borders	1,300
Central	900
Dumfries and Galloway	2,900
Fife	1,000
Grampian	10,700
Highland	1,300
Lothian	8,100
Strathclyde	18,300
Tayside	4,300
Islands	700

Notes:

1. These estimates are for September 1989.
2. The industries covered are Groups 411-423 of the 1980 Standard Industrial Classification.
3. Figures are rounded to the nearest hundred.

Organ Exchange

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether all Scottish hospitals take part in the human organ exchange scheme run by the United Kingdom Transplant Support Service Authority.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The national health service in Scotland participates fully in the voluntary organ sharing arrangements run by the United Kingdom Transplant Support Service Authority.

Further Education

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the colleges of further education which are not under local authority control in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Clause 30 of the Further and Higher Education (Scotland) Bill defines a "college of further education" as an educational establishment by which further education is provided. Information is not held centrally on such establishments not under local authority control.

School Boards

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by education authority current vacancies in the membership of school boards; and if he will express this figure as a percentage of the total number of available places in each authority.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 11 November 1991]: This information is not available centrally. I have no evidence that there will be a significant difference in the number of school boards once the present round of elections and by-elections is complete early next year.

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures his Department is taking to ensure that all school boards have their full contingent of members.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 11 November 1991]: The conduct of school board elections is a matter for education authorities. They have a statutory duty to ensure that parents are informed about the elections.

The Scottish Office undertook a press and television advertising campaign in support of education authorities in August and September to encourage parents to stand and to vote in the elections. In the parents charter, launched in September, we informed parents about the important contribution which school boards now make to the education system. My officials will also shortly issue advice to education authorities and school boards to encourage authorities to give boards greater flexibility in the exercise of their current functions.

In-patient Waiting Lists, Lothian

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each specialty, the current in-patient waiting list figures in the Lothian health board area, and the average in-patient waiting times; and indicate for each specialty (a) the number and (b) the percentage awaiting in-patient treatment for (i) over six months, (ii) over 12 months, (iii) over 18 months, (iv) over 24 months and (v) over 36 months.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 11 November 1991]: The information available is contained in the following tables. Information on patients waiting over 18 months and over 36 months is not at present collected centrally.

HEALTH

Perinatal Neonatal and Postnatal Deaths

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he intends to take to introduce health promotion measures to ensure that the rate of perinatal, neonatal and postneonatal deaths is urgently reviewed and reduced; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The rate of infant mortality in England is now at its lowest ever level, of 7·9 per 1,000 live births in 1990. Perinatal mortality has also reduced significantly over the last 11 years, from 14·6 per 1,000 total births in 1979 to 8·1 in 1990. We continue our efforts to make further reductions.

By the end of 1991-92, all regional health authorities will have in place a system of epidemiological surveys to investigate the patterns and trends of still births and neonatal deaths in respect of their own population. A national advisory body will shortly be set up to steer the Government's confidential inquiry into still births and deaths in infancy, and regions will be expected to play a full part in that.

For 1992-93, the NHS chief executive has asked all RHAs to agree targets with their district health authorities and family health services authorities to reduce the number of still births and infant deaths still further. At the same time, consideration is being given to improving access to services for certain groups of women, such as those from ethnic minorities, and improvements in the level of consultant cover on labour wards will be sought.

Homelessness

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the accuracy with which his Department enumerates homeless people in capitation calculations for health planning purposes.

Mr. Dorrell: The weighted capitation formula for allocations to regional health authorities takes account of projections of their resident populations but makes no separate allowance for homeless people.

The projections used are prepared by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys from figures based on the census of population, adjusted for subsequent births, deaths and migration. The census aims to cover everyone, but adjustments are made for under-enumeration in estimating the usually resident population of an area. In common with everyone else, the homeless are either included in figures for their area of residence, if they provide a usual address, or in the area in which they were enumerated if they have no fixed abode.

The Department currently uses projections derived from the 1981 census, but these will be refined in the light of the 1991 census. In 1991, special measurs were taken to produce as reliable a count of people sleeping rough as possible. The results of this have been laid before Parliament in a supplementary monitor to the 1991 census preliminary report.

Guidance to the NHS invites regional health authorities to consider whether they should adjust the allocations for district health authorities to allow for unenumerated homeless people.

Nurse Regrading

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what actions he has taken in response to the backlog of nurse regrading appeals; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Action to reduce the backlog of nurse grading appeals is a matter for the Nursing and Midwifery Staffs Negotiating Council. A joint working group of the negotiating council is currently considering options for streamlining the existing procedure.

Health Authorities (Public Relations)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many regional health authorities maintain public relations departments; what is their total annual cost; how big are their staffs; and what increase there has been in their numbers.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not collected centrally.

Tobacco

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from the Institution of Environmental Health Officers, the BMA, the Coronary Prevention Group and local authorities concerning the ban on tobacco advertising and promotion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: We have received a wide range of representations about tobacco advertising and promotion, including from the organisations named.

Special Footwear

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recognised training is available to NHS appliance clerks in the Orthotics Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Training for this group of staff is a local responsibility. There is no prescribed national training course.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how long on average a disabled person has to wait for made-to-measure footwear from the time of prescription to delivery; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not available centrally. The new NHS contract for prescribed footwear specifies that delivery must be made within six weeks of receipt of an order. Health authorities should ensure that the contractors with whom they place orders are complying with the terms of the national contract and take up any cases of difficulty which may arise.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has received a copy of the report "Footwear: A Quality Issue" published by the Disabled Living Foundation on behalf of the Disabled Living Foundation, the Chartered Society of Physiotherapy, the King's Fund and the Society of Chiropodists.

Mr. Dorrell: Yes, and we are considering the recommendations.

New Norwich Hospital

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on progress with funding and plans for the new district general hospital in Norwich; and when he expects work to begin.

Mr. Dorrell: Options for the provision of hospital services in Norwich are being reappraised.

Health Education Council

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the latest breakdown of the Health Education Council's budget and its programme for 1992.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is published in the Health Education Authority's operational plan 1991-93, copies of which are available in the Library.

"Enjoy Healthy Eating"

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the objectives behind the publication of the Health Education Authority's "Enjoy Healthy Eating" booklet; and to whom it has been distributed.

Mr. Dorrell: The Health Education Authority's "Enjoy Healthy Eating" booklet is the first guide to be issued since the expert Committee of Medical Aspects of Food Policy report on dietary reference values published in July. It represents the start of the healthy eating education campaign, which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State promised in the summer. The information and advice it contains has the full backing of both the Department of Health and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Further nutrition education resources for both professionals and the public are being developed. Two million booklets have been printed, for distribution to a variety of outlets through district health education units.

Organ Exchanges

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which regional health authorities do not participate in the United Kingdom Transplant Authority's organ exchange scheme.

Mr. Dorrell: Participation in the voluntary organ sharing arrangements is a matter for individual units. According to information provided by the United Kingdom Transplant Support Service Authority, which administers the scheme on behalf of the profession, units currently not fully contracted into the scheme are located in the South East Thames and South West Thames regional health authorities.

HIV

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many non-haemophiliacs in England have contracted HIV infection as a result of national health service transfers of contaminated (a) blood, (b) blood products and (c) tissue;

(2) how many non-haemophiliacs in England who have contracted HIV infection as a result of contaminated national health service blood-tissue transfers (a) remain alive, (b) have developed AIDS and remain alive and (c) developed AIDS and have since died of an AIDS-related condition.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There have been 49 reports in England of HIV infection in people who received blood, including blood components, in the United Kingdom. There has been one report of HIV infection due to tissue transfer. The number of infected persons thought to be alive is 26. The number reported with AIDS is 26, of whom 21 are known to have died. We have no information on the cause of death.

Health Education Authority

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which scientific advisers the Health Education Authority consults on its health education programme; and what academic members it maintains on its staff.

Mr. Dorrell: The Health Education Authority takes account of a wide range of scientific evidence and advice in developing and implementing its various programmes, and employs staff suitably qualified to enable it to do so. If the hon. Member requires any further information he may wish to contact Sir Donald Maitland, the chairman of the authority, direct.

Organ Transplants

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average waiting time for an organ transplant; and if he will detail this information for kidneys, heart and lungs, hearts, lungs, livers and pancreas.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not collected centrally.

NHS Beds

Mr. Neillist: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a table to show the average number of national health service beds in use in each year since 1979.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the statistical bulletin of 2 October 1990, "NHS hospital activity statistics for England 1979-1989/90", copies of which are available in the Library. More important than the number of beds is the number of patients treated each year. This has increased by more than one third since 1979.

Operations

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the 10 most costly types of surgical operation currently being carried out under the national health service; and how many of each type were carried out in 1978 and in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 11 November 1991]: The information requested is not available. The costs of any particular treatment or procedure will vary according to the complexity of each case. The most costly types of operations will inevitably be among the most complex, such as double or triple transplants, which are performed only rarely.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Urban Development Grants

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, further to his answer of 11 November, Official Report, column 385, how many civil servants, and in which Departments, are engaged in administering the urban development grants which are funded by the International Fund for Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: Twelve all from the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland.

CRISP Programme

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, further to his answer of 11 November, Official Report, column 385, on CRISP—the community regeneration initiative special project—if he will list the precise criteria for determining which towns and villages are in areas of particular disadvantage, state when these criteria were published and indicate what steps are taken to draw them to the attention of interested parties.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter primarily for the International Fund for Ireland. I have asked the chairman of the fund to write to the hon. Gentleman and will place a copy of his letter in the Library.

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, further to his answer of 11 November, Official Report, column 385, if he will list with respect to each town every payment made under the CRISP programme indicating in each case the recipient and the purpose of the payment.

Mr. Needham: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, further to his answer of 11 November, Official Report, column 385, if he will list the specified areas of Belfast and Londonderry for which urban development grant is available and give the precise criteria for the selection of those areas.

Mr. Needham: Applications may, in principle, be accepted throughout the Belfast city council area. Because demand has exceeded resources for some time, funds are now focused on areas of greatest need. Currently these areas are those covered by the Belfast action teams, including small parts of some team areas which extend beyond the city council boundary. Outside action team areas, but within the Belfast city boundary, only exceptional projects in terms of urban regeneration are considered for grant.

In Londonderry, urban development grant is available for approved projects in the main commercial and industrial sectors of the city within the area encompassed by the former county borough of Londonderry, and within the Londonderry enterprise zone at Campsie and Springtown.

Water Pollution

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the public funds expended and the various watercourses and lakes involved to restock such waters after pollution incidents in which fish were killed.

Mr. Hanley: There is no legislative provision for the use of public funds for general restocking of waters after pollution incidents. Public funds are used to restock waters only in cases where fish kills result from pollution incidents caused by facilities which are in public ownership. Details of such expenditure over the past five years are shown in the following table.

Location	Year	Amount £
River Creggan	1987	7,913
River Callan	1987	3,000

Restocking has also been carried out in other cases at the expense of those responsible for pollution incidents in keeping with the "polluter pays" principle.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table showing for each of the last three years for which figures are available the number of pollution incidents which resulted in fish kills in Northern Ireland waters, the waters involved, the fish species and approximate numbers, the action taken to restock, to identify the polluters and to prosecute the polluters and the result of court proceedings.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is not held centrally. I shall write to the hon. Gentleman in the near future when the details are available.

Organ Transplants

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people in the Province are awaiting an organ transplant; if he will give the figure for 1990; and how long on average patients wait for a transplant of a kidney, heart and lungs, heart, lung, liver and cornea.

Mr. Hanley: There are at present in Northern Ireland 72 patients waiting for a kidney transplant and about 30 waiting for corneal grafting. The remaining information requested is not readily available.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Stolen Property

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Lord President of the Council what is the estimated value of property stolen from the House of Commons during 1990 and in 1991 to the most recent practicable date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The estimated value of property reported stolen in the Palace of Westminster and in the Parliamentary Outbuildings was £16,700 in 1990 and £15,800 to date in 1991. This includes property stolen from contractors, which accounts for two thirds of the 1990 figure, as well as from Members, their staff and staff of both Houses.

Each report of property stolen is vigorously followed up by the police, but it would greatly assist if articles of value were secured and desks and filing cabinets locked when offices are left unattended.

DEFENCE

TOGS System

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the present status of the thermal observation and gunnery sighting system contract with United Scientific; and whether any penalty clauses have been invoked.

Mr. Alan Clark: A TOGS contract was placed with Avimo Ltd., a subsidiary of United Scientific Holdings. Deliveries of main systems are now complete and only the delivery of a number of spares is outstanding. The Department is not pursuing liquidated damages under this contract.

AWACS Agreement

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the present value of offset contracts created as a result of the Boeing airborne warning and communication system agreement; and if the agreed amounts are being fulfilled.

Mr. Alan Clark: Boeing has to date submitted progress reports listing contracts placed with United Kingdom companies totalling $1·855 billion, of which we have so far agreed that $1·197 billion should count for credit. I have little doubt that Boeing will meet the agreed target of some $1·5 billion.

Explosives and Propellants

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many explosives and propellant contracts were placed in the periods (a) January to July and (b) July to December, for each of the years 1987, 1988, 1989 and 1990, respectively; and what were the values of those contracts;

(2) what has been the expenditure on explosives and propellants in each year since 1979.

Mr. Alan Clark: My Department purchases the great majority of its explosives and propellants as integral parts of whole munitions, rather than under specific contracts. Overall expenditure on these components is not separately identifiable.

Starfighter Aircraft (Fuel Leak)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the report on the fuel leak from a C141 Starfighter aircraft at Air Force base Mildenhall in 1990.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I am not aware of any such report.

HMS Itchen

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his answers of 7 November, Official Report, column 252, he will indicate the implications of the refit of HMS Itchen referred to therein for the availability of sea training facilities at HMS Wessex.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: During the refit of HMS Itchen, reservists' requirements for training at sea can be satisfied by using a mine sweeper fleet vessel allocated to another sea training centre. In addition, even when a ship is in refit some opportunities for training on that ship will still exist.

Frigates

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether it is his intention to issue a request for proposals for the main gun armament of the replacement for the Type 42 destroyer.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We intend to issue shortly an invitation to industry, through the Ministry of Defence Contracts Bulletin, to register interest in bidding for the supply of the main gun armament of the replacement for the type 42 frigate.

European Fighter Aircraft

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards an integrated defensive aids sub-system for the European fighter aircraft.

Mr. Alan Clark: Our policy towards the European fighter aircraft defensive aids sub-system is to equip the aircraft with a capability which meets the operational requirement in the most cost-effective manner.

Rapid Reaction Corps

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on the proposal that the Luftwaffe should lead the air component of NATO's rapid reaction corps.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: At their defence planning committee meeting last May, NATO Defence Ministers agreed, in principle, to the formation of air reaction forces. Since then, work has continued in NATO to determine the precise size and structure of such forces, including the command and control arrangements, which must be efficient and militarily effective.

Menwith Hill Station (Cable)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when work to lay a new cable between Menwith Hill station and Hunter's Stones post office tower will be completed and at what total estimated cost; what is the purpose of the new cable; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My Department has no knowledge of work to lay a new cable between Menwith Hill station and Hunter's Stones post office tower.

Defence Equipment Exhibition

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assistance is available from his Department to British companies taking part in the Eurosatory land defence equipment European exhibition due to be held in Paris in June 1992.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Defence Export Services Organisation offers advice and, where appropriate, support to any United Kingdom firm intending to market defence-related products overseas.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 21 November 1991

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Sunday Trading

Mr. Pike: To ask the Attorney-General what recent discussions his Department has had with local authorities regarding enforcement of existing Sunday shopping legislation; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I have had correspondence with three local authorities in England recently concerning enforcement of the law and, in particular, the effect of recent decisions of the courts.

A local authority in Northern Ireland has also asked me whether I would be prepared to consent to an application for an injunction against a retailer that was allegedly breaking the law. My consent is needed under the law of Northern Ireland.

TRANSPORT

Seat Belts

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he intends to require seat belts to be fitted in buses (a) used to transport school children and (b) in all buses and public service vehicles.

Mr. Chope: By reason of European Commission directives, it is not possible for the United Kingdom unilaterally to require seat belts on all seats in new buses and coaches.

Highways

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of the announced £1½ billion additional expenditure is to be invested in highways in East Anglia; what sums are currently being spent on highways in this region; and if he will publish a list of the trunk road schemes currently under construction, shortly to be started and in preparation in the counties of Norfolk, Suffolk and Essex with the approximate cost of each.

Mr. Chope: The £1½ billion additional expenditure over three years announced by the Secretary of State on 6 November is almost all for public transport provision throughout the country, including East Anglia. Provision for highways was not increased.

Forecast expenditure on motorways and trunk roads in the Department's eastern region—the counties of Essex, Suffolk, Norfolk, Hertfordshire, Bedfordshire, Buckinghamshire and Cambridgeshire—is estimated at £312 million in 1991-92.

The total of local authority expenditure budgets for local roads in these counties for 1991-92 is £102 million capital and £198 million current.

Following is a list of the motorway and trunk road schemes in progress in Norfolk, Suffolk and Essex.

A1 (North Yorkshire)

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimated cost of the upgrading to motorway standards of the A1 in North Yorkshire and the completion date of the programme.

Mr. Chope: Seven A1(M) upgrading schemes are wholly or partially within the county of North Yorkshire. The estimated cost of all these schemes at current prices is approximately £550 million and completion is expected within 10 years.

Orange Badge Scheme

Mr. Channon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he proposes to bring forward amending regulations regarding the orange badge scheme for the disabled.

Mr. Chope: Amending regulations will be brought forward within the next fortnight. The intention is that the new scheme should come into effect on 2 March 1992.

Vehicle Licensing

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will bring forward proposals to alter the public service vehicle and goods vehicle licensing system to extend to parish councils the right to make representations about public service vehicle and goods vehicle operating centres; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: A commitment to amend the goods vehicle operator licence provisions to give a general right of environmental representation for parish councils was made in 1989. This followed a wide-ranging review of operators licensing and acknowledged the role of parish councils as representative of local communities.

A change to the primary legislation will be required.

Public service vehicle operating centres are not currently subject to environmental control through operator licensing. This is being reviewed at present.

M5 (Drains)

Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will investigate the motorway contractor's proposals in the M5 junctions 6 and 8 widening contract to change from modern drains specification to traditional drains.

Mr. Chope: The contractor's proposal to use filter drains instead of Fin drains was within the scope of the Department's specification and the terms of the contract.

Road Accident Statistics

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make arrangements to obtain information, for inclusion in the annual road accident statistics, about the numbers of fatalities and injuries in road accidents in Great Britain resulting from the use of motor vehicless which have been stolen or driven without the owners' consent, resulting from the use of motor vehicles driven for other criminal purposes, and resulting from the use of motor vehicles by the police in connection with the performance of their duties, including when pursuing drivers of vehicles which have been stolen or taken without the owners' consent or used for other criminal purposes.

Mr. Chope: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Building Contracts

Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with John Laing Construction and other major motorway road contractors regarding changing contract specifications after a contract has been awarded by public tender.

Mr. Chope: There are regular discussions with the Federation of Civil Engineering Contractors about matters of common interest.

Road Accidents (A1)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many deaths and how many injuries have occurred as a result of road traffic accidents on the A1 road between Morpeth and the Scottish border in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Chope: The number of deaths and injuries as a result of accidents on the A1 between Morpeth and the Scottish border during the period from 1980-90 are shown in the following table:

	Fatal	Serious	Slight
1980	8	42	66
1981	6	25	92
1982	6	40	91
1983	7	20	77
1984	11	33	74
1985	4	35	112
1986	6	35	84
1987	5	18	68
1988	4	24	65
1989	8	26	72
1990	4	33	127
Total	69	331	928

Motorways (Drainage)

Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to ensure that the motorway contractors adhere to consulting engineers' specifications for drainage on major contracts.

Mr. Chope: Under the terms of the contract the engineer has a duty to consider alternative materials or methods put forward by the contractor and may approve their use provided they meet the criteria set out in the Department's specification for highway works and represent good value for money.

Air Pollution

Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he intends to take to combat air pollution caused by road transport.

Mr. Chope: Stricter limits on emissions have very recently been agreed by the United Kingdom and its EC partners.

On 26 June the EC Council of Ministers adopted an amending directive 91/441/EEC setting tighter limits on emissions of carbon monoxide, hydrocarbons and oxides of nitrogen (NOx) by new cars and light vans. The standards set by the directive will require almost all new petrol-engined cars from the end of 1992 to use three-way catalytic converters and to run on unleaded petrol. Diesel cars and light vans will need to comply with a strict limit on particulates—smoke.

Pride of Portsmouth

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning the dismissal of the British crew members of the Pride of Portsmouth.

Mr. McLoughlin: Mr. McCluskie of the National Union of Rail, Maritime and Transport Workers has written to the Secretary of State concerning the owners' decision to replace the British crew members of the Pride of Portsmouth with foreign nationals. I will be responding shortly on behalf of the Secretary of State and will answer the points made by Mr. McCluskie.

Scandinavian Star

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will obtain a copy of the Danish inquiry into the case of the Scandinavian Star.

Mr. McLoughlin: A copy of the inquiry report on the Scandinavian Star accident has been requested from the Danish maritime authorities.

Ferry Safety

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will review the implications for safety of British passengers travelling on ferry services crewed and staffed by non-English speaking officers and ratings.

Mr. McLoughlin: This is kept under review. Surveyors make unannounced safety inspections of foreign registered passenger ro-ro ferries visiting United Kingdom ports and, among other items, they are instructed to check that enough crew can speak English to be able to give announcements and communicate with United Kingdom passengers in an emergency.

Road Schemes

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will be issuing for consultation the criteria he proposes to use in exercising his discretionary power under section 62 of the Planning and Compensation Act 1991 to acquire property which is seriously affected by his Department's road schemes; and whether he expects to make the criteria public before the end of 1991.

Mr. Chope: Guidelines for the use of the new discretionary power to acquire property seriously affected by the Department's road schemes will be announced as soon as possible. The guidelines will be reviewed in the light of experience, and any representations received will be taken into account.

Lyme Bay

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to inform all the agencies to which he wrote on 22 July about anchoring in Lyme bay that ships may continue to call off Lyme/Torbay for legitimate servicing, and that they may anchor there for that purpose for periods of time.

Mr. McLoughlin: Letters sent out by my Department on 22 July were directed to the owners of three ships and referred specifically to the long-term anchoring of those ships in Lyme bay with the attendant risk of large-scale pollution. It is not proposed to write again to these owners on this matter.

Fishing Vessels (Accidents)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in relation to the losses of the fishing vessels (a) Girl Fiona, (b) Inspire, (c) Alert II, (d) Boy Shaun, (e) Sylvia Marita, (f) Jake II, (g) Tarradale II, (h) Pearl, (i) Mhari L and (j) South Stack which had Marine Accident Investigation Branch inquiries; which of these were published; which had any other inquiry and of what nature; and which of those were published.

Mr. McLoughlin: All the accidents occurred before July 1989, when the marine accident investigation branch was set up. Under the pre-existing system losses were investigated by the Department's surveyors, but there was no provision for making reports available for general release, unless the accident was subject to public inquiry. The loss of Boy Shaun, being an Irish vessel, will have been investigated by the Irish authorities. None of the incidents listed by the hon. Member led to such an inquiry. Summary reports of the surveyor's investigations into the losses of Mhari L and of Inspire were produced and the hon. Member will recall having being sent copies.

The deaths of those lost in the accidents were subject to inquest, fatal accident inquiry or to a death inquiry under the Merchant Shipping Acts. Reports of such proceedings are not published though the findings are made known to those concerned.

Since July 1989, specific provision has been made in the relevant regulations for the reports of investigations submitted to the Secretary of State for Transport to be published under the terms of the Merchant Shipping Act 1988.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will instigate a full public inquiry into the sinking of the Wilhelmina J; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will instigate a full public inquiry into the sinking of the Ocean Hound; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Both accidents are the subject of investigation under the provisions of the Merchant Shipping (Accident Investigation) Regulations 1989. Such investigations are very comprehensive and are the most expeditious means of establishing the nature and cause of a marine accident, and my right hon. and learned Friend is not minded to order full public inquiries.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has about incidents involving (a) United Kingdom and (b) other fishing boats in United Kingdom waters and submarines in each of the years (a) 1989, (b) 1990 and (c) 1991 to date; what action he is currently considering to reduce such incidents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The fishing vessels reported to the Department as having been involved in incidents or suspected incidents in UK waters with submarines from 1 January 1989 to date are as listed, together with the reported date incident.

Vessel	Date of Incident
New Dawn	3 January 1989
Lau Ann	22 January 1989
Spes Bona (and Arturus and Strathayre)	27 February 1989
Seagull	31 March 1989
Northern Lights	31 March 1989
Laurel	17 April 1989
Huntress	28 June 1989
Scotia	13 November 1989
Sarah Marie	7 December 1989
Moray Adventurer	4 October 1990

Vessel	Date of Incident
Antares	22 November 1990
Green Eagle	14 December 1990
Delvan	13 February 1991
Maritan	19 February 1991
Hercules II	February 1991
Wavecrest, Alpha and Athena	6 March 1991
Swyn-Y-Mor	20 March 1991
Saffron	12 November 1991

All are UK vessels except the Laurel—Isle of Man—and the Sarah Marie—Jersey.

A sub-group of the Department of Transport's fishing industry safety group—which will include representatives of the fishing industry, the Fisheries Departments and the Ministry of Defence—will meet on 9 December to discuss safety issues arising from the interaction of fishing vessels and submerged submarines. My Department is also giving urgent consideration to the recommendations contained in the determination of the fatal accident inquiry which followed the loss of the Antares with regard to the issue of fishing vessel safety certificates, the siting of liferafts on fishing vessels and arrangements for the carriage of emergency position indicating radio beacons and will consider the marine accident investigation branch's recommendations as soon as these are available.

British Rail

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has had over his proposals to privatise British Rail.

Mr. McLoughlin: We have had a number of representations about British Rail privatisation. We expect to publish proposals soon.

Pilots

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to arrange for consultations to take place between his Department and the United Kingdom Pilots Association, Europilots and local pilots before decisions are taken and changes made which affect the livelihoods of the pilots; if he will ensure that guidelines are published in consultation with the pilots regarding anchoring of tankers in Torbay and Lyme bay: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The action taken with regard to tankers in Lyme bay did not affect the overall demand or the arrangements for pilotage and the Secretary of State saw no need to consult the pilot organisations. I have arranged to meet my hon. Friend to discuss these questions.

Marine Accident Investigation Branch

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list and give full details of all investigations carried out by the marine accident investigation branch since April 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: A list of investigations will be found in the appendix to the occasional marine accident investigation branch publication entitled "Summary of Investigations"; the next edition is to be published before the end of this year. The list of investigations carried out between 1 April 1991 and 15 November 1991 is as follows.

Environmental Assessments

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of the tendering procedure adopted by his Department when employing consultants to undertake an environmental assessment.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 20 November 1991]: Generally the tendering procedure for appointment of the main consultant is by means of a one or two-envelope competition, dependent upon the cost of the works. Under the one-envelope system, quality and financial bids are assessed together.

Under the two-envelope system, quality is first assessed and then the financial bids are considered. The quality envelope contains the consultant's proposals for handling and staffing the commission and details of the firm's relevant experience. A panel gives an overall quality marking to each tender. Tenders which receive unacceptable quality markings are not considered further. The second envelope is then opened in which the consultants provide details of their financial bids. The contract is awarded to the consultant who tenders the best balance of quality and price.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what criteria outside consultants are required to meet when appointed by him to carry out an environmental assessment.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 20 November 1991]: The consultants who are appointed to undertake the preparation and supervision of trunk road schemes are generally large multi-disciplinary civil engineering firms which have significant resources and well-proven skills. They are responsible for the full range of duties associated with each commission, including an environmental assessment where appropriate.

Many large firms have a separate specialist division dealing with environmental matters. Where a consultant does not have, or needs to supplement, in-house environmental expertise, he will appoint a sub-consultant. Such appointments require the Department's approval. The Department considers proposed appointments on the basis of relevant expertise, capacity to undertake work and a proven track record.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish the findings of the standing advisory committee on trunk road assessment report; and what timetable he envisages to incorporate the recommendations of that report into his Department's environmental assessment procedures.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 20 November 1991]: Early next year.

Birkham Wood

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what alternative routes he considered to the proposal to build a road through Birkham Wood.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 20 November 1991]: Five routes were considered by the inspector at the public inquiry in 1989 before the Secretary of State confirmed the route proposed by North Yorkshire county council.

Road Fund Taxes (Coaches)

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each European Community country the road fund tax payable on (a) a 30-seater, (b) a 40-seater (c) a 50-seater and (d) a 60-seater coach.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 18 November 1991]: The information requested is not available for all member countries. Not all countries use seating capacity as a basis for calculating VED rates. Many use gross vehicle weight instead. Accurate comparisons between the two systems are difficult to make as there is no direct correlation between seating capacity and weight.

The current yearly rates applicable in those countries for which information is available are as follows

United Kingdom

VED rates for buses and coaches are calculated according to seating capacity

Seating capacity	12 month rate £
Up to 8	100·00
9-16	130·00
17-35	200·00
36-60	300·00
61 and over	450·00

Germany

Buses and coaches are taxed according to their net maximum weight and the number of axles. The current yearly rates are as follows:

Maximum weight (kg)	12 month VED rate (sterling equivalent) 2 axles £	2 axles plus £
14,000	806	755
15,000	959	870
16,000	1,172	1,017
17,000	1,396	1,172
18,000	1,630	1,334
19,000	1,874	1,506
20,000	2,129	1,678

Greece

Tax on private coaches is charged at £3·86 per seat. Yearly rates for a range of coaches (rounded to the nearest £) are as follows:

Seating capacity	12 month rate (sterling equivalent) £
30	116
40	154
50	193
60	232

Ireland

Coaches are taxed according to seating capacity. The current yearly rates are as follows:

Seating capacity	12 month VED rate (sterling equivalent) £
9-20	94
21-40	150
41-60	207
61 and over	263

Luxembourg

Coaches are taxed according to the net weight of the vehicle. Tax rates increase for every 200 kg. Current rates for a range of coaches are as follows:

Net weight (kg)	12-month VED rate (sterling equivalent) (£)
14,000	30
15,000	32
16,000	34
17,000	35
18,000	37
19,000	39

Netherlands

Coaches are taxed according to the net weight of the vehicle and the type of fuel used. There are small differences in taxation depending on the province in which the coach is registered. Rates increase for every 100 kg. Current rates for a range of coaches in the province of Zuid-Holland are as follows:

Net weight (kg)	12-month VED rate (sterling equivalent) Benzine or diesel (£)	Other fuel (£)
14,000	1,375	4,597
15,000	1,456	4,917
16,000	1,538	5,237
17,000	1,620	5,556
18,000	1,701	5,876
19,000	1,783	6,196
20,000	1,864	6,515

Spain

Coaches are taxed according to seating capacity. The current yearly charges are as follows:

Seating capacity	12-month VED rate (sterling equivalent) (£)
21-50	103
50 or over	128

A1 (Bypasses)

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many towns along the route of the A1 have been bypassed; how many towns are planned for bypasses to be constructed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr Chope [holding answer 19 November 1991]: The provision of bypasses for towns and villages is a continuing feature of the trunk road programme. Since the early 1960s some 26 towns have been bypassed as a result of realignment of the A1. Our current plans to upgrade the A1 to motorway largely follow the corridor of the existing A1.

Thornbridge Viaduct

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when work is expected to finish on the Thornbridge viaduct of the M6 motorway in Birmingham; and what are the reasons for, and costs of, the delays in completion.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 19 November 1991]: The Thornbridge viaduct contract south of Thornbridge avenue is on programme for completion in March 1992. No delays are expected on this contract.

Traffic Forecasts

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what account he has taken of the recent report by the Association of County Councils into increased traffic forecasts when considering the future of his roads programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 20 November 1991]: My right hon. Friend welcomes the Association of County Councils' report "Towards a Sustainable Transport Policy" as a contribution to the important debate on how we should respond to the continuing growth in demand for travel, both in urban areas and between them. A range of measures is needed, including investment in roads, and in public transport, traffic management, and attention to land use planning. The Department's road traffic demand forecasts are not a target; the programme of investment in inter-urban road improvements strikes a balance between the economic benefits from avoiding future congestion, which are recognised in the report, safety benefits, and environmental and other considerations.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many sites of special scientific interest are within 100 m of options for alternative trunk routes currently under consideration by his Department; and if he will name each site of special scientific interest and proposed route;

(2) how many sites of special scientific interest are within 100 m of currently proposed routes for trunk road improvements; and if he will name each site of special scientific interest and the name of the proposed route.

Mr. Chope: The information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. One tenth of land in England is covered by over 4,000 sites of special scientific interest.

The Department consults widely at many stages in a scheme's development. Where proposed schemes may affect sites of special scientific interest, the Department consults English Nature.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Polly Peck

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the position of Her Majesty's Government on the question of state immunity being used in the case of Polly Peck in connection with the unrecognised state of the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Government do not recognise the "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus" as a state. It would not be appropriate for me to comment on the matter raised by the hon. Gentleman, which is sub judice.

Parking Fines

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretry of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many unpaid parking fines there are attributable to British missions in European Community countries; and if he will make a statement about reciprocal arrangements for the payment of parking fines.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We are not aware of any unpaid parking fines. We instruct staff at all British missions overseas to pay any parking fines promptly. There are no reciprocal arrangements.

European Community Draft Directives

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on each European Community country's procedures for considering draft directives before their consideration by the Council of Ministers.

Mr. Garel-Jones: A European Parliament publication "Bodies within National Parliaments specialising in European Community affairs", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House, gives information on national scrutiny arrangements. Each member state has its own procedures for considering proposals with national administrations, and consulting outside parties.

Visas

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the visa for Sabia Begum will be issued by the high commission in Dhaka, ref. BEG/A2627, as authorised on 10 September 1991.

Mr. Garel-Jones: In accordance with the guidelines on the handling of representations by Members of Parliament in immigration cases, issued to Members on 14 December 1988, I have referred the question to the correspondence unit of the migration and visa department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. The hon. Member will receive a reply from the unit as soon as possible.

Romania

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent action he has taken to assist in the strengthening of democracy in Romania.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We take every opportunity to encourage the Romanian Government to adhere to their programme of political and economic reform, most recently during the visit of my hon. and learned Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to Romania on 18 to 20 November.

Under the know-how fund, which was extended to Romania in May this year, and other programmes, we are assisting with the establishment of democratic institutions by, for example, providing training programmes for government officials, journalists, and radio and television personnel; and supporting visits in both directions by parliamentarians and members of political parties. We have also paid for two legal experts to visit Romania to advise on drafting the new constitution.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Road Safety

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals the Department of Environment for Northern Ireland roads service has to improve safety at Pound street and Circular road/Harbour highway road junctions, Larne, Co. Antrim; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: In the light of the tragic accident on 23 October a further examination of these junctions is under way to identify whether any additional improvements are necessary.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many fatalities there have been as a result of accidents at (a) the Circular road/Harbour highway junction, Larne and (b) the Pound street/Harbour highway junction, Larne, since their construction.

Mr. Needham: Since 1976 when these two junctions were constructed the number of fatalities as a result of accidents at each has been (a) 9 (b) 3.

Parking

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will introduce legislation for Northern Ireland which would enable residents to obtain parking permits from the Department of Environment (NI) Roads Service, allowing them to park outside their own premises under a resident parking scheme.

Mr. Needham: Residents parking schemes are being considered for inclusion in future primary legislation.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if Rathlin island will achieve designation as environmentally sensitive;

(2) if he will name parts of Fermanagh as environmentally sensitive.

Mr. Hanley: I announced on 20 November that both Rathlin island and other parts of Antrim, and parts of Fermanagh, are presently being considered for designation as environmentally sensitive areas. Details are being completed and interested parties will be consulted in due course. A copy of the press release has been placed in the Library.

Carrickfergus

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the increase in (a) population and (b) unemployment in the borough of Carrickfergus, Co. Antrim, in the last three years; and what consideration he has given to the establishment of a job club in Carrickfergus.

Mr. Needham: Mid-year population estimates for June 1990, the latest available, for the Carrickfergus district council area show an increase of 1,700 in the population over the three-year period from 30 June 1987. Over the same period unemployment in the area decreased by 630. Between October 1988 and October 1991 unemployment fell by 275.

In considering locations for job clubs the Training and Employment Agency takes into account the relative numbers of long-term unemployed in the area and the availability of other job clubs within a reasonable travelling distance. It is not proposed to establish a job club in Carrickfergus.

Unlawful Killings

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the number of Catholics and the number of Protestants who have been killed in Northern Ireland in the current year to the latest available date.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 20 November 1991]: Information on the religious affiliation of those who have died in Northern Ireland this year as a result of the security situation is not available. Overall statistics for such fatalities are, however, set out as follows:

	[1]1991
Civilians[2]	66
RUC	6
Regular Army	5
UDR	7

[1] As at 19 November 1991.
[2] Category includes suspect terrorists.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on unlawful killings in the Province since his oral answers of 14 November.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 20 November 1991]: Three civilians were killed in an incident near Craigavon on the evening of 14 November in what appears to have been a sectarian attack on workers making their way home.

The RUC investigation into these and other recent killings is being vigorously pursued. Measures have been taken to enhance the security force presence in areas believed to be most at risk.

Terrorism

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many civilians have been killed, and how many wounded, by terrorist action since 1969; and of these how many were children aged under 10 years.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 14 November 1991]: Since 1969, a total of 1,713 civilians have been killed and more than 22,000 civilians have been injured as a direct result of terrorist action in Northern Ireland. Of those killed, 24 were children under the age of 10 years. Information is not available on how many children have been injured.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing Associations

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the payment of management fees to housing associations by local authorities following the decision of the district auditor in relation to the payment of such fees by Hammersmith and Fulham council.

Mr. Yeo: I understand the borough of Hammersmith and Fulham is considering the legal implications of certain payments made to housing associations as management fees. My Department is in touch with the borough on this issue.

Public Rights of Way

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the planning inspection handbook dealing with public rights of way will be revised to take into account the Court of Appeal decision in the Rubinstein case mentioned in paragraphs D8. 33.

Mr. Yeo: The section of the planning inspectors handbook dealing with public rights of way is currently under revision and is being amended to take account of the effect of the Court of Appeal decision on the Rubinstein case. At present it is not possible to give a firm date when the updated section will be finalised. However, guidance on the implications of the Court of Appeal judgment affecting the Rubinstein decision is set out in Department of the Environment circular 18/90 which was issued to inspectors shortly after its publication. They are therefore already aware of the most recent guidance and are able to take it into account where applicable.

Pollution and Wastes Directorate

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when each of the six extra staff recently added to his Department's pollution control and wastes directorate took up their posts; what will be their duties; what grades they are employed at; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The information is:

Post created	Grades	Tasks
1 September	1 Grade 6 and 1 Personal Secretary	Work on setting up local authority waste disposal companies.
1 October	1 Grade 7	Secretary of Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee
1 October	1 HEO	International waste management policy work.
1 October	1 Administration trainee	Assistance to Advisory Committee on Business and the Environment.
1 October	1 Divisional Secretary	General assistance of environment protection and industry division.

Refuse Collection

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department proposes to issue new guidelines for charging for collection of refuse from mixed hereditaments.

Mr. Baldry: We intend to implement those provisions of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 relating to the collection of waste, along with other provisions of part II of the Act, on 1 April 1992. Implementation of these provisions requires us to revise the Collection and Disposal of Waste Regulations 1988. The circular which will accompany the revised regulations will provide guidance on charging for the collection of waste from mixed (composite) hereditaments. The Department will consult the local authority associations and others on a draft of the regulations and circular.

Toxic Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information Her Majesty's Government provided to the European Commission under article 13 of Council directive 84/631/EEC on the transfrontier shipment of toxic and hazardous waste; whether this information is publicly available; and what information he has regarding submissions under article 13 by the other EC member states.

Mr. Baldry: The Commission has said that member states will be invited to report on a number of directives concerning waste, including 84/631/EEC, on the basis of a single standardised questionnaire which is in preparation. The United Kingdom will therefore make its report under article 13 of this directive through the questionnaire.

Wild-caught Birds (Imports)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the proportion of imported wild-caught birds which are destined for (a) high street pet shops, (b) aviculturalists and (c) conservation, research and zoos.

Mr. Baldry: This information is not available in the form requested. Since September, my Department has issued licences to import about 60,000 birds covered by conservation legislation. Some 98 per cent. of these birds were required for commercial purposes and the remaining 2 per cent. for personal, breeding or scientific purposes.

UN Environment Conference

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what decisions were agreed on the transfrontier transport of toxic materials at working group II of the third preparatory committee meeting of the United Nations conference on environment and development in August and September 1991.

Mr. Baldry: The United Nations conference on the environment and development working group considered proposals relating to the transfrontier transport of toxic materials for the UNCED action plan (agenda 21). These will now be revised for consideration by the preparatory committee at its fourth session in March 1992. The Government believe the conference can give further impetus to international moves to greater self-sufficiency in waste disposal and improved waste management, including the needs of developing countries.

Harrogate Borough Council

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest estimate received by his Department of the total expenditure by Harrogate borough council for the present financial year.

Mr. Key: Harrogate borough council's budget estimate of net revenue expenditure for 1991-92 is £14·5 million.

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the number of council dwellings sold in the current financial year by Harrogate borough council.

Mr. Yeo: During the first six months of the current financial year, Harrogate borough council received £743,000 from the sale of fixed assets, including £558,000 from the sale of houses and flats. The total receipts figure may include receipts from the sale of land as well as property.

Orimulsion

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department has studied the environmental implications of burning Orimulsion for the generation of electricity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution is closely monitoring the current trials for burning Orimulsion at two power stations—Ince and Richborough. The environmental impacts of emissions from power stations are taken into consideration by HMIP when determining authorisations under part 1 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. HMIP is required to include in any such authorisations conditions to ensure that best available techniques not entailing excessive cost —BATNEEC—will be used to prevent or minimise harmful emissions.

Homelessness

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will issue a revised code of guidance to local authorities on homelessness which specifically addresses the issue of how to interpret those in mortgage arrears.

Mr. Yeo: My Department published a revised third edition of the homelessness code of guidance for local authorities on 14 August, and copies are available in the Library. This gives detailed advice to local authorities on their homelessness functions, including matters that should be taken into account when considering the cases of applicants who are homeless as a result of mortgage arrears. Local authorities are required to have regard to this guidance; but in deciding whether to accept responsibility to secure accommodation for any applicant, authorities must consider the circumstances of each individual case. I do not consider further guidance to be necessary.

Drinking Water

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what communications he has received from the European Commission over the last five years regarding the 1980 drinking water quality directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: There are frequent communications between the Department and the European Commission, formal and informal, about various aspects of this and other directives. The most significant of those relating to the drinking water directive over the last five years have been as follows.

The Commission has pursued infraction proceedings against the United Kingdom alleging failure to incorporate the directive into legislation in Scotland and Northern Ireland, to apply it to water for food production, and to comply in certain respects with the directive's requirements in relation to lead and nitrate. I firmly believe that, following a hearing later this month, the European Court of Justice should recognise that we have in fact taken all practicable steps to meet the requirements of the directive.

The Environment Commissioner wrote to the then Minister for Housing, Environment and Countryside in May 1989 expressing himself satisfied that provisions in what is now the Water Act 1989, and statements made in another place during the debates on it, showed that the United Kingdom intended "to rectify any deficiencies in water supplies as quickly as possible taking certain practicalities into account".

We have since sent the Commission detailed information about the compliance programme which is now in place in all parts of the United Kingdom. As we have told the Commission, we believe this clearly demonstrates that we are implementing the drinking water directive successfully and effectively. Indeed, we do not know of any other member state which has a comparable compliance programme firmly committed and fully funded. We have also sent the Commission the first report of the drinking water inspectorate covering 1990, which is also unique in the Community as a published and comprehensive record of drinking water quality. The chief drinking water inspector will be making a presentation about the report to staff of the Commission in Brussels next month.

Water Act 1989

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the cases which have been referred to the Countryside Commission under section 152 of the Water Act 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: This information is commercially sensitive and is provided to the Secretary of State on the understanding that it will not be made public without the agreement of the water companies.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those water companies which have been successfully prosecuted and which are currently in the process of being prosecuted under the Water Act 1989.

Mr. Baldry: The drinking water inspectorate is investigating a number of incidents which may have had an adverse effect on drinking water quality. When their investigations are concluded they will advise me whether to prosecute the companies concerned.

Water Disconnections

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of water supply disconnections over the last available period of 12 consecutive months for each water company in England and Wales.

Mr. Baldry: This is a matter for the Director General of Water Services. Companies are required under their licence to report the number of domestic disconnections to the area customer service committee of Ofwat every six months. By agreement non-domestic disconnections are also reported. The director general published on 17 July figures for the year ending on 31 March.

Council House Sales

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by district authorities in Yorkshire and Humberside all capital receipts from the sale of council houses received each year since the introduction of the right to buy.

Mr. Yeo: The total discounted values of all sales of houses and flats for each year from 1980-81, as reported by local authorities, are in the table. Actual cash receipts in any year will depend on the extent to which the sales were financed by loans from the authorities.

Multiple Occupation

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received following the publication of his Department's consultative document, "Draft guidance on the fitness standards for houses in multiple occupation."

Mr. Yeo: The Department has received 16 responses, nine of which were from individual local housing authorities, with the remainder from landlords' or tenants' organisations, professional bodies and others. The responses are all broadly supportive of the line taken by the Department and points of detail are being taken into account in preparing the final version.

Council House Sales

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the total figure held by each district authority in Yorkshire and Humberside in capital receipts from the sale of council houses for (a) 1990 and (b) the total held at the end of the first financial quarter for the current year.

Mr. Yeo: The total of usable capital receipts held by each authority at 31 March 1991 is given in the table. Capital receipts held from the sale of council houses are not separately identifiable. Data on the stock of receipts are collected on an annual basis only.

Caravan Sites

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce a decision on the application by South Cambridgeshire district council for designated status under the Caravan Sites Act 1968.

Mr. Yeo: I am considering the application very carefully. I hope to announce the decision shortly and will write to my hon. Friend.

Homosexuality

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all legal actions that have been taken against local authorities under section 28 of the Local Government Act 1988.

Mr. Key: I am not aware of any legal actions that have been taken against local authorities under section 28 of the Local Government Act 1988.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action his Department is taking to monitor the effect on local government practices of section 28 of the Local Government Act 1988.

Mr. Key: While maintaining an overview of how local government legislation operates, my Department does not specifically monitor the effect of section 28 of the Local Government Act 1988. I have no plans to amend the section.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning section 28 of the Local Government Act 1988.

Mr. Key: Since section 28 came into force my Department has received some 126 representations about the section.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward proposals to amend section 28 of the Local Government Act 1988.

Mr. Key: No.

River Ribble (Radioactive Contamination)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measurements are made of radioactive contamination of the River Ribble in Preston; and what have been the most recent measurements.

Mr. Baldry: Levels of radioactivity in the River Ribble are monitored by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, by my Department, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and British Nuclear Fuels plc. The most recent results are published in the inspectorate's "Environmental Monitoring Programme Report for 1989 on the environmental impact of authorised discharges of radioactive wastes in England and Wales" and the Ministry's "Aquatic Environment Monitoring Report Number 23, Radioactivity in Surface and Coastal Waters of the British Isles, 1989", both of which are available in the Library of the House. British Nuclear Fuels also publishes results in an annual report entitled "Radioactive Discharges and Monitoring of the Environment", the most recent of which is for 1990.

East Thames Corridor

Mr. Shore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many civil servants from his Department are deployed on work relating to the East Thames corridor project.

Sir George Young: A core team of eight civil servants is being established to deal with work related to the East Thames corridor and the Department's interests in the channel tunnel rail link. They will be supported by consultants, who will be appointed shortly. Staff in relevant policy divisions and in the London, Eastern and South Eastern regional offices of the Department will also contribute part of their time to this work.

Whale (Export)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment under what circumstances his Department recently authorised the export of an orcinus orca, known as Winnie, from Windsor safari park to Seaworld, Orlando, Florida.

Mr. Baldry: My Department permitted export in accordance with the provisions of EC regulation 3626/82, which implements the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora within the European Community.

The joint Nature Conservation Committee confirmed that export would not be detrimental to the survival of the species and we were satisfied that the other conditions specified in article III of the convention had been met.

City Challenge

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of the total bids received from local authorities under the city challenge initiative; and what criteria he uses to make choices on the distribution of resources.

Mr. Key: In May 1991 my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment invited 15 local authorities to bid for resources under the first, pilot round of the city challenge initiative: Barnsley, Birmingham, Bradford, Bristol, Lewisham, Liverpool, Manchester, Middlesbrough, Newcastle, Nottingham, Salford, Sheffield, Tower Hamlets, Wirral and Wolverhampton. Barnsley was invited to work together with Doncaster and Rotherham in the preparation of a joint bid covering the Dearne Valley. In addition to the 15 invited authorities, six others submitted bids: Coventry, Newham, Sandwell, St. Helen's, Stockton and Sunderland.

In July 1991 the Secretary of State announced that 11 authorities would be invited to work up their bids into five-year action plans for their areas: Bradford, Barnsley (with Doncaster and Rotherham), Lewisham, Liverpool, Manchester, Middlesbrough, Newcastle, Nottingham, Tower Hamlets, Wirral and Wolverhampton.

Subject to the preparation of satisfactory action plans and the availability of resources, the Government intend to commit £82·5 million in resources to these areas over five years starting in 1992-93.

The criteria used in making choices on the distribution of resources include assessments of the needs of urban areas and their potential for regeneration, the quality of the bids received, the subsequent preparation of satisfactory action plans and the capacity of local authorities and their partners in city challenge effectively to implement the action plans.

Community Charge (Refugees)

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make an estimate of the cost to individual community charge payers in the London borough of Hillingdon of administration, accommodation and all other related expenses arising from the care of refugees arriving in the borough during the current financial year.

Mr. Key: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to take account of expenditure by local authorities, including major ports of entry within their area, on administration, accommodation and all other related expenditure arising from the care of refugees.

Mr. Key: It is my right hon. Friend's policy, in making the annual local authority finance settlement, to take account of all expenditure by local authorities which is notified to him.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Shore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many civil servants from his Department are seconded to the London Docklands development corporation.

Mr. Portillo: Two.

Local Council Meetings

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will use his powers under section 20 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 to ensure that local authority members have the right to have their votes recorded at the conclusion of meetings.

Mr. Key: It is important that members should be able to put on record their support, or otherwise, for questions decided at meetings.

My Department is today consulting the English and Welsh local authority associations on draft regulations which will include a requirement for all county, district and London borough councils to adopt a standing order giving any member the right to have their votes recorded in the minutes at the conclusion of meetings.

My hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and Inner Cities announced on 22 May that these regulations will also provide for compulsory standing orders on the appointment and dismissal of chief officers and a number of minor procedural matters.

Sir Peter Levene

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the amount of remuneration and other benefits offered to Sir Peter Levene (i) as special adviser to his Department and (ii) as chairman of the docklands light railway.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 20 November 1991]: Sir Peter Levene receives no remuneration or other benefits as my special adviser. He has been appointed chairman of the docklands light railway by the board of London Regional Transport whose responsibility it is to agree his remuneration.

Endangered Species

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what notice was given to United Kingdom importers of species covered by CITES on each of the last three occasions when the import of such species was banned in the EC;

(2) when he expects to receive the up-to-date list of CITES appendix C2 species detailing the range states for each species and the current EC position with regard to import; and if he will make a statement;

(3) when and by what means British importers of reptile species from Indonesia were informed of the decision by the EC CITES committee to instigate a ban on imports of such species; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 20 November 1991]: We give general information to importers about changes as quickly as possible. Whenever individual traders have been identified, they have been notified in advance of the issue of general notification. General notification has been by way of a revised list, produced by the European Commission, of all species subject to restrictions of this kind. Such revisions were sent to all known United Kingdom traders on 30 April and 26 September. My Department will circulate a further revision reflecting the decisions taken at the meeting on 23 and 24 September as soon as is available. I understand that this is likely to be after the December meeting of the EC CITES committee. Given this delay, we proposed to notify all known traders of the changes made in September within the next few days.

Written notification of the restrictions on trade with Indonesia was sent to one company in October, in response to a related inquiry. Departmental officials have since met representatives of the British Leather Confederation and the principal importers.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those species covered by CITES whose import is banned into the EC only; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 20 November 1991]: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to press for a worldwide ban on exports from Indonesia of reptile species listed in appendix C2 of CITES; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 20 November 1991]: Future action will depend on how constructively the Indonesian authorities respond to the EC CITES committee's decision to impose a temporary ban on the import of annex C2 species into the European Community.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) which officials represented the United Kingdom at the EC CITES committee meeting on 23 and 24 September 1991; at what civil service grades they are each employed; how long each has been working in the policy area concerned with CITES; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will place in the Library a copy of the minutes from the EC CITES committee meeting which took place on 23 and 24 September 1991;

(3) what procedure has been agreed by member states governing the confidentiality of the minutes of the EC CITES committee.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 20 November 1991]: The United Kingdom was represented by: one grade 6 official from my Department; one grade 7 from Her Majesty's Customs and Excise; a senior scientific officer from the Joint Nature Conservation Committee; and a higher scientific officer from the royal botanical gardens. All members of the United Kingdom team have had extensive experience of CITES.

The commission does not produce a detailed record of the discussions at EC committee meetings. A summary of the main decisions reached is circulated to member states, but these summaries are not public documents, and are regarded by the Commission as confidential.

PRIME MINISTER

Cyprus

Mr. Cox: To ask the Prime Minister which Government Ministers have made an official visit to Cyprus since June 1987.

The Prime Minister: There have been no bilateral ministerial visits to Cyprus in the period specified.

Perisher Submarines

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Prime Minister if he will intervene to stop the Perisher submarine exercise scheduled for 22 to 27 November in the Clyde following fishermen's organisations warnings.

The Prime Minister: I understand the sensitivity of the anniversary of the Antares sinking on 22 November. In recognition of this, no submarines on the essential Perisher exercise will enter inshore waters until Saturday 23 November when no fishing activity will be taking place.

Official Entertainment

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister what was the total cost of official entertainment associated with the office of Prime Minister in the financial year 1990-91.

The Prime Minister: The cost of official entertainment associated with my office during 1990-91, including entertainment overseas, was £23,830.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for 21 November.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Parents Charter

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what methods are being used to distribute a copy of the parents charter to every parent; what is the estimated cost of (a) preparing the text, (b) printing and (c) distributing the charter; how many copies have been printed; by what process commercial firms used to distribute the charter were selected; which companies were appointed; and at what cost to public funds.

Mr. Eggar: Schools have been asked, on a voluntary basis, to distribute the charter to parents. Copies are also available in main libraries and post offices, and could be ordered via a freepost address or freephone number which were advertised in the national press and magazines in September and October.

The cost of preparing the text for publication was some £21,000. Printing costs have so far amounted to £446,000, and distribution costs to £550,000. Nearly 6·8 million copies of the charter have been printed, including 281,000 translated into eight ethnic minority languages. The Central Office of Information was commissioned to manage the distribution arrangements, at a cost to date of nearly £4,000. It selected the mailing house, Mail Marketing (Bristol) Ltd., and telephone agency, Merit Direct Ltd., from an approved list of contractors.

Adult Education

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the component for adult education included in the standard spending assessment for each local education authority for the years 1988-89, 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Eggar: Standard spending assessments replaced grant-related expenditure—(GRE)—assessments from April 1990. GRE components for adult education for each local education authority for 1988-89 and 1989-90 are listed in "Technical Handbook of Grant-Related Expenditure" for the relevant year published by the Department of the Environment. Copies are available in the Library. Standard spending assessments do not contain a separate component for adult education.

ENERGY

Nuclear Electricity

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the value expressed in real terms from a 1991 base of the plutonium credit (per kilogram) for the plutonium produced as a by-product of the production of nuclear electricity in the years 1991, 1990, 1985, 1980, 1975, 1970, 1965 and 1961.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: As with other nuclear fuels held in stock, it is for each owner of plutonium to attach a value to the material in drawing up its accounts and to justify that value to its auditors. The precise figures are therefore commercial matters for Nuclear Electric plc, Scottish Nuclear Ltd., British Nuclear Fuels plc and the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority.

Home Energy Efficiency Scheme

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has yet received any recommendations from the Energy Action Grants Agency with regard to the future operation of the home energy efficiency scheme in Scottish area 14; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Following consultation with interested bodies, the Energy Action Grants Agency—EAGA—made recommendations to me that network installer area 14 in Scotland should be divided into four smaller areas. These are: Highlands, Orkney, Shetland, Western Isles, the boundaries being those of the relevant local authorities. I understand that the present network installer for the area agreed to step down in order that a new bidding process could take place. In September the EAGA placed advertisements inviting bids by 1 November for registration as network installers in these areas. A total of 11 bids were received, and these are currently being assessed with the aim of enabling successful bidders to be registered before the end of December.

Orimulsion

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether his Department has any policy guidelines on the burning of Orimulsion for the generation of electricity; what information he has on its current use; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The type and quantity of fuel used by the electricity generators is an operational matter for the companies concerned, subject to emission limits imposed by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution—HMIP—under the Environmental Protection Act 1990. Orimulsion is currently being burnt by PowerGen plc, with the agreement of HMIP under SI 318, at its Ince and Richborough power stations on a long-term trial basis.

Thermal Efficiency

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has about the relative thermal efficiency of (a) combined cycle gas power plants and (b) combined heat and power plants; and if he will publish a table showing the approximate range of thermal efficiency achieved by plants using both types of power generators.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Modern combined cycle gas turbine electricity generating stations of the type planned currently have a thermal efficiency of about 48 per cent., although future plants are expected to offer improvements on this, possibly reaching 54 per cent. in the next five years.

Combined heat and power plants are usualy tailored to meet the particular combination of heat and electricity loads of individual customers, and can be almost any size and combination of type of equipment and fuel. Therefore it is not possible to generalise but efficiencies are normally in the range of 70 to 80 per cent. but can be as high as 90 per cent.

Ratcliffe Power Station

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has on the amount of limestone which will be required for the flue gas desulphurisation programme at Ratcliffe power station.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: In the environmental statement which accompanied PowerGen plc's application for consent under section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989 the company stated that the flue gas desulphurisation plant at Ratcliffe would use some 306,000 tonnes of limestone annually.

Research Expenditure

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give for each year from 1979-80 to 1992-93 inclusive the spending or proposed spending on renewables research funded by his Department breaking the figures down into type of renewable technology and expressing all the figures in (i) money terms and (ii) 1991-92 real terms.

Mr. Wakeham: Outturn expenditure from 1979-80 on my Department's renewable energy research, development and demonstration programme is set out in tables. Expenditure for the current year is estimated. Proposed expenditure on renewables in 1992-93 is £24·3 million; a breakdown of this figure by type of renewable technology is not yet available.

IAEA Inspection

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list all the countries currently subject to International Atomic Energy Agency inspection.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The International Atomic Energy Agency is entitled to inspect the declared facilities of a country with which it has concluded a safeguards agreement. A list of those agreements, as of 31 December 1990, is contained in the agency's annual report for 1990, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Offshore Supplies Office

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what changes he expects to make in the future operation of the Offshore Supplies Office.

Mr. Wakeham: I have reviewed the future role of the Offshore Supplies Office—OSO—in the light of the present stage of development of the offshore supplies industry and the challenges facing it in the 1990s. The OSO's principal tasks will remain unchanged—promotion of fair commercial opportunity in all oil and gas markets, support for the development of the latest technologies and promotion of United Kingdom exports. It will have a major role in supporting EC initiatives for the creation of open and commercially fair markets. Open and commercially fair markets are crucial to the continued success of the United Kingdom offshore oil and gas field supplies industry. That industry is now mature, however, and firmly established at home. I take the view, therefore, that the detailed monitoring of orders for the United Kingdom continental shelf is no longer necessary and that the OSO should no longer be charged with this task. I shall continue to report to Parliament, in my annual report on the development of the oil and gas resources of the United Kingdom, on the progress of the supplies industry. But I plan to give new emphasis to its success in overseas markets, in place of the present analysis of orders placed for the United Kingdom Continental Shelf.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Child Refugees

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many child refugees under the age of 17 years have been admitted to the United Kingdom during each of the past 12 months; if he will provide a table showing their country or origin; and what financial support the Home Office provides for the care and resettlement of child refugees in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I assume that my hon. Friend is referring to unaccompanied children seeking asylum in the United Kingdom who are granted temporary admission pending consideration of their application. The available information is on those cases who were unaccompanied at the point of their arrival, and is given in the table.

In addition to providing grants to certain voluntary organisations to assist with refugee resettlement, the Home Office makes a grant—about £600,000 in 1991—to the refugees arrivals project which provides emergency assistance to newly arrived destitute asylum seekers, including unaccompanied minors. I understand that under the Children Act 1989 local authorities are responsible for arranging the care of unaccompanied child refugees or asylum seekers.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of crimes committed in each police area in 1979 and in 1990 with the percentage change given in each case.

Mr. John [illegible]: This information is published annually in chapter 2 of the Command Paper "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales" the latest edition of which, Cm 1322, contains 1989 statistics. 1990 figures were published in "Home Office Statistical Bulletin No. 4/91" in March 1991. Both publications have been placed in the Library of the House.

Brixton Prison

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what information the governor of Brixton prison was given about Staffordshire police operations in Brixton prison during 1990 and 1991;

(2) what consultations took place in 1990 between the Prison Department, the Metropolitan police and the Staffordshire police about police operations in Brixton prison.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: As I indicated in my statement of 5 August following the report of the inquiry by Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons into the escape, information became available to Prison Service headquarters and to Brixton prison from the police in February 1991 that the prisoners were seeking to escape, that they had identified the Sunday chapel service as an opportunity and that they were seeking to acquire a firearm. This information was not passed to Ministers.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if the last governor of Brixton prison will be given the opportunity to answer charges made directly or indirectly against him;

(2) if any employees at the Prison Department will be disciplined following investigations into the Brixton prison escape in July of two IRA suspects.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I announced on 5 August that Mr. Ralph Shuffrey CB has been asked to advise the principal establishment officer of the Home Office and the Director General of the Prison Service on whether there were any grounds for taking disciplinary action against any member of staff in connection with the escape from Brixton prison on 7 July. Mr. Shuffrey, who was assisted by Mr. John Richardson OBE, subsequently advised that there were such grounds in relation to the then head of DOC1 division in Prison Service headquarters, the then governor of Brixton and four prison officers who were on duty at the time.

Because of his retirement, the question of disciplinary action against the then governor of Brixton did not arise and no charges were laid against him. The position was explained to him and he was told that it was open to him to write to the director of personnel and finance of the Prison Service with his comments. A disciplinary charge was laid against the then head of DOC1 division. The disciplinary proceedings found that there had been errors of judgment and failures of procedure, but the charge was not sustained and was dismissed. In the case of the prison officers, an investigation was conducted under the code of discipline for prison officers, in the light of which the governor of Brixton decided that no charges should be laid.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in apprehending the two IRA suspects who escaped from Her Majesty's prison, Brixton last July; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that investigations are continuing.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how a loaded 2·5 calibre pistol was smuggled into Brixton gaol between February and July 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: These matters were inquired into by Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons, parts of whose report on the escape of two prisoners from Brixton prison on 7 July were published on 5 August. Copies were placed in the Library along with copies of my statement of the same date. In his report Her Majesty's chief inspector said that most probably the gun was sent in by post, in the cut-out soles of a pair of shoes, the body of the gun in one shoe, the magazine in the other.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Staffordshire about Staffordshire police operations in Brixton prison during 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I called for a report from the chief constable of Staffordshire on 6 August after I had received the report of Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons into the Brixton escape on 7 July. The chief constable's report was submitted on 13 August, and a supplementary report on 5 September. The chief constable has arranged for a further investigation by Mr. Colin Bailey, the deputy chief constable of Nottinghamshire, as announced yesterday into allegations made in the "Thames Reports" programme broadcast on 19 November.

Mrs. Jamila Sadiq

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will take a decision over the application of Mrs. Jamila Sadiq (Ref. IMP 5767465(S)) (GV100/12157) to join her husband in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The entry clearance officer in Islamabad was notified on 20 November of the decision to refuse the application. I regret the delay in dealing with this application, which was first referred to the Home Office in April 1991.

"As Safe as Houses"

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he has taken on the recommendations of the Fire Brigades Union report, "As Safe as Houses", a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The discussion document was submitted for consideration to the Central Fire Brigades

Advisory Council at its meeting of 20 November. The Home Office will consider its response to the document in the light of advice from that forum.

Vagrancy Act 1824

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will undertake to bring forward proposals to repeal the Vagrancy Act 1824.

Mr. John Patten: No. The Vagrancy Act 1824 has been much amended over the years and in its present form provides power to deal with a number of nuisances, including indecent exposure.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has had in connection with the number of homeless persons arrested under the Vagrancy Act 1824.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question by the hon. Member for Newcastle-under-Lyme (Mrs. Golding) on 13 November 1991 at column 537.

Prison Security

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the recent prison security audit; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend recently received the final report of the prison security audit conducted by Mr. Hadfield and Mr. Lakes and is still considering it.

Fire Safety

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when section 3 of the Fire Precautions Act 1971 will be enacted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: There are no plans to bring section 3 of the Fire Precautions Act 1971 into force.

Private living accommodation is a matter best left to local housing authorities. They have a duty at least once a year to consider the housing conditions in their district with a view to determining what action to take in performance of their functions.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking to protect elderly persons from fire risks.

Mr. John Patten: The Home Office provides specific advice on fire safety for elderly people in the form of written and video material. That material provides general guidance on fire prevention and fire safety measures in the home and is targeted to the elderly age group.

In addition, the Home Office targeted its 1990-91 national television advertising campaign on smoke alarms at the elderly. The main target group for the 1991-92 campaign will again be the elderly.

There is legislation in place in respect of types of accommodation housing elderly people which, among other things, makes provision for fire precautions. Such legislation is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health.

Special Branch

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has authorised any special branch operations in British gaols since he took office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: It is not the practice to disclose such information.

Drugs

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of drugs seized in the United Kingdom are seized at the frontier; and what percentage comes from other member states of the European Community.

Mr. John Patten: About 65 per cent. by weight of drugs seized in 1990 were seized at ports by HM Customs and some 60 per cent. by weight of all customs seizures came through other member states of the European Community.

Terrorist Offences

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the present number of Irish (a) men and (b) women being held in prisons for terrorist activities committed in the United Kingdom;

(2) what is the prison category of Irish (a) men and (b) women being held in prisons in England and Wales for terrorist activities.

Mrs. Rumbold: As at 19 November 1991, the numbers of men and women held in prisons in England and Wales for terrorist-related offences committed in the United Kingdom who have given the Irish Republic as their place of birth were nine and one respectively. All these prisoners are in category A.

Prison Escapes

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department of the inmates who have escaped from prisons in the United Kingdom during the current year, how many escaped from (a) closed establishments and (b) open establishments; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: From 1 January 1991 to 18 November 1991 a total of 270 prisoners escaped from closed prison establishments in England and Wales. In the same period, two prisoners escaped from open establishments in England and Wales. Prison matters elsewhere in the United Kingdom are the responsibility of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Northern Ireland.

A further 279 prisoners absconded from closed establishments and 1,022 from open establishments in England and Wales during the same period. Absconding in this context means unlawfully gaining liberty by abusing trust without having to overcome a security barrier or specific supervision.

Prison Officers (Shifts)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent change in prison officers' shift patterns have taken place at Castington youth training centre; what changes there have been to visiting on Mondays and Fridays; and what effect the new shift patterns have had on the number of meals taken in cells.

Mrs. Rumbold: New shift systems, designed to make more efficient use of staff resources, were introduced on 13 October 1991. As a general rule visits are not now held on Mondays and Fridays, because neither day was popular with visitors. Inmates dine in association, but breakfast and tea meals are now taken in cells. This has enabled an earlier start to evening association, which is preferred by inmates.

Animal Rights

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the animal rights national index; how many names are contained in this index; and in what year it was created.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The animal rights national index —ARNI—was created in 1986 and it holds about 21,000 names. The data held by ARNI are used to assist the police in their investigations into acts of animal extremism and also to provide advice and guidance to those who may be at risk from such acts.

Electoral Registration

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list those newspapers, magazines and periodicals in which the Government have placed advertisements aimed at encouraging electoral registration in the last year; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will publish a table showing what the Government have spent in the last year promoting the use of postal and proxy voting in each parliamentary constituency; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The annual electoral registration advertising campaign in England and Wales this year used national poster sites only; no advertisements were placed in newspapers, magazines or periodicals. In a smaller, separate campaign designed to help teachers to encourage young people to register, advertisements were placed in The Times Educational Supplement, Educational Guardian, Telegraph Education and Teachers Weekly.

A total of £14,500 has been spent in England and Wales on a leaflet and poster on absent voting. It is not possible to break this figure down by parliamentary constituency.

Police Statistics

Mr. McWilliam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by police authority in England (a) the number of police officers who would have been lost to force establishments if the 1991-92 budget reductions had fallen entirely on manpower and (b) the actual number of police officers it is planned to reduce the force establishments by in that year.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is for police authorities to set force budgets and determine police strength. I am aware that some authorities set budgets for 1991-92 on a basis likely to result in the strength of the police force falling below the establishment which I had approved: Merseyside by 100 officers, Northumbria by 116, West Yorkshire by around 200, and Derbyshire by a cumulative figure of 130.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will show the marginal cost of every extra 10 police officers in West Yorkshire above the present establishment for the poll tax payers of Leeds, taking into account the impact of charge capping on the West Yorkshire police authority budget.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: This information can be provided only by the West Yorkshire police authority.

Child Protection

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration his Department has given to the project pilot schemes completed in September on "Protection of Children Disclosure of Criminal Background for the Voluntary Sector", in accordance with his Department's guidelines 58/1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Home Office has received and considered a report from an independent researcher which evaluates the pilot schemes. The report is due to be published by the Volunteer Centre UK early next year. In response to the Home Office scrutiny of criminal records, the Government have announced their intention to publish a consultation paper towards the end of next year outlining their proposals for new arrangements for disclosing information from the criminal record.

Prisoners (Mail)

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the criteria he uses to determine which penal establishments have outgoing mail from prisoners routinely read; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold My right hon. Friend announced on publication of the Woolf report that routine reading of prisoners' mail would be abolished save in dispersal prisons and for certain other limited categories of prisoners. A copy of circular instruction CI 10/1991, which gave effect to this, is in the Library. The circular instruction also sets out the circumstances in which the governor may reinstitute routine reading for a temporary period.

Bail Offenders

Mr. McWilliam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent studies he has considered of the percentage of crime which is committed by people on bail; if he will fund ongoing national research into this problem; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Hexham (Mr. Amos) on 13 November 1991 at column 535.

SCOTLAND

Trunk Roads

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give a breakdown of the planned expenditure on (a) new construction and improvement,

(b) structural maintenance and (c) current maintenance on trunk roads by his Department for the years 1992-93, 1993-94 and 1994-95.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Decisions on forward spending plans for individual programmes within the Scottish block have still to be finalised. I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as the information is available.

Housing Statistics

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the amount of (a) sheltered and (b) special needs housing built by (i) district councils, (ii) Scottish Homes or its predecessor, (iii) housing associations and (iv) the private sector, in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on housebuilding by user category is not available for the years prior to 1986, and could be extracted only at disproportionate cost. The latest available information on sheltered and special needs housing built by district councils and the private sector is set out in the tables. Information on Scottish Homes, and its predecessor, and on housing associations, is not available in the precise form requested. I will write to the hon. Member about this.

Sewage Sludge

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what alternative means of disposal for sewage sludge in Scotland will be available when dumping at sea ceases.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Disposal options will include agricultural land, forestry, landfill, incineration and composting.

Water Supply (Lead)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects the water authorities' assessment of lead in water supply zones to be completed; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Water authorities have given undertakings to my right hon. Friend that their assessments of water supply zones where there is a risk that the United Kingdom standard for lead in water may not always be met will be completed by 31 December 1991. Where a need for further treatment to comply with the regulations is identified authorities will be required to undertake the necessary improvements within specified time scales.

Water Disconnections

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of water supply disconnections over the latest available 12-month period for each regional authority.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Supplies to domestic consumers in Scotland may be disconnected only for short-term operational reasons, for example to undertake repairs, make connections or plumbing alterations. Supplies to non-domestic consumers may also be disconnected for other reasons, including those arising from non-payment of water charges. Information on the number of disconnections is not held centrally.

Cumbernauld High School

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the reply given to the hon. Member for Cumbernauld and Kilsyth on 11 November, Official Report, column 381, when he will publish the follow-up report on Cumbernauld high school undertaken by Her Majesty's inspectorate of schools in January 1991.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 20 November 1991]: At present reports of follow-up inspections are not published although such reports are likely to be published in future following the implementation of the parents charter.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Libya (Contracts)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assistance he is providing to British businesses to try to obtain contracts in connection with (a) the great manmade river project and (b) the Melita power station in Libya.

Mr. Lilley: None. We have neither encouraged nor discouraged British companies which wish to trade with Libya. This has been a matter for their commercial judgment alone.

Blue Arrow

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) on what date his Department sold copies of his inspector's report on Blue Arrow; and how much money was made as a result of these sales;

(2) how much it cost his Department to recover copies of the inspector's report on Blue Arrow after they had been sold to members of the public;

(3) for what reason his Department (a) sold certain copies of the DTI inspector's report on Blue Arrow and (b) decided not to publish the report.

Mr. Lilley: My Department supplied copies of the report on 7 and 8 November to a number of people who might be affected by it, against written undertakings of confidentiality from their solicitors. This was done in accordance with the provisions of the Companies Act 1985 "on request and on payment of the prescribed fee".
The cost of recovering the reports from recipients was negligible.

I have discretion to furnish copies of reports to persons who might be affected by it in order to give them an opportunity to make representations to me about publication of the report. In the light of representations made to me, I have decided to delay publication.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consideration was given to the effect on the continuing trial involving the financial advisers of Blue Arrow before the decision was taken to release details of an investigation on one aspect of Blue Arrow's affairs.

Mr. Lilley: Full consideration, including the taking of legal advice. Details have been given in confidence only to persons whose interests might be affected by the report.

Independent Financial Sector

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to encourage the independent financial sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The provision of independent financial advice is one of the matters currently being considered by the Securities and Investments Board in its review of retail regulation.

The Government are keen to see a wide range of suitable independent advice available in the marketplace through independent financial advisers and others.

European Space Agency

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the outcome of the European Space Agency's ministerial council meeting held on 18 to 20 November in Munich.

Mr. Leigh: The main achievement of the European Space Agency—ESA—council meeting at ministerial level, held in Munich, was to initiate a new ESA programme for the observation of the Earth and its environment from polar orbit, known as the first polar mission.

Ministers also agreed to continue development of ESA's Columbus programme, of the Hermes manned spaceplane, and of a data relay satellite, within a slightly reduced budget, during 1992. They will meet again late in 1992 to review the future direction of the programmes approved at Munich.

The new Earth observation programme will develop advanced instruments in support of climate research and the monitoring of global climate. It will also support the flight of operational meteorological instruments and will carry forward radar-based remote sensing using synthetic aperture radar. In addition, the programme will address the necessary facilities for data reception and distribution on the ground.

The instruments are scheduled to be flown in 1998 on the polar platform, which is under development within ESA's Columbus programme. The United Kingdom played a prominent role at the council in urging ESA member states to give a decisive impetus to this new Earth observation and environment programme. The programme represents a positive European contribution to worldwide efforts to understand the global environment. This is a matter of central importance to current international discussions and negotiations including the forthcoming United Nations conference on environment and development, in Rio de Janiero next year.

Manufacturing Output

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will show the value of output per hour in the manufacturing sector (a) at 1991 prices and (b) the percentage change year on year from 1961.

Mr. Mellor: I have been asked to reply.

This information is not available in the form requested. Estimates of output per hour in the manufacturing sector are available, in index numbers at constant 1985 prices, for years from 1970. These are held as series DMBH on the Central Statistical Office database which can be accessed by the House of Commons Library.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Cardiff Airport

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is the level of Customs and Excise personnel at Cardiff international airport;

(2) how many full-time customs officers were deployed at Cardiff international airport in each year since 1985; and how many are deployed now;

(3) what level of centrally funded resources is deployed at Cardiff international airport to deter and detect drug smuggling; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Resources are centrally funded to individual executive units, but the allocation of those resources is a matter for the head of the executive unit. In the allocation process full account is taken of the varying degrees of risk that occur in the ports and airports within the boundaries of the executive unit.

Since 1985 the following numbers of full-time customs officers have been deployed at Cardiff international airport:

	Number
1985	16
1986-87	16
1988	17
1989-90	17

The numbers include staff employed on both anti-smuggling and fiscal work. They also reflect additional staff years to cover peak seasonal periods as well as the perceived need, at that time, to staff on a continuous basis rather than effort being targeted according to risk.

Following the national review of anti-smuggling controls which has taken place within the Customs and Excise Department, improvements are being made which involve a shift away from predictable static controls to a more mobile, flexible effort directed at areas of greatest risk as perceived at any given time. These risks are assessed within the executive unit on a wider base than Cardiff international airport alone.

As part of the process of greater flexibility, customs staff for the locality are now concentrated in premises at Barry docks and cover Cardiff and Barry docks as well as the airport. There is a total of 20 full-time anti-smuggling staff available and these can be supplemented by additional resources from elsewhere in the executive unit as the need arises. In addition 16 full-time staff are employed on customs fiscal work in the locality.

Car Allowances

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the conditions under which (a) volunteer hospital drivers and (b) hon. Members are taxed on notional profits on car allowances.

Mr. Maude: The position in law is that motor mileage allowances paid to individuals, whether employees or office holders, or volunteer hospital drivers, are liable to income tax if the allowances exceed the costs of running and maintaining the car for use for work or office, or for use for driving for a hospital car service. The tax liability arises under schedule E, employees and office holders, and schedule D, volunteer hospital drivers.

Hon. Members, like other office holders or employees, may use a simplified administrative arrangement, known as the fixed profit car scheme, under which "tax free" rates calculated by the Inland Revenue to reflect typical motoring costs can be set against motor mileage allowances received in order to calculate the taxable profit element. Alternatively, hon. Members can choose to keep detailed records of the actual motoring expenses incurred and the precise parliamentary, constituency and private mileage travelled to enable them to make their own claims for relief.

Volunteer hospital drivers may use simple tables drawn up by the Inland Revenue based on the FPCS arrangements, which are available for employees and office holders, to work out if there is any taxable profit element of their motor mileage allowances. The Revenue has compared the rates of mileage allowances paid by the various health authorities with the "tax free" FPCS rates; the tables show a profit figure where the mileage allowances exceed the FPCS rates. Alternatively, volunteer hospital drivers can choose to keep detailed records of the mileage allowances received, the actual motoring expenses incurred, and the mileage driven privately and for the hospital car service.

Taxpayers Charter

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the omission of a statement informing taxpayers that they will be presumed to have dealt with their tax affairs honestly unless there is reason to believe otherwise, which was contained in the taxpayers charter of 1986, from the taxpayers charter of 1991 constitutes a change in policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Francis Maude: Taxpayers will continue to be presumed to have dealt with their tax affairs honestly unless there is reason to believe otherwise. The omission of a statement to that effect from the 1991 taxpayers charter does not constitute a change of policy in this regard.

Hospital Car Service

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to reply to letters of 20 September, 8 October and 24 October from the hon. Member for South Hams about the taxation of the hospital car service mileage allowance.

Mr. Maude: Letters on this subject were delayed while the Inland Revenue gave consideration to the tax treatment of these allowances. I have now set out the tax treatment and I will reply shortly.

Civil Service Relocation

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will increase his efforts to ensure civil service relocation is speeded up; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Government's relocation policy is not centrally directed. Departments are required to review the location of their work regularly and systematically in accordance with clear guidelines. Between 1988 and June 1990 Departments identified nearly 23,000 posts for location or relocation away from the south-east. I hope to update the House shortly on the progress made by the end of June 1991.

Multilateral Surveillance

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he intends to submit the United Kingdom medium-term economic plan to the European Council of Finance Ministers for consideration by the Council in its programme of multilateral surveillance.

Mr. Maude: The Government have submitted the United Kingdom's medium-term convergence programme, based on the medium-term financial strategy and the autumn statement, to the Community. It will be considered by ECOFIN in due course. A copy of the programme has been placed in the Library of the House.

PSBR

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the Treasury rules which determine the construction of, and accounting conventions governing, the public sector borrowing requirement.

Mr. Mellor: The notes to table 2·5 in the Financial Statistics Explanatory Handbook, July 1990 edition, describe how the public sector borrowing requirement is defined and measured. More details are available from further references listed there.

Taxpayers Charter

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many taxpayers in the United Kingdom fall within the ambit of the taxpayers charter.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 18 November 1991]: The taxpayers charter covers taxpayers dealt with by the Inland Revenue and Customs and Excise. The Inland Revenue deal with over 30 million taxpayers, including individuals, partnerships, companies and trusts. Customs and Excise deal with around 1·8 million VAT traders, 35,000 excise and inland customs traders and international travellers (some 60 million each year). Some people fall under more than one of these categories.

Child Benefit

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the total cost to the Exchequer of raising child benefit to £15 for every child during a full financial year and the gains in taxation revenues made if (a) the additional married couple's allowance had not been raised at the last Budget and (b) the additional married couple's allowance—additional to single person's allowance—at the last Budget had been reduced by half.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 19 November 1991]: The additional social security expenditure arising from paying child benefit at £15 per week throughout 1991-92 would be about £3·2 billion. The married couple's allowance for those aged under 65 was not changed in the last Budget. The direct revenue yield of reducing the additional allowance by half is estimated to be about £2·3 billion at 1991-92 income levels.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Free School Meals

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many children will lose their entitlement to free school meals under the Social Security (Unemployment, Sickness and Invalidity Benefit) Amendment Regulations 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The amendment to the Social Security (Unemployment, Sickness and Invalidity) Regulations 1983 will not now be made and the current definition of employment will remain unchanged. Consequently those refusing work of up to 24 hours a week will not lose their entitlement to unemployment benefit or income support. Thus for those on income support with children, included in this category, there will be no loss of free school meals.

Disabled People

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to improve benefits payable to disabled people in employment who have a reduced work capacity because of their disability; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: In April 1992 the Government will introduce the new disability working allowance. This will be the first benefit in this country specifically intended to help disabled people to work even if their earning capacity is reduced.

National Insurance

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action he is taking on the actuary's report on the level of the rebate to be paid over the next five-year period on national insurance contributions for those contracting out of the state earnings-related pension scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 15 November 1991 at column 685.

Health Screening

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list those companies which tendered for the contract for the Department of Social Security health screening programme; what is the cost to public funds; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Disclosure of the names of the companies invited to tender for the Department of Social Security health screening programme could cause commercial damage to the unsuccessful tenderers and jeopardise the Department's future relationships with its suppliers. The cost of the three-year contract at current prices and depending upon take-up is estimated to be £4 million.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the BUPA health screening service will visit the Coventry offices of his Department; for how long; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: BUPA mobile screening units will be visiting Department of Social Security offices in Coventry early in December for a period of one or two weeks depending upon take-up.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the criteria which led to the selection of BUPA to provide a health screening programme for his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: BUPA was chosen following a competitive tendering exercise to assess the ability of leading health-care providers to deliver the Department's requirements, having particular regard to company infrastructure; financial stability; mechanisms for ensuring quality and integrity of service; logistical planning; standard of mobile screening units; experience of comparable screening programmes; capacity to meet the Department's specification; and overall value for money within available budget.

Young Persons (Benefits)

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many persons aged 16 and 17 years, respectively, received (a) unemployment benefit and (b) income support in each year after 1987.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is shown in the table.

May	Aged	Number of claimants in receipt of Income Support	Number of claimants in receipt of Unemployment Benefit
1988	16	32,000	1,000
	17	69,000	6,000
1989	16	5,000	—
	17	13,000	—
1990	16	4,000	—
	17	17,000	—

Figures are not yet available for Income Support for 1991.

Notes:

1. Some cases may be receiving both Income Support and Unemployment Benefit.
2. All figures are rounded to the nearest thousand.
3. From October 1988 Unemployment Benefit was no longer payable to a 16 or 17 year old.

Source: annual statistical enquiry 1988, 1989 and 1990 half-yearly analysis of unemployment claimants (grossed up from a 5 per cent. sample).

Mortgage Support

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he has on the current level of mortgage support expenditure; and what was the comparable situation 12 months previously.

Miss Widdecombe: Help with mortgage interest is given through income support. Estimates of the amounts included in income support assessments for mortgage interest in 1989 and 1990, the latest year for which information is available, are as follows:

	£ million
1989	355
1990	555

Note: Estimates are rounded to the nearest £5 million.
Source: Income support annual statistical enquiries, May 1989 and 1990.

Community Charge Benefit

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the cost of increasing benefits to cover the 20 per cent. of the poll tax in 1989-90 and 1990-91 and the estimate for 1991-92; and how many people in each year were helped.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 18 November 1991]: The information requested is as follows:

Year	1989	1990	1991
Estimated cost of increasing income-related benefits to cover the 20 per cent. contribution to the community charge (£ million)	£500	£520	£580
Number of income-related benefit cases (million)	7·7	7·5	7·7

Sources: Sources of the caseload information are the housing benefit/community charge benefit management information system, the income support annual statistical enquiry, and the family credit statistical system.

The figures relate to May of each year for income support and housing benefit, and April for family credit. The average caseload for the year may be different due to fluctuations during the year; the caseload and expenditure figures cannot be compared directly because each is derived differently.

WALES

Dental Health

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has now completed his consideration of implementing a new management information system for the community dental service.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The development of management information systems for the community dental service is a matter for district health authorities. The Welsh Office has fully funded authorities to purchase equipment for capturing data which will meet the information requirements agreed with chief administrative dental officers and notified to district general managers in February 1991.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a list of those hospitals providing paediatric emergency dental services staffed by the community dental service.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information his Department holds on the relationship between the incidence of dental caries and social deprivation.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Information about the incidence of dental caries in households of different social class is collected and published decennially by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys. The latest published information is from the 1988 adult dental health survey and the 1983 child dental health survey.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library the reports by district health authorities in Wales of the assessment of local dental health needs in their area.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I will arrange for copies of the reports of directors of dental public health to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action his Department is taking to reduce the incidence of cross-infection in general dental surgeries.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The incidence of cross-infection in general dental practice surgeries is determined by the quality of hygienic practices undertaken in those surgeries and is the responsibility of the individual general dental practitioners. Where a family health service authority has reason to believe that appropriate infection control is not practised, it may seek an independent inspection and report from an officer of the dental reference service. Many family health service authorities also operate a voluntary inspection for all new practices.

In 1988, with the aid of family health service authorities and the dental profession in Wales, all practices were surveyed by questionnaire on the quality of their infection control arrangements. Where identified as necessary, counselling of practitioners was given by the profession locally.

To ensure appropriate practitioner training in cross-infection and understanding of practice responsibilities:

Guidance has been issued to the profession. I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 10 July 1991;

Funding was allocated for equipment to facilitate improved undergraduate and postgraduate training (£605,000 in 1988-89-90 and 1990-91 and £900,000 in 1991-92);

A video on hygienic practice was issued to all general practitioners in Wales in 1989.

In order to pump-prime appropriate equipment purchases in 1989 by general dental practitioners, the forecast outturn for each general dental practitioner in the United Kingdom was uplifted by approximately £1,000 additional to the usual refund of expenses.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of school children aged over five years is maintained schools were inspected by the community dental service in each family health service authority area in Wales in each year since 1971.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Information on an individual FHSA basis is not available prior to 1976. The available data are given in the following table:

Percentage of school children[1] inspected by Community dental Service

Oro-facial Cancer

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has now received the report of the Welsh Dental Committee working party on oro-facial cancer.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: No.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what amount of money he has given (a) annually and (b) by school to the assisted places scheme in each of the years 1984 to 1991.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Payments made to independent schools for fee remissions under the assisted places scheme from 1984-85 to 1991 are shown in the table:

Sewage Treatment Works, Llanfaes

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will outline his reasons for refusing to exercise his powers under the planning Acts to call in for determination a planning application by Welsh Water to construct a sewage treatment works at Llanfaes, Ynys Mon, Gwynedd.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: On the information available to him, my right hon. Friend concluded that this application did not involve planning issues of more than local importance and should be determined by the local planning authority.

Nebulisers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will contact the Welsh health authorities on payments for nebulisers and other health requisites.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Our officials have already contacted Welsh district health authorities asking them to examine their existing policies and practices for the provision of equipment such as nebulisers. In addition, the authorities have been asked to investigate and report on individual cases that have been notified.

Paediatrics

Mr. Allan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many new senior registrar posts in paediatrics have been created in Wales this year; at which hospitals they are based; and what arrangements exist for rotation with other areas.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Three new senior registrar posts in paediatrics have been created this year in Wales; two in community paediatrics and one in the regional perinatal intensive care service. All three are located in South Glamorgan hospitals. The rotations involved were decided on the advice of the speciality standing advisory committee and the specialty training committee.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the amount of toxic waste imported into the ports of Wales for the years (a) 1988, (b) 1989, (c) 1990 and for the first three quarters of 1991 giving the place of origin of the toxins.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Returns on the importation of hazardous waste into the United Kingdom are available only for the period since the introduction of the Transfrontier Shipment of Hazardous Waste Regulations in October 1988.

On the basis of information currently available the information requested is as follows:

Nominated Bodies

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the total number of (a) male and (b) female members of nominated bodies in Wales in 1979 and 1990.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested is as follows:

	1990
Female members of nominated bodies in Wales	282
Male members of nominated bodies in Wales	1,397

Information for 1979 was not collected and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Procedure Committee

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list the outstanding recommendations of the Procedure Committee which have not yet been put before the House for decision.

Mr. MacGregor: The following are the principal recommendations of the Procedure Committee since 1983-84 which have not yet been put to the House for decision on a substantive motion:

Session	Title of Report	HC Number	Principal recommendation not yet put to the House for decision
1985-86 (Second)	Allocation of time to Government Bills in Standing Committee	324	(a) Proceedings in Standing Committee should not continue beyond 10 pm. (b) Business Sub-Committees to be established for each Standing Committee on a Government Bill, to meet after sixth sitting of Standing Committee to consider progress of Bill and, if necessary, propose timetable for remainder of clauses.
1986-87 (First)	A Parliamentary Calendar	157	(a) Greater predictability of Recess timings and lengths. (b) Firmer dates for Christmas Recess (House to rise no later than 22 December and return no earlier than 7 January).

Session	Title of Report	HC Number	Principal recommendation not yet put to the House for decision
			(c) Easter and Whitsun Recesses to last at least one week. (d) Summer Recess to start no later then 21 July and end no earlier than 15 October. (e) Motions specifying Recess dates should not be taken on the same day as back-bench Adjournment debates following Third Reading of Consolidated Fund Bill.
1986-87 (Second)	Use of Time on the Floor of the House	350	(a) Greater use of Special Standing Committees. (b) Debate on Statutory Instrument to be normally limited to 1½ hours, whenever started. (c) Motions to approve Statutory Instruments to stand automatically referred to a Standing Committee, subject to the ability of 20 Members (or a Minister) to table a Motion to the effect that the Instrument be debated on the Floor of the House. (d) No entrenchment of 10 pm rule. (e) No adoption of morning sittings. (f) No new procedure for deferred divisions. (g) Private Members should not be empowered to move Motion at 2.30 pm on Fridays to prolong proceedings on Private Members' Bills or Motions. (h) On four Fridays devoted to Private Members' Motions, debate on the first Motion should lapse at 12.30 pm (i) On Tuesdays and Wednesdays, on an experimental basis, an additional 20 minute Adjournment debate should be introduced.
1988-89 (First)	Conduct of Members in the Chamber and the Alleged Abuse of Parliamentary Privilege	290	(a) No blanket increase in lengths of suspension laid down in Standing Order No. 43. (b) Suspension not to be accompanied by loss of salary. (c) Uncompleted periods of suspension to be carried over from one Session to the next. (d) Period of suspension incurred under Standing Order No. 43 to take account of any previous suspensions both in current and preceding Session. (e) Question on Motion to suspend Member named by Chair to be put forthwith, without formal moving by Leader of House (or another Minister). (f) No need for new rules of order to deal with alleged abuses of parliamentary privilege. (g) No case for formalised right of reply for persons claiming to have been harmed by unfounded allegations made under protection of privilege.
1988-89 (Third)	The System for Determining Precedence for the Introduction of Ten Minute Rule Bills	352	(a) For an experimental period, system of queueing for Ten Minute Rule Bill 'slots' to be replaced by ballot.
1989-90 (Second)	The Working of the Select Committee System	19-I	(a) Establishment of Sub-Committee of Liaison Committee to scrutinise bids for overseas travel by Select Committee. (b) Amendment of Standing Order No. 116 to permit embargoed copies of Select Committee Reports to be circulated two sitting days ahead of publication (rather than 48 hours). (c) Financial Secretary to the Treasury to cease to be member of Public Accounts Committee. (d) Changes in procedure for electing Select Committee Chairmen; senior Member to take Chair instead of Clerk; seniority to be defined as for election of Speaker.
1990-91 (Third)	Parliamentary Questions	178	(a) Period of Notice for Oral Questions to be reduced from 10 to 5 sitting days. (b) No ration on number of written questions tabled by a Members any one day. (c) Various changes in rules of order governing admissibility of Parliamentary Questions. (d) Abolition of 'blocks' system. (e) Answers to Parliamentary Questions about executive agencies to appear in Official Report, preceded by introductory form of words by the relevant Minister. (f) Speaker to instruct Editor of Official Report not to print 'pursuant' answers in certain circumstances.
1990-91 (Fourth)	Short Speeches	569	(a) Speaker to have free hand in deciding when to impose 10 minute limit on speeches "for the convenience of the House", after the opening speeches from the Government and from the main Opposition parties. (b) Front bench spokesmen to aim to speak, as a matter of normal practice, for no more than 20 minutes, excluding interruptions.

Note: It should be noted, however, that a number of the recommendations listed have been either the subject of, or relevant to, occasional general procedure debates, usually on Motions for the Adjournment of the House. Moreover, so far as the Procedure Committee's recommendations on Recess dates are concerned, the Hon. Member will know that in my Business Statement on 7 November, I repeated last year's innovation of giving much longer notice than usual of the likely dates of the Christmas and Easter Recesses. Equally, many of the Committee's outstanding recommendations about hours of sitting and the use of time on the floor of the House are directly relevant to the matters currently being considered by the Select Committee on Sittings of the House, and I understand that the Committee has access to all the relevant Procedure Committee Reports and Minutes of Evidence. Finally, I should point out that the Government has not yet replied formally to the Committee's two most recent Reports on Parliamentary Questions and Short Speeches and it is not the normal practice to ask the House to reach specific conclusions in those circumstances. So far as the Report on Short Speeches is concerned, I indicated in my recent oral evidence to the Sittings of the House Committee that I hoped they would feel able to endorse the Procedure Committee's recommendations in their own eventual Report to the House.

Parliamentary Television

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council when the Parliamentary Works Office study on supplying the live television feed to hon. Members' offices is expected to report; and whether hon. Members are permitted to make their own arrangements to receive the feed, at their own expense, in the interval.

Mr. MacGregor: A preliminary examination of the technical feasibility of providing both data and video links to Members' offices is currently being undertaken by the House authorities. It is hoped that its conclusions will be submitted to the appropriate domestic Committee in the near future. If a decision were taken to proceed further with the project, the next step would be a detailed physical survey of the House and its outbuildings by the Parliamentary Works Office, or its successor organisation under the Ibbs reforms. It is too early to speculate on the timing of any such further study. In the meantime, it would not be appropriate for individual right hon. or hon. Members to seek to pre-empt the conclusions of those studies and their consideration by the relevant domestic Committees by making their own separate arrangements, whether or not at their own expense.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council if hon. Members are permitted to receive the United Artists local cable services live television feed from the Chamber (a) at their homes and (b) in their Commons office.

Mr. MacGregor: On the first part of the hon. Member's question, what cable services right hon. and hon. Members choose to subscribe to at their own homes is entirely a matter for them. Access to a dedicated parliamentary channel, however delivered, in Members' offices in the House or its outbuildings would be no different, for practical purposes, from the provision of a clean feed direct from the Chamber, so the approval of both the Broadcasting Committee and the relevant post-Ibbs domestic Committee would be necessary.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council if there is a live television feed from the Chamber to his Office (a) in the House and (b) in his departmental offices in Whitehall.

Mr. MacGregor: I do not have a live television feed in my House of Commons office, but my Whitehall office is connected by spur to the Prime Minister's television feed.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council when and from whom Mr. Speaker received permission to receive the clean television feed from the Chamber.

Mr. MacGregor: This facility was originally approved by the then Select Committee on the Televising of Proceedings of the House as part of the arrangements for the experiment in televising the House's proceedings, which began in November 1989.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list those Government Departments which have arranged through the Central Office of Information to take the clean television feed from the Chamber; how many television sets can receive the pictures in each department; and where in each department each of the sets is located.

Mr. MacGregor: A clean television feed from the House of Commons is supplied by the Central Office of Information to the following Departments:

Department of Employment
Department of Energy
Department of the Environment
Department of Health
Prime Minister's Office
Scottish Office
Department of Trade and Industry
Department of Transport
Her Majesty's Treasury
Welsh Office

The number and location of television sets is a matter for Ministers in the Departments listed.

GAYE

Sir Barney Hayhoe: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many hon. Members are participating in the give-as-you-earn scheme of charitable giving so far as their parliamentary salary is concerned.

Mr. MacGregor: There are currently 56 Members who have authorised deductions from their parliamentary salaries under the payroll-giving scheme.

Members' Pensions

Sir Barney Hayhoe: To ask the Lord President of the Council what additional retirement pension would be earned by an hon. Member who had 10 years' service as (a) a junior Minister, (b) a Minister of State and (c) a Cabinet Minister.

Mr. MacGregor: Under the terms of the governing Acts of the parliamentary contributory pension fund Ministers and paid office-holders have the option of whether or not to join the supplementary scheme in addition to the basic scheme which is available to all Members. The rate of supplementary pension payable from the fund is based on the contributions paid on the amount of the Ministers' or office-holders' total remuneration which is in excess of Members' pensionable salary during the period of office. Since these salary and contribution levels are not constant, the pension figures set out have been calculated on current levels as if they were to pertain throughout the 10-year period. They also assume that the 10-year period ends at age 65.

	Percentage of ordinary Members salary as supplementary pension	On supplementary pension calculated on current salary rate £
Ten years service as a
Cabinet Minister	21	6,200·00
Minister of State	14	3,969·00
Parliamentary Secretary	9	2,665·00

Members' Staff (Contracts)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many hon. Members have not yet given any of their staff a contract of employment; how many individual staff do not have contracts; what action he is taking to ensure contracts are provided; what sanction he has against hon. Members who refuse to issue contracts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: As at 31 October 1991, 35 Members had not sent contracts of employment in respect of any of their staff to the Fees Office. As at the same date, 195 staff of hon. Members were without contracts of employment lodged with the Fees Office. This figure includes both part-time staff for whom contracts may not be required and staff only recently engaged.

In those cases where a contract of employment has not been lodged with the Fees Office all hon. Members, other than those with recently engaged staff, have been contacted. As no hon. Member has refused to issue a contract the question of sanctions has not arisen.

Given that the Top Salaries Review Body is currently conducting a review of the office costs allowance, I have nothing further to add at this stage.

EMPLOYMENT

TECs

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment why he decided not to accept the recommendation of the Select Committee on Employment's fifth report of Session 1990-91 that there should be only one auditor for each training and enterprise council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: This is fully set out in the Government's response to the Committee's report, a copy of which is available in the Library. The current audit arrangements are necessary to ensure the proper stewardship of public money and to comply with the Companies Act. These do not affect the TECs' ability to operate in a flexible and enterprising way.

Training Places

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many training and enterprise councils have (a) more than 1,000 and (b) between 500 and 999 young people awaiting offers of training places;

(2) how many young people in the Leeds training and enterprise council area are still awaiting an offer of a training place.

Mr. Jackson: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make a statement on the provision by training and enterprise councils of work experience for young people in youth training.

Mr. Jackson: Training opportunities are dependent on employers' participation in the training programme. With our support, TECs are actively promoting the need for employers to maintain their investment in training. The Government are committed to ensuring the availability of suitable training for young people under the terms of their youth training guarantee.

Training Credits

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the cost of implementing training credits.

Mr. Jackson: The training credits initiative is a partnership involving expenditure from many different sources, including employers. In 1990-91, the cost to the Department of developing the training credits pilot schemes was £4·8 million. Planned provision for the 11 pilot schemes in the first full year of operation, 1991-92, is £122 million. This does not take account of administrative costs incurred by the Department and the training and enterprise councils and local enterprise company delivering training credits.

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what sums have been spent on advertising training credits (a) to employers and (b) to trainees.

Mr. Jackson: The Department has incurred no expenditure on advertising training credits.

NVQs

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which areas of employment now have recognised NVQ qualifications; and when remaining areas will be finalised.

Mr. Jackson: A detailed listing of accredited NVQs is provided in the booket "The NVQ Framework", which is published by the National Council for Vocational Qualifications and updated on a quarterly basis. A copy has been placed in the Library.

"The NVQ Framework" covers all major occupational areas and is sub-divided into 11 main categories, the first 10 of which already have a number of NVQs in place. These are:

(1) Tending animals, plants and land.
(2) Extracting and providing natural resources.
(3) Constructing.
(4) Engineering.
(5) Manufacturing.
(6) Transporting.
(7) Providing goods and services.
(8) Providing health, social care and protective services.
(9) Providing business services.
(10) Communicating and entertaining.
(11) Developing and extending knowledge and skill.

Ultimately, the aim is to ensure that all 11 categories are fully covered in all five NVQ levels within the framework. However, the immediate target is to have sufficient NVQs accredited by 31 December 1992 to cover 80 per cent. of the employed work force at NVQ levels 1 to 4. This will ensure all major occupations are covered.

Good progress continues to be made, with currently 322 NVQs accredited, covering some 40 per cent. of the employed work force at levels 1 to 4.

"The NVQ Framework" booklet includes a timetable for the submission of NVQs for accreditation over the ensuing 18 months.

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for the latest period for which figures are available how much has been spent on marketing NVQ's to employers.

Mr. Jackson: The main responsibility for marketing NVQs rests with the employers in the sector concerned, and with the awarding bodies offering the NVQs.

The Government offer marketing support through the National Council for Vocational Qualifications and the Department of Employment's standards programme. To date this support has been concentrated on the development of NVQs. Marketing activities have included seminars, exhibitions and conferences. Some £400,000 was spent on these activities in 1990-91.

Over the next 18 months, the Government's focus will move increasingly to the implementation of NVQs. The NCVQ communications strategy will take forward the enhanced marketing of NVQs to employers. This commits £800,000 in 1991-92 and proposes further substantial investment in the following two years.

Job Vacancies

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will issue notices at all jobcentres warning people of the potential costs of responding to advertisements from purported employers offering vacancies through 0898 telephone numbers.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Company Directors' Reports

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what conclusions he has drawn from recent employee involvement statements in company directors' reports in accordance with section 235 and schedule 7, part V, of the Companies Act 1985.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has today placed in the Library a survey of a sample of recent company reports. It shows a continuing improvement in the level and variety of employee involvement practices reported.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Yugoslavia

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any consideration has been given to giving aid to Hungary to help with the Yugoslav refugees either bilaterally from the United Kingdom or from the European Community.

Mrs. Chalker: We are carefully monitoring the situation of Yugoslav refugees in Hungary and have contributed via the European Community, which has so far provided 360,000 ecu for refugee relief in Hungary to be distributed via the International Red Cross and non-governmental organisations.

The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, to which we are also a major contributor, has set aside a budget this year of US$3·1 million for these refugees. The number of refugees is currently estimated at 35,000.

We have no aid programme for Hungary, although it is able to benefit from the know-how fund for eastern European countries.

Dubrovnik

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give consideration to joining the French and Italian Governments in the provision of humanitarian aid to the besieged people of Dubrovnik; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We are urgently considering with all other member states of the European Community and with agencies of the United Nations and the International Red Cross movement options for co-ordinated humanitarian aid to the people of Dubrovnik, as well as to other parts of Yugoslavia affected by the recent fighting.

Ministers of the member countries of the Western European Union agreed on 18 November to examine the possibility of helping the Red Cross by the use of naval units in the area. We have already responded to Red Cross requests by providing 425,000 blankets and a cash grant of £250,000, together valued at £1·75 million, for the victims of the fighting. Consignments of these blankets have gone direct to Dubrovnik.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Animal Welfare

12. Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to improve animal welfare standards throughout Europe.

Mr. Maclean: We continue to press for the highest standards of animal welfare to be adopted throughout the Community and have now achieved our key objectives on the protection on animal transport including horses.

We will continue to strive for adoption of United Kingdom standards, including those for calf and pig farming, throughout the EC.

Farm Woodland Premium Scheme

13. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a further statement about the proposed farm woodland premium scheme.

Mr. Gummer: This week we published our consultation document on our proposed new farm woodland premium scheme and a copy is in the Library of the House.

CAP

14. Sir Patrick Duffy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent discussions he has had with his European counterparts on the reform of the common agricultural policy.

17. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the MacSharry proposals for reform of the common agricultural policy outlining the latest position in their consideration by the Council of Ministers.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave yesterday to my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North-West (Mr. Bellingham).

26. Mrs Currie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress is being made in reducing subsidies to agriculture in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Curry: I refer to the reply I have just given to the hon. Members for Sheffield, Attercliffe (Sir P. Duffy) and for Carmarthen (Mr. Williams). The Government aim to secure, through reform of the common agricultural policy, lower levels of agricultural support throughout the European Community.

Mesh Sizes

18. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what position he intends to take on the French call for a reduction in minimum mesh sizes in the southern North sea.

Mr. Curry: We reject this and it was not included in the package of technical conservation measures recently agreed by the Council of Fisheries Ministers.

Fish Stocks

19. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with his European counterparts on the implementation of measures to conserve fish stocks in the European Community.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Waveney (Mr. Porter) on 6 November following the EC Council of Fisheries Ministers on 28 October 1991. At that meeting, we secured a package of important measures to improve the conservation of fish stocks; these will be implemented from 1 June 1992.

25. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken recently to improve the conservation of fish stocks.

Mr. Curry: In July the United Kingdom introduced a unilateral requirement for square mesh panels in certain nets to reduce the catch and discard of immature fish. At the October Fisheries Council we secured an important package of EC measures which will greatly improve the conservation of fish stocks.

Countryside Stewardship Scheme

20. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects his Department to take over responsibility for the countryside stewardship scheme.

Mr. Curry: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and I will review the position when the Countryside Commission is able to provide an evaluation of the scheme based on its achievements.

Fishing, Northumberland

21. Mr. Beith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will undertake a visit to Northumberland fishing ports to study the future of the fishing industry in the area.

Mr. Curry: I have no plans to do so at present.

Food From Britain

22. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what promotional activities Food From Britain has organised to draw attention to British products.

Mr. Curry: Food From Britain promotes British food and drink both at home and abroad. Its activities include British displays at all the major food trade fairs, tastings and other forms of catering and retail promotion, introductions of British suppliers to potential customers, and comprehensive guides to the availability of British foods, newsletters and other forms of printed publicity.

Scientific Whaling

23. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has made to those countries engaged in scientific whaling.

Mr. Gummer: Programmes for scientific whaling were again fully discussed at the last meeting of the International Whaling Commission in May. The United Kingdom successfully co-sponsored resolutions calling upon both Japan and the USSR to reconsider their position.

Horses and Ponies

24. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the welfare of horses and ponies subject to export after 1992.

Mr. Gummer: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Warrington, South (Mr. Butler).

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what time limit has been set on the derogation to Britain of the ban on the export of live horses to the continent for slaughter; if he will make a statement on the conditions relating to the agreement; and when he envisages the matter being raised again in Community negotiations.

Mr. Maclean: The directive concerning the welfare of animals during transport provides for national arrangements on horses to continue without specifying a time limit. It also establishes that the Council, acting on proposals from the commission, will adopt additional conditions for all transport of horses in the Community in order to safeguard their welfare. No timetable is set for these additional rules and it is not known when the Community will address the issue.

Animals (Transport)

27. Mr. Ashby: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to improve the transport of animals within the European Community.

Mr. Gummer: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Fulham (Mr. Carrington).

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a further statement on the recent agreement in the Farm Council on the transport of horses and other animals.

Mr. Maclean: The directive on protection of animals during transport has now been adopted formally by the Council and will be published shortly. The agreement reflects the deep public concern in this country over the transport of horses and other animals and the Government are grateful to all those who gave support in the negotiations by making their views known to the Commission and throughout the Community.

Fishing Grounds (Pollution)

28. Dr. Kim Howells To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures are being taken to safeguard fishing grounds from pollution originating offshore.

Mr. Curry: This Ministry works closely with other Departments in operating a comprehensive range of measures under the Prevention of Oil Pollution Act 1971 and the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 to protect fisheries, and the marine environment generally, from pollution originating offshore.

State Veterinary Service

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the British Veterinary Association to discuss the future of the state veterinary service.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. Friend the Minister has not met the British Veterinary Association specifically to discuss the future of the state veterinary service.

However, Ministers and officials have regular contact with the association and its representatives on a wide range of issues.

Agriculture Council

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Agriculture Council held on 18 and 19 November.

Mr. Gummer: I represented the United Kingdom at this meeting of the Council together with my hon. Friend the Member for Skipton and Ripon (Mr. Curry), Parliamentary Secretary in my Department.

There was a discussion of the significant progress that has been made recently in the discussions towards an agricultural agreement in GATT. I stressed that genuine reform required reductions in support over time whatever form such support took, with only genuine environmental and similar measures being exempted from the process of reduction. I urged the Commissioner to negotiate accordingly. Unfortunately he seems to take the view at present that only direct price support need be subject to reduction and in particular that any compensation for such reductions need not be reduced. We shall continue to press our view.

There were detailed discussions on the arable, tobacco and sheepmeat dossiers included in the proposed reforms of the common agricultural policy. On the arable dossier I stressed that payments on set-aside land must not discriminate against larger producers. On tobacco we urged the need to scale down support significantly consistent with the Community's position on health issues. On sheepmeat, I said that the proposed reductions in headage limits—maximum payments per producer—were unacceptable to the United Kingdom and urged that savings be made instead by price cuts or other means. Discussion will resume at the next meeting on 11-12 December.

Veterinary Products

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the technical competence of the Veterinary Products Committee and of the EC Veterinary Products Committee to judge the safety and human health aspects of the use of veterinary products.

Mr. Gummer: Members of the Veterinary Products Committee are expert in a number of scientific disciplines relevant to the consideration of the safety, quality and efficacy of veterinary medicines. When aspects falling outside their specific fields of expertise arise, they take advice from the Department of Health and other suitably qualified experts. Apart from the Medicines Commission, we are satisfied that no other body of equivalent competence exists in this country.

Members of the EC Committee on Veterinary Medicinal Products are officials from member states. They are not required to have personal scientific expertise in the same way as VPC members, but draw on expertise available in all the member states, including that of the Veterinary Products Committee.

Poultry (Rare Breeds)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will amend the poultry regulations to ensure that rare breeds, housed and kept separately for breeding purposes, are defined as individual flocks.

Mr. Curry: I have no plans to do so.

Milk Production

Mr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest estimate of the total volume of United Kingdom milk production last year; and what proportion this represents of total EC milk production.

Mr. Curry: Total United Kingdom milk production, including milk fed directly to calves, was estimated at 15,212,000 tonnes during 1990, 13 per cent. of the EC total. Deliveries to dairies amounted to 14,574,000 tonnes, 13·75 per cent. of the EC total.

Animals and Birds (Imports)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken in the light of recommendations by the Joint Nature Conservation Committee to restrict the number of United Kingdom ports through which live animals and birds may be imported.

Mr. Maclean: The recommendation to consider restricting the number of ports through which live animals may be imported was one of a number of recommendations made by the Joint Nature Conservation Committee in its recent report on trade in wildlife. As the wildlife trade raises many complex issues which do not affect the United Kingdom alone, my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment and I wrote recently to the European Commissioners for agriculture and the environment drawing the JNCC report to their attention and pressing for stricter Community-wide controls over international trade in wildlife. A Commission proposal for a new regulation on the wildlife trade is expected to be published soon and we shall take full account of the JNCC advice in the subsequent discussions.

Bovine Somatotropin

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what tests have been carried out by his Ministry concerning the safety of bovine somatotropin and food products derived from it for humans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: It is for licence applicants to undertake, in accordance with internationally accepted rules of good laboratory practice, all tests which are considered necessary to satisfy the licensing authority.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many applications for the use of bovine somatotropin he has received in each of the last three years and to date in 1991; if he will indicate in each case whether the applications have been refused, and how many are going through appeal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: No product licence applications were received during this period. One application for an animal test certificate was received in 1988: that application is currently the subject of an appeal to the Veterinary Products Committee which is minded to advise that it should not be granted.

In addition, applications to renew ATCs granted before 1988 were received in each of the years identified, and were granted. Applications to vary these ATCs were received in 1988, two; 1989, nine; 1990 seven; and 1991 to date, four; and have been granted.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the discussions in the EC about the continuation of the moratorium on the use of bovine somatotropin after 31 December; and when he expects a decision to be taken about its continuation.

Mr. Gummer: Progress made by the Commission with its report on the future use of BST was raised under other business at the Agriculture Council on 18-19 November. The Commission indicated that it expects to report to the Council within the next few weeks.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the research that has been considered by the Veterinary Products Committee concerning the effect of food produced by the use of bovine somatotropin on human health; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The Committee has seen the results of research into the composition of milk from treated and untreated cows which identified minute differences in the average content of lipids, biotin, IGF1 and BST. It has also seen the results of research into the effect of these four substances on humans and has taken advice from nutritional experts. It is satisfied that the widespread use of BST to increase milk yields would not adversely affect the health of consumers.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy on the possible extension of the present EC ban on bovine somatotropin; and when he expects the matter to be further discussed at the Council of Ministers.

Mr. Maclean: The Commission has made no proposals for arrangements to apply after the current moratorium on the use of BST expires. If it does, my right hon. Friend will determine his policy according to the merit of the proposals. Progress made by the Commission with its report on the future use of BST was raised under other business at the Argiculture Council on 18-19 November. The Commission indicated that it expected to report to the Council within the next few weeks.

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will state the number of draft proposals he has received from sea fisheries committees to regulate the use of fixed engines and the number he rejected in respect of the last 12 months for which data are available.

Mr. Curry: Ministerial confirmation has been sought for three byelaws made by sea fisheries committees to regulate the placing or use of fixed engines. One needs to be re-advertised and we are in active correspondence with the relevant SFC on the other two on drafting and procedural points respectively. None has been rejected.

"Our Farming Future"

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how he intends to distribute copies of "Our Farming Future" to individual farmers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Copies of "Our Farming Future" are available to farmers on request from the Ministry, particularly through its regional and divisional offices. Copies have also been provided to the National Farmers Union.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he intends to publish the follow-up to "Our Farming Future"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Decisions on any future statements of Government policy on agriculture will be taken in the light of the outcome of negotiations on CAP reform and on the Uruguay round.

Environmental Health

Ms. Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will meet the Institution of Environmental Health Officers to discuss whether meat inspection should remain a local authority function.

Mr. Maclean: Our officials and those of the Department of Health are in regular contact with representatives of the institution, and have on a number of occasions discussed with them the future arrangements for meat hygiene enforcement. In addition, the institution has submitted written evidence to the review of meat hygiene enforcement in Great Britain and was represented on the review consultative panel. The views of the institution will be taken fully into account by the Agriculture and Health Ministers when a decision is reached on future meat hygiene enforcement arrangements.

Dairy Industry

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is satisfied with the present state of the dairy industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Dairy farming remains a relatively profitable sector of United Kingdom agriculture, sustained by support prices substantially above world market levels. Despite the existence of quotas limiting production, more than 20 per cent. of EC milk production in 1990 required subsidised disposal. It remains our long-term aim to return to a more market-oriented system in the dairy sector, including the eventual removal of production quotas. In the meantime we are convinced of the need to change United Kingdom milk marketing arrangements to enable the industry to meet the challenge of the single market.

Tobacco

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to reduce the cost to the Exchequer of the common agricultural policy tobacco regime.

Mr. Curry: The EC Commission has tabled proposals for the reform of the tobacco regime which, it estimates, would result in budgetary savings of some 418 million ECU(B)—£291 million—a year when fully implemented. In discussion of these proposals the Government are pressing for the most radical reform negotiable.

Beef Imports

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of live cattle and the tonnage of beef imported into Great Britain for human consumption from the Republic of Ireland and Northern Ireland respectively for each year since 1985.

Mr. Curry [holding answer 11 November 1991]: Imports from the Republic of Ireland, since 1985, are as follows:

	Beef (tonnes)	Cattle (Number of head)
1985	84,000	220,000
1986	122,000	232,000
1987	123,000	151,000
1988	112,000	175,000
1989	34,000	115,000
1990	78,000	121,000

Note: Figures to nearest '000 tonnes.
Source: Her Majesty's Customs and Excise.

We are unable to provide figures for imports from Northern Ireland as these statistics are not collected by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise.

Pollution

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what contribution has been made to date by his Department to Her Majesty's Government's submission on control and reduction of aquatic pollution to the preparatory committee meetings for the United Nations conference on environment and development in Brazil in 1992; and what proposals he expects to be submitted on oceanic and marine pollution by Her Majesty's Government to the UNCED from the present day to June 1992.

Mr. Curry: The Ministry has been involved in the normal way in the Government's collective consideration of aquatic pollution matters arising in the preparatory committee meetings for the United Nations conference on environment and development. A very wide range of proposals is already under discussion at those meetings.

DEFENCE

Reserve Forces Act 1980

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he intends to propose amendments to the Reserve Forces Act 1980 in the light of the Gulf war experiences.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Studies into the role and size of the reserve forces are currently being undertaken as a result of both the "Options for Change" exercise and our Gulf war experiences. In the light of the conclusions of these studies we will, of course, consider whether a review of our existing reserves legislation will be required.

Medical Services

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to review the present level of medical services for the armed forces; and when he expects to announce the results.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A review is in progress to consider the future requirement for medical support to the armed forces, the outcome of which will in part be reliant upon other changes in the armed forces. It is too early to say when the review will be complete.

Ministry Houses, Fife

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many houses are owned by the Ministry of Defence in Fife, North-East; and what is the current occupancy rate.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As at 30 September 1991, the latest date for which figures are available, the Ministry of Defence owned 726 houses and flats in the Fife, North-East constituency, of which 633 were occupied representing 87 per cent. of the total stock. Many of the unoccupied properties were either undergoing or awaiting major maintenance work or modernisation or were already allotted to service families who were due to move in shortly. In addition, two properties were in the process of being sold.

Fishing Vessels (Accidents)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has about all types of incidents leading to damage or loss of life involving fishing boats and submarines in (a) 1989, (b) 1990 and (c) 1991 to date; and if he has made any arrangements to alter the method of notification of such incidents.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested for Royal Navy submarines is as follows:

Date	Vessel	Area	Incident
28 June 1989	FV Huntress	Clyde	Submarine snagged nets
12 September 1989	FV Contester	Irish Sea	Submarine communications buoy became caught in nets
13 November 1989	FV Scotia	Off Lewis	Submarine snagged nets
22 November 1990	FV Antares	Clyde	Submarine snagged nets and as a result the fishing vessel capsized and sank

Over the same period, there were also two incidents involving United States submarines in United Kingdom waters, neither of which involved the loss of life.

There have been no changes in the arrangements for reporting incidents between Royal Navy ships and civilian craft.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all compensation payments (a) already made and (b) outstanding to owners of fishing boats for damage caused by submarine activity in each year since 1979.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The following list relates solely to damage caused or alleged to be caused by Royal Navy submarines:

	Number of claims and compensation paid

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what inquiry reports his Department has received from the Marine Accident Investigation Branch since 1979 of losses of, or damage to, fishing vessels; what action has been taken in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Department currently holds reports of the marine accident investigation branch investigations into incidents between submarines and the fishing vessels Huntress and Scotia. These reports were taken into account when formulating current operating instructions. Reports into incidents involving the fishing vessels Mhari-L, Inspire and Moray Adventurer are also held. There was no Royal Navy involvement in these incidents and therefore no need for any subsequent follow-up action by this Department.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list for each of the last three years the number of occasions the Royal Navy air-sea rescue has been called out to deal with incidents involving fishing vessels at sea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The following table provides details of call-outs of both Royal Navy and Royal Air Force search-and-rescue helicopters to incidents involving fishing vessels at sea during 1988, 1989, 1990 and to 31 August 1991:

	1988	1989	1990	1991
Royal Navy	42	59	47	46
Royal Air Force	179	185	145	81
Total number of people recovered	116	166	114	108

MFV Inspire

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has regarding the verdict of the jury in relation to the sinking of the Inspire and the possibility of submarine involvement; what information he has concerning activities of (a) United Kingdom, (b) NATO and (c) other countries' submarines in the area at the date and time in question; what action he proposes to take; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I understand that the jury at the inquest returned a verdict of death by unlawful killing. As was made clear in the evidence given, there were no Royal Navy or NATO submarines in Cardigan bay or the Irish sea on the day in question. Nor, to the best of our knowledge, were there any submarines belonging to other nations in the area at the time. I therefore see no need for the Ministry of Defence to take any action as a result of the inquest.

Exercise Cockfight

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what surface and submarine vessels will be involved in Exercise Cockfight in the firth of Clyde later this month; what is the total duration of the exercise; what will be the extent of submarine activity and during which periods; what representations he has received expressing concern at the dangers to fishing activity in the area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: One Royal Navy and one Royal Netherlands Navy submarine, together with HMS Brave, His Belgian Majesty's naval ship Wielingen, HMS Sentinel and support craft of the Royal Maritime Auxiliary Service are taking part in the inshore phase of Exercise Cockfight, which lasts from 23 to 28 November. During this period, both submarines will conduct dived operations in the Firth of Clyde on each day. The Clyde fishermen's associations have been given full details of planned submarine movements, which will also be notified under the subfacts arrangements. Representations on this exercise have been received from a number of hon. Members, representatives of Scottish fishing interests and others.

Territorial Army

Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to pay the annual bounty to Territorial soldiers who served in the Gulf, although they have not served the statutory 15-day period camp or course.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We are considering a number of claims in the light of individual circumstances.

Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Scottish Territorial soldiers have not received the annual bounty this year after serving in the Gulf with 205 Scottish general hospital.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: This information is not immediately available, but I will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 14 November, Official Report, column 672, if he will name the sergeant who died in Zimbabwe in September 1990; in which part of the country the accident took place; what were the circumstances of the accident; if there was an inquest; and what were the duties in Zimbabwe of the non-commissioned officer in question.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The service man in question was Sergeant Sibajang Rai, of the 7th Gurkha Rifles. Sergeant Rai was part of the British military advisory team. The road traffic accident occurred in the eastern highlands of Zimbabwe in the Nyanga area, on the Dombo road leading from the village of Nyanga to the Mozambique training team border camp. Sergeant Rai was killed when his vehicle overturned on the winding dirt road. No United Kingdom inquest was held as Sergeant Rai's body was repatriated to Hong Kong and therefore did not come under the jurisdiction of a United Kingdom coroner. Although a local post-mortem was conducted, the district administrative office in Nyanga did not require an inquest. Sergeant Rai's duties were as a platoon sergeant instructor of Mozambique recruits.

Ballistic Missiles

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all those countries assessed as possessing ballistic missiles.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The following countries are assessed as possessing ballistic missiles: Afghanistan, Belgium, Bulgaria, China (PRC), Czechoslovakia, Egypt, France, Germany, Hungary, Italy, India, Iran, Iraq, Israel, Japan, Kuwait, Libya, Netherlands, North Korea, Pakistan, Poland, Romania, Saudi Arabia, South Africa, South Korea, Syria, USSR, United States of America, United Kingdom and Yemen.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) Army service personnel, (b) Royal Air Force service personnel and (c) Royal Navy personnel have applied for voluntary redundancy; and whether he has any plans to make further offers of voluntary redundancy.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [pursuant to his reply, 8 November col. 296]: A reduction of 8,000 in total Royal Navy numbers is planned by 1995. Most of these will be achieved by natural turnover, reduced recruiting and by the application of certain manpower regulators. However, there will be a need for a limited redundancy programme, phased over two or three years. In 1992-93 this will affect about 80 captains and commanders and 320 warrant officers and chief and petty officers. It is hoped that this target will be achieved by voluntary means, but some compulsory measures cannot be ruled out in order to achieve the correct seniority spread within the ranks and specialisations. Personnel will be selected from categories in surplus, bearing in mind the need to maintain a balance of skills and experience. It will be necessary to include in the programme officers and ratings with significant time to serve as well as those within a few years of retirement/discharge.

The same financial terms will apply as in all such service schemes since 1975. These provide for an immediate pension for those with 12 or more years service—instead of the normal 16 years for an officer and 22 for a rating—together with a tax-free capital payment of up to 18 months' pay in addition to the pension benefits. The detailed terms will shortly be promulgated to the Navy and applications will be invited to take effect in 1992-93.

All those selected are eligible for the full facilities of the resettlement programme, including counselling and up to 28 days' training to assist them in utilising their skills in the civilian job market. Help with job finding will be available from the employment liaison officer, Navy, the Officers Association or the Regular Forces Employment Association, both of which receive funding from the Department. Full details of these and other agencies will be covered in resettlement interviews. Advice is also included on how to set about finding housing and how to put special capital payment and pensions to best use for this purpose. It is expected that most naval personnel leaving on this basis will have made, or will be able to make, suitable arrangements for their housing needs. Where this is not the case we are currently studying a number of options in order to assist in both the short and long term.

In the case of the Army, we have received applications from 4,492 soldiers and 801 officers for the scheme in 1992-93. I am pleased therefore to say that all the reduction of 2,500 soldiers and the large majority of the reduction of 850 officers in 1992-93 will be from those who asked to be considered. It will, however, be necessary to select about 160 officers of middle and more senior rank who have not put their names forward for consideration. Selection boards are now sitting and everyone will be notified on 26 February 1992.

In the RAF, the need for redundancies remains under consideration.

Royal Navy Ships

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) why, pursuant to his answer of 7 November, Official Report, column 253, he has reversed his decision announced on 21 October, Official Report, column 446, to place HMS Humber in reserve; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when, pursuant to his answer of 7 November, Official Report, column 253, it was decided to place HMS Ribble in reserve; to which Royal Naval Reserve sea training centre it was allocated; and where those Royal Naval Reserve personnel affected will now have access to sea training.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The decision to place two River class minesweepers in reserve was taken earlier this year as part of our annual review of the forward equipment programme. Originally HMS Humber and HMS Helmsdale were identified. It was decided subsequently that HMS Ribble should be placed in reserve rather than HMS Humber which was in better condition. HMS Ribble had been allocated to HMS Eaglet in Liverpool; HMS Humber will replace HMS Ribble there, and will continue to provide access to sea training for Royal Naval Reserve personnel.

HEALTH

Hypothermia

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a table showing how many people categorised by age died of hypothermia, or illnesses associated with hypothermia, in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The information is given in the following tables:

Mental and Psychiatric Illness

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of hospital in-patient admissions on grounds of mental or psychiatric illness in each regional health authority area for each quarterly period from 1 April 1989.

Mr. Dorrell: Provisional figures for the financial year 1989-90 are shown in the table. It is not possible to produce a quarterly breakdown of these figures without incurring disproportionate cost.

Estimated Admissions, under the care of a Mental Illness Consultant, to National Health Service hospitals and units, by Regional Health Authority during 1989-90.

Lancashire Ambulance Service

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on how many occasions in each of the last five years ambulances of the Lancashire ambulance service have been used to convey private patients.

Mr. Dorrell: The information is not available in the form requested.

The table shows the number of patient journeys carried out by the Lancashire ambulance service for each year from 1986 to 1990-91 for which a charge was made. Patients charged for include those moved on behalf of social services or other departments of local authorities, organisations on repayment, and private individuals.

Youth Treatment Centres

Sir Robert McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has made appointments to his special group on youth treatment centres; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: On 1 October 1991 my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health established a special group of outside people to provide independent advice about the youth treatment centres. Chaired by Mrs. Winifred Tumim, the group consists of: Dr. Zarrina Kurtz, assistant regional medical officer in South West Thames regional health authority; Mr. Tom White CBE, chief executive of the National Children's Homes; Mr. Harry Cayton, director of the Alzheimers Disease Society; and Dr. Michael Lindsay, from 1987 children's rights officer for Leicestershire social services department. Their responsibility is to provide an independent perspective on care and practice in the youth treatment service, with particular regard to ensuring that children's rights are properly safeguarded, and to advise the Secretary of State on these matters. Their periodic reports will be published.

The social services inspectorate remains the principal monitoring arm for detailed scrutiny of the standard of care, control, education and rehabilitation programmes provided in the centres. Medical and nursing experts and HMIs will form part of this evaluation. There will be a full inspection every three years and reports will be published.

On 1 April 1992, the service will be managed by a chief executive accountable to the Secretary of State for the facilities provided under section 82(5) of the Children Act 1989. After open competition Mr. Eugene Ostapuik, the director of Glenthorne YTC, has been appointed chief executive for the whole service. He will be chief executive designate with effect from 1 December 1991 and will take up post next April, initially for a three-year term. He will be supported by an advisory committee, which will help him to keep the service abreast of child care practice. A service specification for the new organisation will be published in the new year. The Secretary of State's special group is being consulted at the drafting stage. Meanwhile, regulations and guidance on secure accommodation, which came into effect on 14 October 1991 under the Children Act 1989, have been applied administratively to the Glenthorne and St. Charles youth treatment centres.

On 24 June my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced temporary management changes at the St. Charles YTC following an inquiry into complaints about treatment at that centre, Official Report, Volume 193, col. 687-93. The disciplinary inquiry into the conduct of some members of staff at St. Charles YTC is continuing. My right hon. Friend also announced a review to ensure that the headquarters of the Department of Health had pursued with proper vigour and judgment the recommendations of the inspection by the social services inspectorate in 1988. He asked Sir Ewen Broadbent to consider the circumstances, and I am placing a copy of Sir Ewen's report in the Library. Sir Ewen concluded, broadly, that those parts of the Department closely concerned with the SSI inspection report acted with efficiency and vigour.

The YTCs cater for the country's most difficult adolescents. The work is always demanding, often stressful and the many achievements go largely unnoticed. The new management structure will promote better integration of care practice and standards as well as improved value for money.

Pimozide

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by year the numbers of reports of (a) cardiac arrhythmias (fatal and non-fatal) and (b) other fatalities associated with pimozide which were reported to the licensing authority since it was first licensed; and indicate in all those cases the dose of pimozide used and types and doses of other anti-psychotic medicines which were taken at the same time as pimozide.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There have been 29 yellow card reports of cardiac arrhythmias associated with the drug pimozide, of which 14 were fatal. The breakdown by year is as follows:

Year of Report	Reports	Fatalities
1971	2	—
1980	1	—
1984	1	—
1988	2	1
1989	2	1
1990	14	8
1991	7	4

There have been seven other fatalities associated with pimozide as follows:

Year of Report	Fatalities
1972	1
1978	1
1980	3
1984	1
1986	1

The daily dose of pimozide and concurrent use of neuroleptic agents in the fatal reports is summarised as follows:

Daily dose (mg)	Total	Concurrent Neuroleptics
<10	5	2
11-20	2	2
21-30	2	—
31-40	5	4
41-50	2	1
51-60	2	2

I will write to the right hon. Member with full details of dose and other anti-psychotic medicines taken.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when doctors in the United Kingdom were recommended to reduce the maximum dosage of pimozide to 20 mg; and when he first became aware of the United States recommendation on this matter.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In August 1990, the Committee on Safety of Medicines advised that a maximum daily dose of 20 mg should not be exceeded for the drug pimozide. This information was communicated to all doctors in the United Kingdom in issue No. 29 of the CSM bulletin "Current Problems", a copy of which is available in the Library. The company marketing the drug wrote to all doctors in October 1990 enclosing a copy of the revised data sheet and emphasising the change in prescribing information and the maximum recommended dose of 20 mg per day.

Revised dose recommendations made in the United States in 1988 related to use in a different medical condition, commonly prevalent in children, and not to use in schizophrenia and other psychoses, the main indication in the United Kingdom.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will detail the research proposals on myalgic encephalomyelitis that have been (a) accepted and (b) rejected for funding by his Department and the Medical Research Council over the last three years, stating in relation to rejected proposals the reasons for rejection in each case.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department has not accepted any research proposals on myalgic encephalomyelitis. Such proposals would normally be referred to the Medical Research Council, which is the main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research in the United Kingdom. The MRC is an independent body which receives its grant-in-aid from the Department of Education and Science. It decides what research to support on its own expert judgment.

The MRC is not currently funding research specifically into ME. It is, however, funding one study at the Institute of Psychiatry, which is to investigate chronic fatigue in general practitioner attenders. Five other research applications in this area were received over the last three years, which the MRC rejected because they were not of high enough scientific quality, given the funds available. The council also supports work on immune responses to the muscle, nerve cells and related structures which may have some relevance to the understanding and treatment of this condition.

Social Work (International Centre)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what response he has made to the recent feasibility study by the National Institute of Social Work concerning a proposed international centre, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have not as yet received a copy of the feasibility study which I understand is shortly to be put out for consultation. We are, however, providing the National Institute of Social Work with a grant of £100,000 in 1992-93 for work to promote the international exchange of social services staff.

Autistic Children

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any assessment of the number of autistic children in England and Wales; and if he will give the total number of places in residential schools for autistic children.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The most reliable estimates indicate that the prevalence of autism is between four to five per 10,000 population. The number of places in residential schools for autistic children is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science.

National Health Service Leaflet (Cost)

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the cost of the production and distribution of the leaflet, "Your NHS, Our Pledge", which was produced by South West Thames regional health authority.

Mr. Dorrell: A total of 7,000 copies of the leaflet "Your NHS, Our Pledge" were produced and distributed by South West Thames regional health authority at a cost of £2,181. Its purpose is to demonstrate the firm commitment of chairmen in that region to improving patient care through the charter.

National Health Service (Information Strategy)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will publish the information strategy for the national health service; how much it will cost to implement: and whether additional funds will be made available to the national health service to cover the cost of implementation.

Mr. Dorrell: The national health service management executive is discussing the development of information systems within the national health service. Information systems must support the provision of high—quality, cost-effective health services. The scope, costs and funding of information systems depend on the outcome of these discussions.

Child Refugees

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many child refugees have been taken into care by each London local authority during each of the last 12 months; what information he has on their country of origin; and what is the estimated cost of care to each local authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally.

Nursery Places (Crown Premises)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what basis a Department of Health press release, dated 11 June, identified an increase of 75 per cent. in nursery places on Crown premises; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The figure was derived from the Department's statistics on day care services in "Children's Day Care Facilities at 31 March 1990 England (A/F 90/6)", a copy of which is available in the Library. Tables 1 and 2, which contain historical data on the number of day care places and premises, include information on facilities which were not required to register with the local authority. Between 1988 and 1990, the number of places in such facilities grew from 1,034 to 1,810. Facilities on Crown premises are likely to be the most significant category exempt from the requirement to register.

Child Workers

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what action he will take to regularise child working conditions across the United Kingdom, in terms of hours worked, daytime work periods, nature of work and working conditions; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what studies have been carried out by his Department dealing with the number of children working in the United Kingdom; and what are his current estimates for the number of children working in Great Britain.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no plans to introduce changes to the present provisions.

Section 1(1) of the Employment of Women, Young Persons and Children Act 1920 prohibits the employment of any person under school leaving age in an industrial undertaking. This legislation, which is applicable to Great Britain, is enforced by Health and Safety Executive inspectors.

In England, the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 sets out general restrictions governing the part-time employment of children under school leaving age. Local authority byelaws made under the Act set out further restrictions while responding to local employment conditions.

The Department has not carried out any recent studies concerning the employment of children in England. Information is not collected centrally on the number of children employed in England.

TRANSPORT

Departmental Achievements

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement of the achievements of his Department since October 1990.

Mr. Rifkind: My Department has continued to ensure that Britain's growing transport needs are met with regard to safety, efficiency and with proper respect for the environment.

Serious road casualties have continued to fall. In particular, road deaths in the year ending June 1991 were at their lowest level since 1948, despite a ninefold increase in the volume of traffic in the intervening period. We are continuing to promote greater transport safety through regulation, publicity and investment. The Road Traffic Act has reformed road traffic law in the light of the North report and will ensure that bad driving and drink driving are properly punished. The law on the wearing of seat belts has been extended to passengers travelling in the rear seats of cars. We have enhanced our road safety publicity campaigns under the "Safety on the Move" umbrella, notably on drinking and driving and child road safety. For the first time, expenditure of over £30 million was specifically earmarked in the 1991-92 transport supplementary grant settlement for low-cost safety schemes.

Increasing sums are also being spent on improving the safety of public transport. British Rail plans to spend over £200 million on specific safety measures during the current year and London Underground plans to spend over £80 million this year on further safety improvements. We have helped to secure international agreement at the International Maritime Organisation to improvements in standards for ro-ro ferries, oil tankers and bulk carriers. Under the powers in the Aviation and Maritime Security Act 1990, measures have been introduced for the first time for the security of passenger shipping. Existing aviation security measures have been strengthened and new ones are being developed. A new transport security division has been created within the Department, with enhanced resources.

Significant progress has been made towards the reduction of pollution from motor vehicles. Agreement has been reached in Brussels on substantially tougher emission standards for both cars and lorries. Since 1 November, thme annual MOT test has included a test on vehicle emissions.

Investment in transport infrastructure by both the public and private sectors is at historically high levels. The electrification of British Rail's east coast main line, at a cost of some £450 million, was completed in June 1991. British Rail invested more than £800 million in total in 1990-91—the highest in real terms in a single year since the transition from steam to diesel in the 1960s—and is expected to invest over £1 billion in the current year. London Underground investment, currently running at about £450 million a year, is also at record levels. The increased EFLs for 1992-93 announced in the autumn statement—£2,040 million for BR and £1,210 million for LT—are further evidence of the Government's commitment to the railways.

Provision for national trunk roads and motorways is being maintained at over £2 billion a year and has been more than doubled since 1988-89. The opening of the M40 extension to Birmingham in January 1991, and of the M20 between Maidstone and Ashford in May 1991, closed important gaps in the English motorway network. Since October 1990, we have opened over 150 miles of new or improved trunk roads, including 15 new bypasses.

We have continued to take steps to encourage an enhanced role for the private sector in the provision of transport infrastructure. The new Queen Elizabeth II bridge between Dartford and Thurrock was financed and constructed entirely by the private sector. The New Roads and Street Works Act has introduced new procedures for the authorisation of privately financed roads. We have announced our choice of concessionaire for the Birmingham northern relief road.

To encourage private sector participation in the railways, I have written to the chairman of British Rail asking BR to respond positively to reasonable proposals from the private sector to run new passenger and freight services, to charge fairly for the use of railway facilities and to allow private operators to use their own locomotives and train crew if they wish.

We have secured the passage of legislation to enable trust ports to move into the private sector and a number of them are now seeking to do so.

The Government have remained at the forefront of moves to liberalise the provision of air transport services, both within the European Community and through bilateral arrangements with other countries around the world. Since March 1991, airlines have been better able to match services at Heathrow to the needs of passengers, following our removal of most of the traffic distribution rules governing access to the airport.

A45

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 12 November, Official Report, column 426-27, if he will list the number of days on which portions of the carriageways of the A45 between Bury St. Edmunds and Newmarket and Bury St. Edmunds and Stowmarket have been closed for purposes of routine maintenance and work by public utilities.

Mr. Chope: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Road Accident Statistics

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what investigations he or the transport and road research laboratory, made of the cases where a blind spot in a rear view mirror has (a) caused or (b) was a potential factor in any road accident.

Mr. Chope: It is only possible to identify the rear-view mirror blind spot reliably as being a contributory factor to an accident when vehicles are reversing. A Transport and Road Research Laboratory study of such accidents involving fatalities and serious injuries shows that a majority are caused by error or negligence, but that rear view blind spots are also a factor in most cases.

SS Richard Montgomery

Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement indicating the frequency of surveys undertaken on the wreck of the SS Richard Montgomery close to the Isle of Sheppey; what are the current measures being taken to protect the wreck; and if he has any plans to review the policy of maintaining these measures and otherwise leaving the wreck undisturbed.

Mr. McLoughlin: The site of this dangerous wreck is designated as a prohibited area under the Protection of Wrecks Act 1973. It has been clearly marked as such on charts, and by notices attached to the wreck. A notice to mariners has also been issued designating the site as a foul area where trespassers are liable to prosecution.

A number of surveys have been carried out in the wreck. Following expert advice, the last two surveys have been at roughly five-year intervals. As my hon. Friend is aware, the most recent survey was completed by September this year and I hope to make a statement as soon as we have reached conclusions about the findings.

Road Flooding

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received regarding the placing of roadside advertisements with the slogan "road ahead flooded"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I have received a copy of a complaint made to the Advertising Standards Authority about this advertisement.

Air France

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he is making to the European Commission's Transport Commissioner Karel van Miert to block a French Government subsidy of £200 million to Air France.

Mr. McLoughlin: No formal representations were invited on this particular issue and I made none; but I continue to press the Commissioner for a report which he has promised on the whole issue of state aids in air transport.

WALES

Vale Royal Porcelain Ltd

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether any assistance was given to Vale Royal Porcelain Ltd., when the company moved from Stoke on Trent to Wrexham; and whether the company is currently in receipt of grant aid or other assistance from his Department.

Mr. David Hunt: The company was entitled to and received regional development grant.

Relocation Assistance

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he carries out of the financial viability of companies before providing them with relocation assistance.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Lady to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on 19 November 1991. Similar procedures operate in my Department.

Mathematics Teaching

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he intends to take to improve the teaching of mathematics in primary schools.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales is in the process of implementing a national curriculum for mathematics in primary schools. The curriculum is aimed at improving standards, including basic mthematical skills. Pupils between the ages of five and nine are currently being taught the curriculum and from August 1993 it will apply to all primary school pupils.

The results of the first national curriculum tests for mathematics of seven-year-olds show that 74 per cent. of pupils have reached the expected standard (level 2) or higher. These results are encouraging but there is scope for further improving basic mathematical skills. Advice has been sought from the School Examinations and Assessment Council on the detail of the results. Once this is available my right hon. Friend and I will decide what further guidance teachers might require.

Copies of the bulletin giving details of the test results have been sent to all primary school headteachers and directors of education so that they can make their own comparisons of performance and to ensure that standards in their schools are kept under regular review.

Her Majesty's inspectorate (Wales), as part of its ongoing programme of inspection of individual schools, will look closely at the standards of teaching in mathematics. Where the inspectorate report unacceptably low standards the local education authority will be asked about the improvements it proposes to make.

Grant support will continue to be made available to assist local education authorities in 1992-93 to provide training and support to teachers implementing the national curriculum, including the mathematics curriculum.

Careers Teaching

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to ensure that each secondary school in Wales has a full-time careers teacher.

Sir Wyn Roberts: It is for local education authorities and schools to decide whether to appoint careers teachers to secondary schools.

Standard Assessment Tasks

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many children sat the language assessment for key stage 1 in the standard assesment tasks (a) in English and (b) in Welsh in each of the local education authority areas in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is as follows:

Local Education Authority	Number of pupils assessed in the subjects of: English	[1] Welsh
Clwyd	4,079	514
Dyfed	2,441	1,625
Gwent	5,375	132
Gwynedd	400	2,267
Mid Glamorgan	6,369	813
Powys	1,211	167
South Glamorgan	4,804	297
West Glamorgan	4,084	403
Wales	28,763	6,218

[1] The assessment of Welsh in 1991 was not a statutory requirement and was tested on a pilot basis only.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many children sat the language standard assessment task at key stage 1 in the current year in (a) English and (b) Welsh at each individual primary school in Dyfed.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend has given an undertaking to headteachers, local education authorities and teachers' unions that no data collected on the national curriculum key stage 1 assessments for 1991 will be published by the Department at individual school level.

Poll Tax (Non-payment)

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the cost involved in centrally collecting information of the numbers of people in arrears for the poll tax for 1990-91.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: We have not estimated the cost involved in centrally collecting information on the numbers of people in arrears for community charge. The department collects information from charging authorities on the amounts of community charge received and outstanding.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he considered that the proposed Cardiff bay barrage required an environment impact assessment to be carried out in accordance with articles 5 to 10 of European Council directive 85/337/EEC.

Mr. David Hunt: The directive indicates that it is not applied to "projects the details of which are adopted by specific acts of national legislation, since the objectives of this directive, including that of supplying information, are achieved through the legislative process". However, in accordance with Standing Orders, an environmental statement has been supplied and published, and while article 7 is not considered to be relevant in this case, it is clearly right that in its consideration of the Bill, Parliament should assess the environmental effects of the project in accordance with the provisions of the directive identified in the question.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Indonesia (Arms Embargo)

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to meet other EC partners to discuss an arms embargo on the sale of all arms and military equipment to Indonesia.

Mr. Garel-Jones: No.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will now review his policy on the introduction of an embargo on the sales of arms and military equipment to Indonesia.

Mr. Garel-Jones: No. Our policy remains as stated by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in his answer of 18 March.

EC Treaty Provisions

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on how each EC Government and national assembly plan to implement and approve the legislation to enact treaty provisions on political, economic and monetary union.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Article 236 of the treaty of Rome requires that any amendments to the treaty be ratified by all member states in accordance with their respective constitutional requirements. These vary between member states and in many cases will depend on the content of the new treaties agreed at Maastricht.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he has taken concerning the continental shelf around the Falkland Islands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The question of oil in the south Atlantic, specifically in the continental shelf off Patagonia and around the Falkland Islands, has been receiving increasing attention in recent years. Her Majesty's Government have been in contact with the Falkland Islands Government on the matter.

Having considered proposals by the Falkland Islands Government, my right hon. Friend has instructed the Governor of the Falkland Islands to take the necessary legislative measures to provide for the exercise of the Crown's rights over the sea bed and the sub-soil of the continental shelf around the Falkland Island's.

In addition, an ordinance known as the Continental Shelf Bill 1991, will be laid before the Legislative Council of the Falkland Islands. Upon entry into force, this would allow seismic surveying to take place under licence in designated areas of the continental shelf.

Officials from the British and Argentine Governments will meet shortly to explore the scope for co-operation.

Hong Kong

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those topics and areas for discussion concerning Hong Kong at meetings of the Joint Liaison Group upon which there will be prior consultation with LEGCO.

Mr. Garel-Jones [holding answer 21 November 1991]: Under the terms of the joint declarations the proceedings of the joint liaison group (the main role of which is to conduct consultations on the implementation of the joint declaration and to discuss matters relating to the smooth transfer of government in 1997) are confidential unless the two sides agree otherwise. The joint declaration stipulates that the JLG shall play no part in the administration of Hong Kong before or after 1997. The implementation in Hong Kong of some agreements reached in the JLG requires new legislation or the provision of funds by the Legislative Council. The Hong Kong Government wish to build up a co-operative partnership with the council, and intend to provide members with all the information and explanations that they need to assess the Administration's policies.

Kenya

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations were made to the Government of Kenya about the recent suppression of dissidents.

Mrs. Chalker: Her Majesty's Government have constantly stressed the need to respect freedom of expression and the importance of outlets for legitimate dissent in Kenya. Immediately news of the arrest of the dissidents was received in London on 15 November, the Kenyan deputy high commissioner was summoned to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and told of our concern. Parallel action was taken by our high commission in Nairobi. We hope that those arrested will be released immediately so that progress can be made on President Moi's expressed willingness to move towards multi-party democracy.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Legal Aid

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General what estimate of eligibility on income grounds, by reference to a percentage of households and population, is made in relation to green form legal advice for 1979, 1989 and 1990 using the same methodology as adopted to produce the estimates for civil legal aid set out in table 3 of annex A to the consultation paper on eligibility for legal aid published in June 1991 by the Lord Chancellor's Department.

The Attorney-General: No estimates have been made of eligibility for green form legal advice and assistance. Eligibility for legal advice and assistance will be considered at a later stage of the Lord Chancellor's review of financial conditions for legal aid.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General what is the current timetable for the review of legal aid announced by the Lord Chancellor on 13 November 1989; by what date under this timetable the review team intends to respond to submissions to its consultation on civil legal aid eligibility released in November 1991; what further consultations on what subjects are planned by the review team; and by what date the review team currently intends to complete its tasks.

The Attorney-General: Responses to the consultation paper on non-matrimonial civil legal aid are now being considered and proposals will be issued in the first half of 1992. It is expected that a consultation paper on the financial conditions for legal aid in criminal proceedings will be published in the summer of 1992 and that the review team will then begin work on legal aid for matrimonial and family matters and legal advice and assistance with the aim of completing its work in 1993.

Commercial Courts

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General what plans the Government have to establish further commercial courts outside London.

The Attorney-General: The commercial court sits at the Royal Courts of Justice in London to hear disputes, mainly arising from the international commercial activities of the City of London.

Commercial lists have been established at Manchester and Liverpool comprising general commercial business cases. Further such lists in other parts of the country will be considered should local business communities demonstrate a need.

County Courts

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General what percentage of county courts and district registries now have user committees.

The Attorney-General: Of 288 county courts and combined court centres (including part-time caller offices), 112 (39 per cent.) are at present covered by court user committees. Plans are in hand to cover a further 23 courts, bringing the percentage to 47 per cent.

Of 24 district registries, 13 (54 per cent.) are covered by court user committees. The percentage will increase to 75 per cent. when five further district registries are covered in the near future.

Bristol City Council (Judgment)

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Attorney-General if he will place in the Library a copy of the judgment R. v. Bristol City Council and Another, ex-parte Willsman and Another 17 October 1991.

The Attorney-General: I have, as requested, arranged for a copy of the judgment R v. Bristol City Council and Another, ex-parte Willsman and Another, 17 October 1991, to be placed in the House of Commons Library.

Civil Actions

Dr. Godman: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the statutory provisions which set out the circumstances in which a person serving overseas with the United Kingdom armed forces or a member of the family of such an individual may raise a civil action in an English court concerning a criminal offence committed in a place outwith the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: By virtue of the Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments Act 1982, which gives effect to the Brussels convention on jurisdiction and the enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters, persons in another EC member state, including members of our armed forces, may sue in an English court in respect of any wrongful act done to them, whether or not it constituted a criminal offence, if the defendant is domiciled in England and Wales.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the current targets for his Department's offices in Wales for meeting (a) delivery and (b) accuracy of benefits administered.

Miss Widdecombe: The setting of targets for district offices is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Social Fund

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants applied for grants or loans under the social fund during the financial year 1990-91 in each of the benefit offices in Wales; how many applications were turned down and for what reason; what was the average size of the grant, crisis loan or budgetary loan in the year; and if he will provide comparable figures for the first six months of 1991-92.

Mr. Scott: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Benefits Office, Neath

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the proposal to close the Neath branch of the Benefits Agency.

Miss Widdecombe: The operation of the network of Benefits Agency district offices is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Retirement Pensions

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will update his answer of 20 March 1990, Official Report, column 597, on the gross cost of uprating the retirement pension by average earnings in each year since 1980-81 at 1991 prices.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 5 November 1991]: The information is given in the table, based on 1991-92 prices.

It is only possible to estimate the net cost for the current year, 1991-92, in which it would have been £4·43 billion allowing for a reduction of £0·28 billion of income support; £0·26 billion of community charge benefit; and £0·72 billion of housing benefit.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police Statistics

Mr. McWilliam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by English police authority (a) the population covered by that authority, (b) the police force establishment of that authority, (c) the total arrests made in that authority, (d) the number of arrests per officer, (e) the total number of reported crimes, (f) the number of crimes per officer, (g) the total number of crimes per 1,000 population and (h) the total number of unsolved crimes per 1,000 population.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is provided for 1990 in the table.

Prisons

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many inmates would be accommodated by the cells which are not in use at London prisons due to work taking place on the installation of an internal sanitation system within those prisons.

Mrs. Rumbold: On Tuesday 19 November there were 351 cells out of use in London local prisons and remand centres because of work to install integral sanitation. The certified normal accommodation for these cells is 351, but if they were to be used at previous levels of overcrowding some 412 prisoners would be accommodated.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures will be taken to ensure that private prison staff will be checked for suitability and be trained to the same standard as Her Majesty's prison service standards.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Criminal Justice Act 1991 requires the director and other custodial staff of any contracted out prison to be certified by the Secretary of State as prisoner custody officers. The Act further provides that the Secretary of State may issue a certificate only if he is satisfied that they are fit and proper persons and have received training from the contractor to the approved standard.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the regulations in the code of practice for the housing and care of animals used in scientific procedures relating to the temperatures at which old and new world primates should be kept, to reflect the fact that these groups of primates include species which come from widely different climates.

Mrs. Rumbold: The code of practice, which was based closely on guidelines produced by the Royal Society and the Universities Federation for Animal Welfare, sets out optimal room temperature ranges for new world primates and old world primates used in scientific procedures. These temperature ranges are considered to meet the welfare needs of the animals and we have no plans to review them.

Special Branch

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department to whom prison-based special branch operations are accountable.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The direction and control of all police operations is a matter for the chief officer of the police force concerned.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he plans to review the nature of special branch operations in England and Wales, and in particular the accountability of such operations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have no plans to do so. The conduct of police operations is a matter for the chief constable of the police force concerned.

Overseas Voters

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his Department's advertising campaign to encourage the registration of overseas voters, including the total amount spent so far and the number of overseas voters who have registered as a result.

Mrs. Rumbold: No advertising or publicity to inform British citizens abroad of their voting rights was undertaken by the Home Office this year, apart from the updating of posters used in British diplomatic posts abroad at a cost of £1,400. We shall make known to the House in due course the number of overseas electors included on the draft electoral register for 1992-93.

Brixton Prison (Escapes)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what parts of Judge Tumim's report to him regarding the recent gaol escape from Brixton were not published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons advised me that for reasons of security he believed that much of his report could not be published, and that to publish it as it stood would endanger the remaining security at Brixton and the safety of individuals. I concurred with that view and published those parts which Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons considered could be published.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether the July 1991 Brixton escapees had or were made aware of any drawings or plans of the prison by any member of the prison staff;

(2) who authorised the activities organised by Staffordshire police in Brixton gaol in late 1990 and early 1991.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The allegations on which the questions appear to be based fall to be considered by Mr. Colin Bailey, whose appointment was announced by the chief constable of Staffordshire on 20 November.

Poll Tax (Non-payment)

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons have now been taken to court and convicted for non-payment of the poll tax in England and Wales; how many have received prison sentences; how many have turned up on court to argue their cases; how many hours of court time have been involved and, based on the average cost per hour of a magistrates court, at what cost to public funds.

Mr. John Patten: During the period 1 April 1990 to 30 September 1991 magistrates courts in England and Wales made 5·7 million community charge liability orders and issued 2,788 warrants committing non-payers to prison; 23,456 court sitting hours were devoted to community charge enforcement at an estimated cost of about £5 million.

Prison Security

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the Lakes and Hadfield review of prison security.

Mrs. Rumbold: As I indicated yesterday, my right hon. Friend has recently received from Chief Constable Hadfield and Mr. Lakes the report of their audit of custody arrangements for category A prisoners and of their inquiry into DOC1 division in prison service headquarters, and is considering it. He hopes to publish a summary in due course.

Wandsworth Prison

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the number of police officers deployed in the vicinity of Wandsworth gaol on 7 July.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the commissioner that two inspectors, two sergeants and 20 police constables were deployed in the vicinity of Wandsworth prison on 7 July 1991.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the number of crimes which have occurred but which have not been reported to the police during the last 12 months.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 21 November 1991]: The fourth British crime survey, fieldwork for which will be in early 1992, will provide an estimate for 1991. Some types of crime are not covered by the survey, such as those where the victim is an organisation or institution, rather than an individual.

Satellite Broadcasting (Pornographic Material)

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to make representations to his opposite numbers in the EC to prevent pornographic material being transmitted from foreign-owned satellites and broadcast by cable into United Kingdom households; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 21 November 1991]: I have no such plans. The EC Directive on Transfrontier Broadcasting includes standards of taste and decency.

NATIONAL FINANCE

British Telecom

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for each of the eight retail institutions undertaking the sale of BT shares the body which regulates their share-selling capacity.

Mr. Maude: The regulatory bodies that regulate the conduct of the selected retailers investment business are listed on page 47 of the prospectus for the British Telecommunications plc offer for sale which was published on 21 November. A copy has been placed in the Library.

Hospital Car Service

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions have taken place with volunteer drivers of the hospital car service in Devon regarding taxation of the hospital car service mileage allowance.

Mr. Maude: The position is that motor mileage allowances paid to volunteer drivers who use a car on health service business are liable to tax to the extent that the allowances exceed the costs of running and maintaining the car for the miles travelled for the health service and so result in a profit. Letters have been sent to individual drivers explaining the position and setting out arrangements which will enable drivers, if they wish, to read off the approximate profit figure, if any, from tables calculated by the Inland Revenue. Alternatively, drivers can calculate their taxable profits themselves by reference to the actual mileage payments they receive and their actual expenses.

I understand that the Inland Revenue has not held any formal discussions with volunteer drivers in Devon on this matter, but the letters to which I have referred suggested that drivers should contact their tax offices if they were unclear about their tax position, and I am told that the Inland Revenue has responded to a number of such inquiries.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will consider building an exceptional depreciation allowance into the mileage rates applied to the voluntary drivers of the hospital car service.

Mr. Maude: The Inland Revenue's "tax-free" mileage rates already include an allowance for depreciation. These rates are used in a voluntary, administrative arrangement designed by the Inland Revenue to reduce record keeping for health authorities and volunteer drivers, but it is open to drivers to choose to have any profit element in their mileage allowances taxed on the strict statutory basis if they believe the Revenue's "tax-free" rates do not cover their expenses. However, in that case, drivers must keep records of all their motoring costs and miles driven, both privately and for the hospital car service, to enable the actual profit to be calculated and charged to tax in the normal way.

Privatised Industries

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the net average annual financial contribution to the Exchequer, for the 10-year period before their privatisation, of each nationalised industry privatised over the last 10 years.

Mr. Maude: This information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The information that is readily available, including information on the major nationalised industries' external financial requirements since 1978-79, is published in chapter 6 of the "Statistical Supplement to the 1990 Autumn Statement"—Cm. 1520.

VAT

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made since his announcement of the introduction of monthly VAT returns for the largest VAT payers.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: In his announcement on 21 October, at columns 317-18, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer advised that business representatives would be consulted on the details of this change.

Customs and Excise has now produced a consultation paper, which has been issued initially to some 57 trade associations, representatives bodies and individual businesses, including the 17 members of the joint VAT consultation committee. A copy of the paper has been placed in the Library of the House.

Citizens Charter

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what methods are being used to distribute a copy of the citizens charter to every home; what is the estimated cost of (a) preparing, (b) printing and (c) distributing it; how many copies have been printed; which commercial firms are being used for its distribution; by what process they were selected; which companies were appointed; and at what cost to public funds.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 21 November 1991]: Neither the White Paper on the "Citizen's Charter" — Cm. 1599—nor the accompanying short guide is being distributed to every home. Cm. 1599 is available, priced £8.50, from HMSO. The short guide is available free of charge. Details of preparation, printing and distribution costs were given in the Prime Minister's replies to the hon. Members for Blackburn (Mr. Straw) and for the Wrekin (Mr. [illegible]ott) on 25 July 1991, Official Report, columns 781-82.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many additional staff have been employed on the preparation of the text of the citizens charter; at what cost; and from which budget these costs have been met.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 21 November 1991]: No additional staff were employed on the preparation of the text of the citizens charter. The work was done by civil servants from the central Departments as part of their normal duties.

"Competing for Quality"

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the cost of producing the White Paper, "Competing for Quality"; and how much the Government expect to raise through sales of the White Paper.

Mr. Maples [holding answer on 21 November 1991]: The cost of printing, publishing and distribution were borne by HMSO which aims to recover these costs from the anticipated sales revenue of around £30,000. In addition, design costs of £10,700 were borne by HM Treasury.

HEALTH

HIV (Health Workers)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies his Department is carrying out on the occurrence of stress and burnout, or related psychosocial morbidity, amongst health workers involved in the management of people with HIV infection and disease; what information he has as to levels of staff turnover, absenteeism and illness amongst such workers; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None. However, a research proposal dealing with this question is currently being considered by the Department. No information on the levels of staff turnover, absenteeism and illness specifically among such workers is held centrally.

Asthma

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the role of oilseed rape in the causation of asthma.

Mr. Dorrell: Some individuals may be allergic to the pollen and other products of oilseed rape, as they may be to other crops and plants. However, there is no conclusive evidence of a link between oilseed rape and increased incidence of asthma. The Government have given financial support to a project based at Aberdeen university which is looking at possible effects on public health caused by oilseed rape. It will be some time before the results of the study are known.

Dental Service

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement after the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Baroness Hooper's meeting with dentists from Dorset, about the suspension of the national health service dental service for children;

(2) what steps he intends to take to ensure the continuation of national health service dental services for children in Dorset.

Mr. Waldegrave: There is no question of national health service dental services for children being suspended in Dorset or anywhere else. Dorset has the second highest level of children registered with a dentist in England.

Pensions

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to amend the health service superannuation scheme to enable part-time staff to receive on retirement a pension entitlement equivalent to that paid to someone with the same total number of years service who has achieved that service in full-time employment.

Mr. Dorrell: We have no plans to change the present arrangements. Pension benefits for full-time and part-time staff are calculated according to a common principle, which is standard pensions practice. Both are related to length of service and the amount of pay received at retirement. In practice, any part-time service is reduced to its equivalent full-time length and the pension calculated by reference to a notional whole-time rate of pay. To treat part-time officers as though they had worked full-time would be to credit them with service which had not been earned and for which no financial contribution had been made.

Scandinavian Airline

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the role of the Scandinavian airline SAS or its subsidiary SSP in the planning, finance and operating of the proposed obstetric and gynaecology unit in Liverpool.

Mr. Dorrell: Employees of SAS assisted clinical staff to formulate ideas about the model of care they wish to adopt in the proposed new unit. Following this, they provided design advice. There are no further financial links nor any operational agreements between SAS and the district health authority.

Childbirth

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department has issued any guidance superseding the "Maternity Care in Action" document's advice that every mother should be encouraged to have her baby in a maternity unit.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. The Department's policy remains that, as unforeseen complications can occur in any birth, every mother should be encouraged to have her baby in a maternity unit where emergency facilities are readily available. However, women should be able to make an informed choice about where to have their baby and discuss the options available with their general practitioner, midwife and obstetrician. Advice is also contained in the pregnancy book.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his policy on home confinements.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Our policy on home confinements is set out in section 2 of the memorandum on "Delivery" submitted by the Department in evidence to the Select Committee on Health—inquiry into maternity and neonatal services. The memorandum is contained in the minutes of evidence given to the Select Committee on 3 July 1991, a copy of which has been placed in the Library, reference HC 430-V. Paragraph 2.6 of the memorandum says

"Although the demand for home births is not great, health authorities should ensure that there are policies agreed between the professionals to provide mothers who do decide to have their babies at home with adequate antenatal, intrapartum and postnatal care and that these arrangements are well known locally."

Redundancy

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what data are collected about the numbers of stasff made redundant each year in the national health service; if the figures are broken down by grade; and if he will make it his policy to publish them.

Mr. Dorrell: Data on redundancies in the national health service are not collected centrally, other than in respect of staff who are both over 50 years of age and have at least five years reckonable service for superannuation purposes. These data are not broken down by grade. The data are distributed within the national health service for internal management purposes. There are no plans for any wider publication.

Abortion

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of Health, pursuant to his answer, of 14 November, Official Report, column 656, to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill what action he intends to take against the British Pregnancy Advisory Service over its advertisements appearing in Cosmopolitan magazine, which circulates outside the United Kingdom.

Mr. Virginia Bottomley: I understand that the magazine in question is printed and published in the United Kingdom. As with other magazines in the United Kingdom base, a very small proportion of copies, in this case well under 10 per cent., are sent overseas. We are satisfied that the form of the advertisement in question is not directed at persons overseas. There has been a recent European court decision about the advertisement of abortion services and we shall be examining it to see if it has any implication for our condition of approval.

Deaths

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many men over 65 years and women aged over 60 years died in each month from July 1989 to the latest convenient date.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is given in the table.

Number of deaths for males aged 65 and over, and females aged 60 and over, by month of occurrence in England and Wales, July 1989 to December 1990

	Males 65 and over	Females 60 and over

Medical Defence Insurance

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether general practitioners are required to provide their own medical defence insurance; and what allowance for the cost of their premiums is made in (i) the remuneration received by doctors and (ii) the way they are taxed.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 15 November 1991]: General medical and general dental practitioners are not required by the Department to take out their own medical defence insurance, but would be expected to do so in their own interests. Subscriptions to medical defence organisations are taken into account along with other practice expenses when determining the provision to be made for expenses within the GP remuneration system, and are an allowable expense for taxation purposes.

Terrapins

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice the public health laboratory service has given on terrapin importation on health grounds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 15 November 1991]: The public health laboratory service (PHLS) has advised that on the available evidence imported terrapins kept as pets do not pose a significant public health problem in England and Wales.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on how many occasions the occurrence of salmonellosis from pet terrapins in the United Kingdom has been identified by the public health laboratory service.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 15 November 1991]: The public health laboratory service (PHLS) division of enteric pathogens, which receives laboratory isolates of salmonella from human and non-human sources for detailed identification, has in the past recorded family outbreaks of salmonellosis in households where the same serotype of salmonella has been identified from terrapin tank water. The most recent occasion on which this occurred was in 1979. Since 1979 to date, there have been three occasions (two in 1981 and one in 1982) where the same serotype has been identified in a sporadic case and in water taken from a terrapin tank.

The PHLS communicable disease surveillance centre, which receives laboratory-confirmed reports of human infections, recorded in the period 1986-90 a total of 3,512 outbreaks of salmonellosis. Two of these outbreaks affected people in households where terrapins were kept as pets. However, as no microbiological evidence was reported, the presence of the terrapins could have been coincidental.

Notes:

1. An outbreak represents two or more related laboratory confirmed salmonella infections in humans of whom at least one was ill.
2. A sporadic case is a single case apparently unrelated to other cases.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has received from the public health laboratory service concerning the implications for the United Kingdom of United States data for salmonellosis contamination from imported terrapins.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 15 November 1991]: The following table shows the total number of laboratory confirmed infections of salmonella reported to the public health laboratory service (PHLS) communicable disease surveillance centre in 1989 and 1990, together with the number of reports received for those salmonella serotypes cited in the past in the United States as being associated with terrapins. The public health laboratory service advises that these serotypes are rare in the United Kingdom and, as can be seen from the table, their numbers declined between 1989 and 1990. Therefore given the available evidence it is difficult to conclude that United States data can be applied to the United Kingdom.

Laboratory reports to the public health laboratory services communicable disease surveillance centre of all and selected salmonellas in faeces (cases and excreters) England and Wales 1989 and 1990

Salmonella serotype	Laboratory reports of faecal isolates to communicable disease surveillance centre
	1989	1990
All Salmonella	24,649	25,351
S.java	29	29
S.arizonae	8	5
S.poona	8	5

Salmonella serotype	Laboratory reports of faecal isolates to communicable disease surveillance centre 1989	1990
S.litchfield	6	3
S.cubana	5	9

Notes:

1. None of the above reports stated an association with terrapins.
2. One other report of a salmonella (S.typhimurium in 1989) stated an association with terrapins. Further investigation revealed the tank water to be negative, so the finding may have been a chance one.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of people employed in bus manufacture for each year since 1980.

Mr. Jackson: There are no separate estimates available for the bus manufacturing industry. The following tables give estimates of employees in employment for each year from 1980, for motor vehicles and their engines, motor vehicle bodies, trailers and caravans, in which bus manufacturing is included.

SIC groups 351-352

June	Great Britain unadjusted for seasonal variations Thousands
1980	230·3
1981	191·8
1982	166·3
1983	165·4
1984	157·3
1985	156·8
1986	155·5
1987	154·6
1988	162·9
1989	160·9
1990	153·7
1991	139·1

Earnings

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many workers in the United Kingdom are paid below 68 per cent. of all full-timers' mean earnings; and how many of them are (a) women and (b) part-time workers.

Mr. Forth: From the 1991 new earnings survey (NES), it is estimated that 68 per cent. of average (mean) gross hourly earnings of all full-time employees in April 1991 was £4·76. It is further estimated, using the NES and estimates of the number of employees in employment, that a little over 9 million employees in Great Britain earned below this amount. A little under 6 million of these employees were women, and just over 4 million were part-time workers.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Overseas Aid

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the estimated percentage of gross national product that will be spent on overseas aid for the planning years 1990-91, 1991-92, 1992-93 and 1993-94, respectively.

Mrs. Chalker: The figure in the autumn statement for the aid budget in the current financial year is 0·30 per cent. of the estimate of GDP. Estimates for future years are not available.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

School Meals

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his plans to set up a committee to create nutritional guidelines for school meals; what its term of reference and membership will be; and when it will be expected to report.

Mr. Maclean: I have no plans to set up another committee. The matter is being considered already by the catering working group set up jointly by my Department, the Department of Health and the Health Education Authority. I am also expecting to meet representatives of the school meals campaign in the near future.

SCOTLAND

Crofting

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the value in real terms of current crofting grant and loan support when set against a base line of 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Grant and loan support for crofters is available through the crofters building grants and loans scheme (CBGLS). In real terms since 1979, the maximum grant and loan available to eligible applicants has increased by 31 per cent. in the case of assistance for new housing and 13 per cent. for assistance towards improvement works.

Social Work Department, Fife

Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the most recent approaches made by his Department to Sheriff Kearney in relation to the anticipated receipt and publication by his Department of the report into the operations of the social work department of Fife region, indicating the response and the number of days which the sheriff has taken to prepare and finish his report together with the costs of his Department and others involved.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Since May 1990 we have corresponded on a number of occasions with Sheriff Kearney about progress on his report and a likely completion date. In his most recent response last month he indicated that he was unable to give a firm date.

The costs of the inquiry directly borne by the Scottish Office to date amount to some £600,000. I have no information on the costs incurred by others involved.

Rural Enterprise Programme

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current percentage level of take-up under the rural enterprise programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Current estimates of expenditure in 1991-92 are still subject to uncertainty, but it seems likely that expenditure on the rural enterprise programme will be about £1·8 million, as against the Vote provision of £3 million. This is partly attributable to a delay in the EC Commission's approval of the programme and to the submission of more modest projects than expected. The extension of the REP's business development scheme to new areas, announced on 11 November, should ensure that available resources in future are fully utilised.

Foresterhill Hospital

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total cost of preparing business plans for directly managed unit and national health service trust status for Foresterhill hospital in Aberdeen; how much was met directly by Grampian health board; how much was met by the Scottish Home and Health Department; and how much was met by the university of Aberdeen.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 18 November 1991]: As I made clear to the hon. Member on 8 February 1991 at column 288, the cost of preparing the business plan, from which experience other boards and units will benefit, was £156,000 of which £100,000 was met from additional funds held by my Department for this purpose, £41,000 by Grampian health board from resources provided to institute NHS reform and £15,000 from the university of Aberdeen.

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total cost of the consultation exercise for the Foresterhill hospital national health service trust application; what cost fell directly to Grampian health board from its ordinary budget; how much additional funding was provided by the Scottish Home and Health Department; and if he will publish a detailed account of the expenditure, including printing and other expenses.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 18 November 1991]: The total cost was £60,102·39. This covered the preparation, printing and distribution of the application documents as well as the leaflets prepared following a suggestion made to the trust sponsors at a meeting with Aberdeen district council. The costs were met from a specific allocation of £10,000 from my Department with the remainder funded from resources made available to the board to implement NHS reforms.

National Curriculum

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will announce his decision on the final location of the Scottish Consultative Council on the Curriculum; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 19 November 1991]: The Scottish Consultative Council on the Curriculum is currently preparing an assessment of its accommodation needs, in accordance with arrangements agreed in March 1988. Meanwhile the Government's position remains as described in my letter of 17 March 1988 to the chairman of the governors of Northern college which stated that the location of the council's offices would be reviewed after three years and which expressed the expectation that the business of the council would then become centralised on the Dundee premises of the college. My right hon. Friend expects to receive the council's views shortly, and to make a decision on the matter at an early date thereafter.

ENVIRONMENT

North Sea Conference

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress there has been in implementing the recommendations of the 1990 North sea conference.

Mr. Trippier: In July last year we published a guidance note on how we intended to implement the measures agreed at the Third North Sea Conference which was held in the Hague in March 1990. We were the first North sea state to do so and I am pleased to be able to report good progress in taking forward these matters.

Contaminants entering the North sea through rivers are the most significant pollutant. We are making good progress towards meeting agreed reductions of inputs of substances that are toxic, persistent and liable to bioaccumulate. We have completed this year our part of a comparative international data collection exercise on river inputs organised by the Paris Commission. This shows reductions between 1985 and 1990 in inputs to the North sea, through United Kingdom rivers, for example of 51 per cent. and 61 per cent. for mercury and cadmium and of 30 per cent for Lindane.

The Hague declaration also seeks tighter controls on pesticides. The Government have substantially increased scientific resources available for evaluation of existing and new pesticides. Of the 18 pesticides listed in the declaration whose use must be strictly limited or banned, recent decisions on chlordane, mercury compounds and fluoroactive acid mean that 14 are no longer in use or are being phased out. Of the remaining four: atrazine is currently under review by the independent Advisory Committee on Pesticides; a European Community directive agreed last year bans the use of pentachlorophenol except by special authorisation for treatment of dry rot in timber, and in limited industrial applications where emissions are controlled; Quintozene and Chloropicrin are used in very small quantities but will be reviewed as part of the pesticide evaluation programme.

Polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs) have been a particular concern in the marine environment especially in relation to marine mammals. The conference agreed to phase out remaining uses and carry out their destruction in an environmentally acceptable form by 1999. The Department of the Environment has been working with industry to assess totals of PCB waste arisings in different industrial sectors and to develop new guidance on their safe disposal. This should be issued for consultation as a draft waste management paper next year.

On sewage discharges, the water industry has expanded and accelerated its ten year investment programme to improve bathing waters. Some 40 schemes will now include additional treatment at an estimated cost of £600 million. We also welcome the adoption by the European Community of the Urban Waste Water Treatment Directive which encompasses our announcement at the time of the North Sea Conference that we aim to treat all significant discharges of sewage before discharge to coastal waters.

We have said that the disposal of sewage sludge at sea will end by 1998 at the latest. All bodies currently licensed to undertake this activity have now reported their plans to introduce alternative methods. The first disposal licences will be terminated by the end of 1993, five years ahead of the target. In the main these early terminations will result in the beneficial re-use of sludge either as a fertiliser or composting agent.

In line with North Sea Conference decisions, we have also been looking carefully at licences to dispose of liquid industrial waste at sea. We have sought to phase out this activity as soon as satisfactory land based alternatives become available. The number of licences granted for this disposal route has been cut from 24 in 1987 to just two today. We do not intend to renew these after 1992. This has required substantial investment on the part of industry. In particular, Sterling Organics and ICI have invested £5 million and £25 million respectively in innovative technology to treat and recycle wastes currently disposed of at sea. In addition National Power, who currently have a licence to dispose of flyash at sea, have also invested in new plant to produce concrete blocks. This will be coming on stream next year. We do not expect to extend their disposal licence beyond the end of 1992.

With regard to operational discharges from ships, the International Maritime Organisation agreed in September this year, subject to adoption by signatory states, to accept a proposal by North Sea states for lower limits for oil discharges to apply to all ships on a global basis. Similar action on chemical discharges is being considered. In addition, the Department of Transport is consulting the United Kingdom shipping and ports industries and related interests on the introduction of annex IV of the MARPOL Convention on sewage discharges from ships.

In the offshore oil and gas industry the disposal of discarded oil-based drilling cuttings was identified as the main source of pollution from exploration and appraisal wells. Our action plan to minimise this pollution by prohibiting the discharge of oil based mud cuttings by 1994 was this year submitted to, and accepted by, the Paris Commission group on oil pollution. Research and field testing on new mud systems and cleaning techniques have continued and early indications are that these should attract practical application by the industry.

We have also continued to give a high priority to support for the work of the North sea task force through the research programmes of a number of Departments. The results of this work, which includes studies on seals, dolphins and seabirds and better understanding of the links between inputs of contaminants, their distribution and effects, will be reflected in the 1993 quality status report on the North sea. Recently completed projects have included an atlas of North sea rainfall, by remote sensing, which will enable a more accurate assessment to be made of atmospheric pollutant inputs.

Finally, as a result of a British initiative, the Hague declaration extended the scope of North sea conferences to include the protection of marine wildlife. We announced our intention last year to develop proposals for marine consultation areas in England and Wales which will include Government guidelines addressed to marine agencies. Early in 1992 we intend to issue a consultation document which will contain a first list of proposed sites. We will also review existing legislation in relation to marine conservation. In addition we have strongly supported efforts to develop an agreement to protect small cetaceans in the North and Baltic seas under the United Nations Bonn convention on migratory species. The text of such an agreement was successfully concluded in Geneva in September this year and adopted by 6 North sea states and the European Community. An offer by the Government to host the Agreement's Secretariat at the United Kingdom's sea mammal research unit of the Natural Environment Research Council was very favourably received.

Harrogate Borough Council

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the total tabulated receipts from the disposal of properties so far in the current financial year by Harrogate borough council.

Mr. Yeo: Harrogate borough council has reported the sale of 26 dwellings between April and September 1991.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to be able to announce standard spending assessments for local education, social services, and fire and police services.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce the rate support grant and capping criteria for 1992-93; and if he will make a statement on the reason for the delay in making the announcement.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend expects to make an announcement shortly.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what increase of uniform business rate he proposes to make for 1992.

Mr. Key: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend on 6 November 1991 at column 158 to the hon. Member for Hyndburn (Mr. Hargreaves).

Homeless Families

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the number of homeless families living in bed-and-breakfast accommodation in England at the end of June, in each of the years 1985 to 1991, inclusive.

Mr. Yeo: Estimates of the number of households who were being dealt with under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 Housing Act and temporarily placed in bed and breakfast accommodation are in the table.

	Households at 1 June
1985	4,590
1986	6,950
1987	10,920
1988	11,270
1989	11,720
1990	12,170
1991	13,330

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what further steps he is considering to help statutorily homeless familes; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what assessment he has made of the effectiveness to date of his Department's homeless initiative to reduce the need for local authorities to use bed-and-breakfast hotels as temporary accommodation for homeless families;

(3) how many of the additional units of accommodation to be provided under his Department's homelessness initiative will be local authority empty dwellings refurbished for letting to homeless families.

Mr. Yeo: A total of £300 million has been made available to local authorities and housing associations in London and the south east in 1990-91 and 1991-92 to provide accommodation for homeless families. We expect these funds to produce some 16,000 homes if local authorities and housing associations achieve the outputs which they have told us they will. My Department considers that the outputs projected represent good value for money for the resources committed to the initiative.

The extent to which the accommodation provided reduces the use of bed and breakfast by local authorities depends on a number of factors, including the level of homelessness acceptances and local authority management decisions. A condition of the allocation of resources under this initiative is that the properties provided should be used for homeless families.

According to information reported by local authorities for 1990-91 and estimates for 1991-92, over 6,800 of the 16,000 homes made available through this initiative will be refurbished local authority voids.

We have consulted the local authority associations, through the Housing Consultative Council, on a proposal that in the future allocation of capital resources for housing, the weightings given to homelessness and temporary accommodation should be significantly increased. Decisions will be announced soon.

Vacant Dwellings

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of vacant local authority dwellings in England at 1 April in each of the years 1985 to 1990, inclusive, other than those which are awaiting or undergoing major works or awaiting sale or demolition.

Mr. Yeo: The information derived from local authorities' annual housing investment programme returns is shown in the table.

Local authority empty dwellings, excluding those awaiting or undergoing major works or awaiting sale or demolition: England 1 April

Year
1985	[1]n.a	(94,000)
1986	[1]n.a	(91,100)
1987	61,800	(92,500
1988	57,800	(87,200)
1989	62,700	(85,700)
1990	60,500	(84,300

[1] not available—figures in brackets for these and later years show empty dwellings excluding those awaiting sale or demolition only.

East Thames Corridor

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress he has made on the east Thames corridor.

Mr. Heseltine: I have today appointed Llewelyn-Davies Planning to undertake the study into the development capacity of the east Thames corridor which I announced on 10 October. The broad terms of reference for that study have already been placed in the Library. I have also had a first meeting with the leaders of the local authorities in the corridor.

Local Government (Consultation)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received following publication of his Department's consultative document, "The Role of Local Government".

Mr. Key [holding answer 21 November 1991]: A list of the respondents to the consultation paper "The Structure of Local Government in England" and copies of the responses were placed in the Library of the House on 14 October. The Department has received about 300 responses so far to the consultation paper "The Internal Management of Local Authorities in England". We have not published a consultation paper entitled "The Role of Local Government".

Direct Services Organisation (Crawley)

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received about the operation of the direct services organisation of Crawley borough council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key [holding answer 21 November 1991]: Crawley borough council has made representations in response to notices served on it under section 13 of the Local Government Act 1988, in relation to its direct service organisation's failure to meet the specified financial objective in carrying out other catering work in 1989-90, and vehicle maintenance work and refuse collection in 1990-91. My right hon. Friend is considering these responses.

Leasing

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received following the publication of his Department's consultative document, "The Housing Revenue Account and Short Term Leasing".

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 21 November 1991]: My Department received some 60 responses to the consultation paper on short-term leasing issued on 3 May 1991, including 50 from local authorities or their associations. Following this consultation exercise, the Minister for Housing announced decisions on the future of short-term leasing in answer to a written parliamentary question on 23 May, including the decision in principle to make available a transitional specific grant. On 14 November my Department wrote to all local housing authorities seeking views on arrangements for the distribution of the specific grant.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Inspectors' Reports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what arrangements exist to enable any hon. Member to obtain copies of the Department of Trade and Industry inspectors' reports which have been given to trade associations but not published.

Mr. Redwood: None.

Directors and Auditors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will provide a table showing the number of directors and auditors who have been disqualified following their criticism in the Department of Trade and Industry's inspectors' reports since 1985;

(2) how many company directors and auditors have been disqualified from acting as directors and auditors, as a result of reports by the Department of Trade and Industry's inspectors.

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins) on 1 November at columns 618-20.

On 31 October 1991 a five-year disqualification order under section 8 of the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986 was made against Mr. John Wallrock, who was criticised in the inspectors' report into Minet Holdings plc and WMD Underwriting Agencies Limited, which has been published.

So far as I am aware, no auditor criticised in an inspector's report has been debarred from auditing as a result of information in that report.

Auditing Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy that following the criticism of an auditing firm by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors, the standards of that firm would always be investigated.

Mr. Redwood: Whenever an auditing firm is criticised in a report by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors, a copy of that report is disclosed to the relevant supervisory body. It is for that body to decide what action to take.

Serious Fraud Office

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the differences between the investigations carried out by his Department and by the Serious Fraud Office.

Mr. Redwood: Under the Companies Act, where there is good reason, the Department of Trade and Industry investigates complaints about companies: these inquiries are essentially fact-finding.

The SFO is a criminal enforcement agency which investigates and prosecutes cases of suspected serious and complex criminal fraud whether or not they concern companies.

Supervisory Bodies

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the period within which the recognised supervisory bodies will be able to make at least one monitoring visit to the auditing firms.

Mr. Redwood: The three Institutes of Chartered Accountants intend to conduct a routine monitoring visit each year to a fifth of their members who audit listed companies, together with a random sample of, initially, 150 other firms. The Chartered Association of Certified Accountants intends to conduct a routine monitoring visit at least once every five years to all individuals and firms registered with it, together with those registered with the Association of Authorised Public Accountants, under the terms of arrangements between those bodies. All the recognised supervisory bodies have also made provision for special monitoring visits in response to complaints. The bodies will, jointly with my Department, review the operation of the monitoring arrangements in 1993.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will provide a complete list of the bodies which he has recognised as supervisory bodies or qualifying bodies under the Companies Act 1989.

Mr. Redwood: My right hon. Friend has approved, for the purposes of section 31(4) of the Companies Act 1989, qualifications offered by

The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales;
The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland;
The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland; and
The Chartered Association of Certified Accountants.

His present intention is that qualifications offered by those bodies should also be recognised under schedule 12 to that Act. He has recognised those bodies, together with the Association of Authorised Public Accountants, as supervisory bodies for the purposes of part II of that Act.

Banks

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will propose legislation under which a bank's auditors would be prevented from acting as receivers of a bank's borrower.

Mr. Redwood: I have no such plans.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will propose legislation under which all banks in their annual report would be required to disclose the number of administrators and receivers which have been appointed by them.

Mr. Redwood: I have no such plans.

Company Directors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will propose legislation under which all increases in directors' pay and perks would be subject to a specific resolution at the annual general meeting.

Mr. Redwood: To subject directors' executive pay increases to a resolution of the company annual general meeting would be cumbersome and ineffective. At present the details of directors' service contracts over one year are, with some exceptions, required under the Companies Act 1985 to be made available for inspection by shareholders, who may ask questions or put forward resolutions at the annual general meeting. In addition, directors' service contracts for a period of five years or more are subject to approval by general meeting. This strikes a fair balance, in my view, between the need for the interests of the shareholder to be taken into account and flexibility in the recruitment of directors.

Ramor Investments

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether, further to his correspondence with the hon. Member for Great Grimsby, he will make a full statement to the House on his decision not to publish the final report on Ramor Investments.

Mr. Redwood: No.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the cost of completing his Department's investigations into Ramor Investments.

Mr. Redwood: The total of the investigation into the affairs of Ramor Investments Limited was £760,301.

River Pollution

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any proposals for legislation under which all public limited companies will have to publish the level of their discharges and emissions into rivers and air.

Mr. Leigh: No. Under the Water Act 1989, monitoring data obtained from consented discharges are already entered on to public registers maintained by the National Rivers Authority. Similarly, under the Environmental Protection Act 1990, monitoring data on processes authorised under the integrated pollution control and local authority air pollution control systems are entered on to public registers maintained by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and by local authorities.

Warren Spring Laboratory

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the research of the Warren Spring laboratory into chemical separation procedures in the treatment of solid and liquid hazardous wastes.

Mr. Leigh: Warren Spring laboratory is investigating the extent to which a range of chemical separation procedures can be applied to the treatment of solid and liquid hazardous wastes. The procedures are being applied to detoxify dangerous mixtures, and to remove materials (especially metals) from wastes where it is economically feasible or environmentally desirable to do so.

Chemical separation procedures form part of Warren Spring's contaminated land research programme. The procedures can also have "cleaner" technology applications. Warren Spring has recently devised a new process for a private sector client for removing hazardous cadmium from phosphoric acid and the manufacture of fertilisers.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the research of the Warren Spring laboratory into the use of X-ray fluorescence for monitoring pyrometallurgical processes.

Mr. Leigh: The X-ray fluorescence (XRF) project was funded jointly by the Minerals Industry Research Organisation and the Department of Trade and Industry. The equipment research and development phase was successfully completed at Warren Spring laboratory in 1989, and the instrument has subsequently been patented.

The XRF instrument enables "real time" monitoring of high temperature and corrosive gas streams for elements above sulphur in atomic weight (ie most acid gas elements and all base and heavy metals). It has potential applications for controlling a wide range of thermal processes both inside and outside the metals industry, and for monitoring emissions for compliance with regulatory standards.

The XRF instrument is currently being applied at Warren Spring to research projects into the thermal treatment of a variety of wastes and to "demonstration" test work in the metals industry in the United Kingdom and overseas.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the progress of the research by the Warren Spring laboratory into the physical and bacterial techniques for separating pyritic coal, prior to combustion.

Mr. Leigh: Initial investigations at Warren Spring Laboratory into the removal of pyritic sulphur from coal prior to combustion were carried out in the mid-1980s under funding from the Department of Trade and Industry, the Department of Energy, and Industry. Earlier this year funding was obtained from the European Coal and Steel Commission (ECSC) and the Department of Energy's energy technology support unit (ETSU) for further research into physical separation.

Bacterial removal of pyritic sulphur has been investigated at Warren Spring as part of a recently-completed European Community collaborative project, with additional funding from the Department of Trade and Industry. Promising initial results have resulted in a further EC project designed to test the process at pilot scale. ETSU is providing the additional funding to meet Warren Spring's costs. ETSU is also supporting parallel work at the Laboratory to assess the bacterial process for a range of different United Kingdom coals.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the major public sector projects in the Warren Spring laboratory's programme.

Mr. Leigh: Major public sector projects at Warren Spring laboratory for 1991-92 are as follows:

Department of the Environment

air pollution programme (principally monitoring, measurement and abatement); waste management (principally technologies for waste recycling, waste treatment and contaminated land treatment);

technical and administrative support for the DOE part of the environment technology innovation support (ETIS) scheme.

Department of Trade and Industry

environmental programme (principally DTI Environment inquiry point and recycling advisory unit, airborne pollution measurement protocols for the national measurement system, safety and environmental aspects of bioprocessing and studies of waste segregation systems, volatile organic compound emissions and aircraft emissions);

non-environmental process technology programme (projects jointly funded by DTI and industry);

Department of Transport

The marine pollution programme covers monitoring and modelling oil and chemical spills at sea, techniques for handling spills at sea and on beaches, and incident response support.

A separate programme is looking at exhaust emissions from light duty vehicles.

Department of Energy

The programme includes projects on coal desulphurisation and refuse derived fuel.

Scottish Environment Department

The programme covers sampling of industrial emissions and other services to Her Majesty's industrial pollution inspectorate.

Health and Safety Executive

The programme comprises projects on work place emissions of hazardous substances and heavy gas dispersion.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the work of the Warren Spring laboratory on the thermal processing of waste.

Mr. Leigh: Following research at Warren Spring laboratory into characterising waste fuels, supported mainly by the Department of Trade and Industry and the Department of Energy's energy technology support unit (ETSU), projects are currently underway for ETSU and the private sector.

The focus of current research at Warren Spring is on the "cleaner" technology approach (controlling waste input characteristics and the thermal process to prevent pollutants from entering the waste stream) to complement the "end of pipe" approach (cleaning the flue gases). This work includes gasification methods to produce more flexible and higher value fuel from solid wastes (e.g. for use in gas turbines), with a view to increasing the conversion efficiency of waste fuels for power generation.

Warren Spring's work in this area includes separate contracts for ETSU, the Department of the Environment, Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, local authorities and the private sector for monitoring the performance and emissions from both waste fuel and non-waste fuel combustion plants.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will make a statement on the progress of research by the Warren Spring laboratory into mineral processing techniques which may be applicable to the treatment of contaminated land;

(2) if he will make a statement on the outcome of the research by the Warren Spring laboratory on the development of soil cleaning techniques and its application to contaminated land.

Mr. Leigh: Warren Spring laboratory currently has three main research programmes for investigating soil cleaning techniques and their applicability to contaminated land.

The largest programme is for the Department of the Environment. The emphasis of the experimental programme is to develop the concept of process integration, based on soil fractionation and using one waste to treat another in biological systems. The fractionation work focuses on the application of a range of mineral and waste processing technologies to produce contaminant concentrates for further treatment.

Under the United States Environmental Protection Agency's emerging technologies program, Warren Spring is investigating the application of several mineral processing techniques for removing contaminants from soil, with particular emphasis on flotation, flocculation and magnetic separation techniques.

Under the European Community's science and technology for environmental protection (STEP) programme, Warren Spring is investigating with partners from Germany, the Netherlands and Norway the biological removal of metals from solid wastes and contaminated soils.

All three programmes are scheduled to run from 1991 to 1993. A technical appraisal report under the DoE programme reviewing contaminated soil clean-up processes is due to be published early in 1992. The other two programmes have been agreed only recently but it is intended that the results should be published for take-up by industry.

In order to carry out these programmes it has been necessary for Warren Spring to adapt and upgrade a range of facilities at the laboratory, including the mineral processing pilot plant. As a result, Warren Spring is now able to offer an extensive range of experimental and treatment facilities for use by both the public and private sectors in the cleaning of contaminated land and the treatment of bulky hazardous wastes.

Auditors and Accountants

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many chartered accountants and auditors have now registered under the Companies Act 1989.

Mr. Redwood: At 15 November, some 24,000 individuals were registered with supervisory bodies under the Companies Act 1989 as being eligible for appointment as company auditors or responsible for company audit work on behalf of registered audit firms.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many countries are currently off cover for the Export Credits Guarantee Department; and what percentage of the world's population this represents.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Export Credits Guarantee Department currently offers some credit insurance cover for all but three countries. The population of these countries represents 0·587 per cent. of the global total (World Bank Atlas 1990).

Export Intelligence Service

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he is making additional provision for information developed by Her Majesty's overseas posts about export opportunities to be made available to British industry in light of the insolvency of the Export intelligence service.

Mr. Sainsbury: Cable and Wireless plc have taken over from Export Opportunities Ltd. the contract to match and distribute business opportunities from the Export Intelligence database, and there has been no break in the service to subscribers. I understand that the liquidator of Trade Network International Ltd. is seeking a buyer for the Export Network business under which its customers can search information on-line including that in Export Intelligence. My Department's other contract with Financial Times Profile to provide on-line access is unaffected.

Life Insurance

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to make consumers aware of the limitations of life insurance companies liability for their tied intermediaries.

Mr. Redwood: These are matters for the Securities and Investments Board (SIB) and the other regulatory authorities under the Financial Services Act. LAUTRO (Life Assurance and Unit Trust Regulatory Organisation) has recently introduced new rules in this area. Also, the SIB are currently undertaking a major review of the regulation of the retail investment sector.

Investors' Compensation Scheme

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has asked the investors' compensation scheme to pay interest on compensation payments paid more than 12 months away from the date of compensation assessment.

Mr. Redwood: The rules of the investors compensation scheme are a matter for the Securities and Investments Board.

Money Advice Services

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plan to increase the money allocated through his Department to money advice services.

Mr. Leigh: My Department does not provide funds specifically for money advice services and has no plans to do so. The main provider of money advice nationally is the citizens' advice service which through the network of citizens' advice bureaux advises on debt problems as part of its general advisory work. Individual bureaux are funded mainly by local authorities. My Department funds the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux and Citizens Advice Scotland which provide the support services to the local bureaux. Total DTI grant-in-aid in 1991-92 to NACAB and CAS will be about £12 million.

Many lending institutions have already provided funds to support money advice services: the Government would like to see more following that lead.

Investment Services Directive

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make a statement on progress in negotiations on the proposed investment services directive at the Council of Economic and Finance Ministers which met on 11 November.

Mr. Redwood: The Council of Economic and Finance Ministers (ECOFIN) which met on 11 November did not discuss the Investment Services Directive. The Netherlands are currently considering whether to hold further meetings on the outstanding issues of principle during their presidency but they have not said when the directive will next be discussed in ECOFIN.

VAT

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action has been taken by the Government to ensure that Greece complies with the judgment of the European Court of Justice concerning discriminatory VAT rates within the alcoholic beverage sector.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 18 November 1991]: It is for the European Commission to ensure that Greece complies with European Court of Justice judgments.

I have, however, asked my single market compliance unit to liaise with Customs and Excise and our embassy in Athens and monitor compliance by Greece so that, should there be any evidence of non-compliance, the United Kingdom will bring this to the notice of the European Commission.

Retail Regulation

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received on the Securities and Investments Board's review of retail regulation.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 21 November 1991]: The review is a matter for the SIB in the first instance. I have received a number of representations which have been passed to the board.

Financial Institutions

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what plans he has to prevent financial institutions offering both an independent advice service on financial products and a tied advice service;

(2) what plans he has to disbar the banks and other financial institutions from operating dual status with regard to advice on financial services.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 21 November 1991]: This is a matter for SIB and the other regulatory bodies under the Financial Services Act.

Textile Industry

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he has taken to ensure that the east midlands is included in the EC's Retex scheme for financial assistance to areas where the textile industry has been in decline.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 19 November 1991]: The Commission has made a preliminary announcement about this proposed scheme but details have yet to be made available to member states including the criteria for selecting eligible areas and the likely allocation of funds to the United Kingdom. The Government will naturally seek to ensure the maximum effective coverage within the United Kingdom.

Earnings

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will propose legislation under which all public limited companies would be required to reveal the number of employees who earn less than 50 per cent. of the median male wage.

Mr. Forth: I have been asked to reply.
No.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will propose legislation under which companies would be required to give details of the number of employees earning less than 50 per cent. of the male median salary in the United Kingdom;

(2) if he will propose legislation under which companies would be required to publish the number of employees earning wages less that £193 per week.

Mr. Forth: I have been asked to reply.
No.

DEFENCE

Diving Forces

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the bases of the Royal Naval Reserve port diving branch, giving numbers of officers, qualified divers, trainees and other personnel at each base.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The present strength of Royal Naval Reserve bases with port divers is:

	Officers	Ratings
HMS Calliope	77 (1)	202 (16)
HMS Calpe	23(0)	67 (7)
HMS Camperdown	102 (0)	129 (9)
HMS Claverhouse	98 (1)	188 (16)
HMS Eaglet	136 (2)	299 (25)
HMS Flying Fox	138 (0)	213 (18)
HMS Graham	95 (2)	213 (16)
HMS President	234 (0)	234 (17)
HMS Sussex	90 (1)	150 (18)
HMS Wessex	170 (2)	209 (11)

The figures in brackets are those officers and ratings who are Royal Naval Reserve port divers; each unit has two or three trainees at any time.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the police forces and other public services which have received assistance from Royal Naval Reserve port divers during the last five years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the distinction between the training, role and costs of the different diving branches of the Royal Naval Reserve.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the plans for the future of the Royal Naval Reserve port diving branch, and on the implications of those plans for Royal Navy regular diving units.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that he received from my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement on 21 October at column 446. There are no implications for the Royal Navy regular diving units.

Housing (ex-service Personnel)

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what communications he has had with (a) Colchester borough council and (b) Westminster city council regarding their housing allocations policy and its effect on ex-service personnel.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

RAF Germany

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the planned percentage increase in the capability of RAF Germany over the next four years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Rapid Reaction Corps

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his Norwegian and Danish counterparts regarding the deployment of British units of the Rapid Reaction Corps on operational tours of duty in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

Garvie Island

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what exercises have been carried out on Garvie island in the last month; and how many times in the last two years exercises have been carried out on Garvie island at the weekend.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Garvie island range has been in use on 11 occasions over the last month and on two Saturdays during the past two years. Specific details are as follows:

Date	Activity
Use of Garvie island over the last month
8 October	Aircraft bombing exercise
29 October	Aircraft bombing exercise

Date	Activity
30 October	Aircraft bombing exercise
5 November	Aircraft bombing exercise
8 November	Aircraft bombing exercise
14 November	Offshore naval gunfire exercise
15 November	Offshore naval gunfire exercise
16 November	Offshore naval gunfire exercise
18 November	Offshore naval gunfire exercise
19 November	Offshore naval gunfire exercise
20 November	Offshore naval gunfire exercise
Use of Garvie island at weekends over past two years
2 February 1991	Aircraft bombing exercise
28 September 1991	Aircraft bombing exercise

United States Air Force

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what exercises the United States Air Force have conducted in the United Kingdom in the last month.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Between 19 October and 19 November the United States Air Force has conducted one exercise in the United Kingdom. This took place between 28 and 31 October and involved aircraft from RAF Bentwaters carrying out a rehearsal for the NATO tactical evaluation of the base.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the United States Air Force has been involved in training in the United Kingdom for operations against Libya in the last month.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: United States Air Force aircraft carry out training in the United Kingdom on a regular basis. It is not our practice to comment on specific operational matters.

Defence Estate

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total maintenance backlog of (a) unavoidable and essential repairs and (b) urgent repairs on the Defence estate as of 1 April in each year since 1970.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write to the hon. Member.

Service Housing Task Force

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will publish the recommendations of the task force on service housing.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave the hon. Member for East Lothian (Mr. Home Robertson) on 5 November at column 96.

Married Quarters

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the names of the housing associations with which he is discussing making available service married quarters; and when he expects these discussions to be completed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It would be inappropriate to list the names of the housing associations while discussions are continuing. Announcements will be made when the discussions are complete.

1st Armoured Division

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which individual weapon systems will be used to measure the increase in capability of 1st Armoured Division.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The assessment is based on all weapon systems held by combat troops within the formation's order of battle.

Housing (Army Personnel)

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of the 5,000 Army personnel who have applied for voluntary redundancy have already made their own provision for housing.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Information on the private housing arrangements or plans of those Army personnel who have applied to be considered for redundancy is not held by the Ministry of Defence. We anticipate that many individuals will be using their special capital payments to help to purchase a home for the first time.

3rd (UK) Division

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the planned percentage increase in the capability of 3rd (UK) Division over the next four years.

Mr. Hamilton: As outlined in "Britain's Army for the 90s" (Cm. 1595), 3rd (UK) Division will be a new formation comprising two mechanised brigades and 5th Airborne Brigade. There is therefore no basis for a comparison with any of the existing four divisions of BAOR.

Service Personnel (Deaths)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 19 November, Official Report, column 425, if full reports of boards of inquiries are made available to bereaved families on request after the deaths of service personnel.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. Next of kin are, however, provided—on request—with an accurate and objective summary of the report of the service inquiry.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answers of 19 November, Official Report, column 425, about deaths of service personnel, in what form the information requested is available; and if he will publish it in the Official Report.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not always the case that families request details of the deaths of service personnel, but in all cases in which they do, details, in the form of a specially prepared statement, are given. Records of all cases are not held centrally.

Admiral Sir Julian Oswald

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 19 November, what changes in practice have taken place since 29 October to prevent the information made available by Admiral Sir Julian Oswald in The Times being subsequently made available to hon. Members in parliamentary answers.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the answers that I gave the hon. Member on 14 November at columns 667-68 and 19 November at column 150.

Expenditure

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been (a) total defence expenditure, (b) expenditure on weaponry and (c) expenditure on nuclear weapons and nuclear powered weapons for the years 1979 to 1991 in real and constant prices.

Mr. Alan Clark: Figures detailing total defence expenditure for the period requested are published in the Eleventh report of the House of Commons Defence Committee on the Statement on the Defence Estimates. Expenditure on equipment and the nuclear strategic force can be found at tables 2.2 and 2.3 in volume 2 of the annual Statements on the Defence Estimates. It has been the policy of successive Governments not separately to identify expenditure on nuclear weapons.

Army Board

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the officers comprising the Army Board by rank, name, previous regiment or corps and present job.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Four members of the Army Board are serving officers:

General Sir John Chapple, late 2nd Gurkha Rifles,
Chief of the General Staff

General Sir David Ramsbotham, late Royal Green Jackets, Adjutant General

General Sir Edward Jones, late Royal Green Jackets, Quartermaster General

Lieutenant General A. S. J. Blacker, late Royal Tank Regiment, Master General of the Ordnance.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 25 November 1991

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Parliamentary Duties

32. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much time he has spent on parliamentary duties since he last answered oral questions.

Mr. Chris Patten: The parliamentary aspect of my official duties consists almost entirely of answering oral questions at the Dispatch Box. I have, however, answered six written questions since I last answered oral questions.

EC Issues

33. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what consideration he has given to European Community issues in his capacity as Chancellor of the Duchy.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Duchy has several historical links with Europe. For example our coat of arms incorporates the fleurs de lys, sanctioned by Edmund Crouchback on his marriage to the Queen of Nevarre. Today, however, there are no strong links—most have lapsed with the passing of time.

Official Duties

34. Mr. John Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he next proposes to visit the Duchy on official business.

35. Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he next plans to pay an official visit to the Duchy.

36. Mr. Hind: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he plans to next visit the Duchy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: I refer the hon. Gentleman and my hon. Friends to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike) earlier today.

Interest Rates

37. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessment he has made of the effect of falling interest rates on small and medium-sized businesses in the Duchy.

Mr. Chris Patten: I am sure that the fall in interest rates will be of enormous benefit to all businesses in the Duchy.

Taxation

38. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the impact of taxation on tenants of the Duchy.

Mr. Chris Patten: Like everyone else, Duchy tenants have gained tremendous benefits from the reductions in personal taxation brought about by successive Conservative Governments.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Home Repossessions

Mr. Battle: To ask the Attorney-General whether he will take steps to ensure that where repossession proceedings are taken in the county court, information on debt counselling and housing advice services will be sent out with the summons.

The Attorney-General: The Government are keen to ensure that defendants in county court possession proceedings are informed that counselling and advice is available to them.

Consultations are taking place with the major advice agencies in order to identify a method of compiling a list of advice agencies that may accompany every county court possession summons.

Serious Fraud Office

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Attorney-General what percentage of cases brought to court by the Serious Fraud Office have resulted in a successful conviction.

The Attorney-General: In the current year from 6 April 1991 there have been 14 concluded trials. Twenty-three defendants have been convicted and six acquitted—a conviction rate of nearly 80 per cent.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Attorney-General how many cases the Serious Fraud Office has brought to the courts in each year since its creation.

The Attorney-General: The figures are as follows:—

	Number
April 1988—April 1989	9
April 1989—April 1990	17
April 1990—April 1991	27
April 1991—to date	14

The numbers are based on cases that have been concluded in the court of trial during the relevant period. If currently unconcluded cases are added, the last figure becomes 19.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Performance-related Pay

39. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners, whether the Church Commissioners have considered replacing the minimum stipend by performance-related pay.

Mr. Alison: Stipends have traditionally been regarded as remuneration which enables clergy to pursue their ministry and support themselves and their families, rather than rewards or salaries for a job of work. In this sense, stipends are not competitive remuneration for which performance-related pay might be an appropriate mechanism.

The stipend levels of individual clergy are set by their dioceses within recommendations of the Commissioners, as central stipends authority.

WALES

Wages Statistics

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many employees in Wales are paid less than £3·40 an hour; and how many of these employees are (a) women, (b) part-time and (c) in manual occupations.

Mr. David Hunt: It is estimated that 185,000 employees in employment on adult rates whose pay was not affected by absence earned less than £3·40 per hour in April 1991; 147,000 were women, of whom 103,000 worked part-time. 102,000 persons were employed in manual occupations. Data for part-time male employees are not available.

Sources: April 1991 New Earnings Survey and Quarterly Estimate Series of Employment, March 1991; Employment Department.

Welsh Development Agency Bill

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received regarding the Welsh Development Agency Bill.

Mr. David Hunt: None.

Nebulisers

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place a copy in the Library of the guidance he has given to the Welsh health authorities concerning the supply of nebulisers free of charge and on long-term loan to those requiring them.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The NHS Act 1977 clearly sets out the responsibilities of district health authorities. Section 1 of the NHS Act 1977 requires that NHS services provided under the Act to NHS patients must be free of charge, except where the making and recovery of charges is expressly provided for by legislation. Later legislation, including the NHS and Community Care Act 1990, does not alter this position, nor does it enable partial charges to be made to health service patients. Health authorities are fully aware of the position which has recently been confirmed to them.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to effect refunds for those who have proof of payment for nebulisers prescribed by national health service consultants to national health service patients.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Our officials have asked Welsh district health authorities to examine their existing policies and practices for the provision of equipment, including nebulisers. In addition, authorities have been asked to investigate and report on individual cases involving nebulisers that have been notified and to consider appropriate action.

Pollution

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the levels of pollution from each incinerator operating in Wales; and to what extent they comply with EC legislation.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Information on levels of pollution from individual incinerators is not held centrally. Current emission limits and controls for waste incineration processes under 1 tonne per hour are set out in process guidance notes PG1-25/5(91) issued by the Secretaries of State for the Environment, for Scotland and for Wales and published by HMSO. Operators of incineration processes over 1 tonne per hour are subject to individual authorisation by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. Emission limits and other control standards are included in the specific authorisation documents. The only incinerators covered by EC legislation at the moment are municipal waste incinerators—and there are none of these in Wales.

Orimulsion

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what applications have been received by the Welsh Office to test-burn the imported fuel Orimulsion in Wales or to burn that fuel on a commercial basis.

Mr. David Hunt: No applications, in either category, have been received by the Welsh Office. The Secretary of State for Energy is currently considering an application from National Power to extend Pembroke power station to enable it to burn orimulsion. The company is also applying to Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution under the provisions of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 for authorisation to burn this fuel at Pembroke.

Health Service Statistics

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will obtain statistics showing the number of midwives, district nurses and health visitors practising within Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: As I indicated in my reply on 18 November, at column 34, to the hon. Gentleman's question on the number of midwives, district nurses and health visitors on 18 November, complete information on staff numbers is not available at present for occupational groups such as these. The Department is working with district health authorities to improve the information on the manpower information system from which detailed breakdowns of nursing and midwifery manpower are derived, and progress is being made. Once we are satisfied that the system is a fully reliable source of occupationally disaggregated information, such as numbers of midwives, district nurses and health visitors, such information will be made available.

Harbours

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the lengths of long-distance routes approved under the National Parks and Access to the Countryside Act 1949 which pass through harbours regulated under the Harbours Act 1964.

Sir Wyn Roberts: It is likely that parts of the Pembrokeshire coast path, which runs for 269 km between Amroth and Cardigan, pass through harbours regulated under the Harbours Act 1964. However, detailed information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest estimate of the amount of money owed in the poll tax in Wales in the last financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 17 October 1991, at columns 206-7. No further information is available.

Offloading Facilities

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what applications have been received by the Welsh Office to refurbish or extend existing facilities or to construct new facilities, for offloading from seagoing vessels (a) bulk oil, (b) natural gas, (c) liquified gas or (d) coal.

Mr. David Hunt: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Transport has under consideration no applications from harbour authorities in Wales seeking statutory authorisation by means of a harbour order under the Harbour Act 1964 to carry out such works which they do not otherwise have statutory powers to carry out under their local legislation.

ENERGY

Coal Reserves

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy to include estimates of United Kingdom coal reserves in the departmental Brown Book; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Under the terms of the Coal Industry Nationalisation Act 1946, British Coal is charged with the development of the coal-mining industry and it publishes estimates of total United Kingdom coal reserves in its annual report. My Department does not keep separate figures.

Onshore Petroleum Licensing

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement about further onshore petroleum licensing.

Mr. Moynihan: I have placed in the Libraries of both Houses the text of a notice, which will be published as soon as possible in the Official Gazette, inviting companies to apply for exploration licences in respect of unlicensed areas in Great Britain and certain near shore waters. The notice specifies that applications should be made on Wednesday 19 February, 1992. Application forms and guidance notes will be available from my Department.

I shall separately be inviting holders of production licences to apply to transfer exploration acreage within their existing licences to the new style exploration licences, subject to agreement being reached on a satisfactory work programme for the area.

Successful applicants will be offered exploration licences containing the conditions set out in the Petroleum (Production) (Landward Areas) Regulations 1991. The licences will grant rights for a term of six years and entitle the licensee to carry out seismic surveys and deep drilling subject to the need to obtain the requisite permission from the appropriate mineral planning authorities and land owners and occupiers.

Electricity

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his calculation of United Kingdom electricity consumption in each of the next five years; and if he will give his estimate of the generating capacities that will be available from (a) oil, (b) gas, (c) nuclear, (d) coal and (e) renewable sources.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My Department does not routinely forecast electricity consumption. That, and decisions on capacity and fuel choice, are the job of the electricity industry, taking into account the commercial and regulatory environment. When specific needs arise, projections are produced, as, for example, in the UK's submission to the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, which was published as energy paper 58 and is available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects nuclear fusion to be commercially viable for the generation of electricity.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Nuclear fusion is unlikely to be available as an energy source before 2050 at the earliest. Even if fusion were technically available at that date, its economic prospects are uncertain.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police Records

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many national indexes are held by the police or his Department, other than those relating to drugs and football hooliganism.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Department holds the following national indexes (including all national police indexes):

Prison service

Inmate information system (a national register of prison inmates)[1]

Category A prisoners[1]

Life sentence prisoner index[1]

Immigration service

Suspect index (contains details of people whom it is considered essential to identify at the ports because, for example, they have been deported or are involved in criminal activity, or because they have an adverse immigration history)

Port precautions index (used in embarkation control to assist in prevention of children being removed in contravention of a court order or against the wishes of one parent)

Intelligence unit index (contains details of people known or suspected of abuses of the immigration laws and details of suspect documents. It also includes details of people refused leave to enter or refused entry clearance)

Police department

Criminal names index (index to the criminal records)

Index to the national fingerprint collection

Wanted/missing persons index

Disqualified drivers index

Vehicle owners index

Vehicles reports index (stolen, suspect vehicles)

Stolen property index (mainly plant, vehicles)

Obscene publications squad index (persons convicted of offences under the Obscene Publications Act 1959, the Protection of Children Act 1978, the Criminal Justice Act 1988, the Sexual Offences Act 1956 and the Customs Consolidation Act 1876. The index also includes information regarding persons suspected of being associated with child pornography. The index is held by the Metropolitan police)

Animal rights national index (collates and disseminates information on animal rights extremism)

Statistical department

Offenders index[1] (record of offenders convicted of standard list offences recorded since 1963)

Homicide index (a record of each case of reported homicide)

Probation index[1] (persons subject to supervision by the probation service—including those subject to community service orders)

Mentally disordered offenders index[1] (a record of persons in psychiatric hospitals who are subject to hospital orders with restrictions on discharge or who have been transferred from prison service establishments)

United Kingdom Passport agency

United Kingdom passports index (record of all passports issued by the United Kingdom passport offices and by Foreign and Commonwealth Office posts overseas)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the amount of money paid by way of compensation to ethnic origin members serving with the Metropolitan police force as a result of claims for racial abuse and harassment from fellow police officers.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Since the beginning of 1990, £21,000 has been paid as compensation to ethnic minority officers in the Metropolitan police as a result of claims for racial abuse and harassment in respect of two cases.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussion he has had with the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to the allegations of racial abuse followed up by officers in the Metropolitan police force following the case of police constable Franklyn Asumah; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the commissioner that these matters are being investigated by the complaints unit.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the number of Metropolitan officers dismissed from the service in each of the last five years, for racial abuse to fellow officers.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There have been no Metropolitan police officers dismissed from the service in the last five years for racial abuse to fellow officers.

Neighbourhood Watch

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many neighbourhood watch schemes now operate in the East Staffordshire district in the Burton constituency.

Mr. John Patten: Information is not available in the form requested. I understand from the Staffordshire police that, in the Burton police subdivision, which includes East Staffordshire district, there were 73 neighbourhood watch schemes at the end of September 1991, covering nearly 17,000 households.

Police (Ethnic Origin)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of ethnic origin police officers (a) men and (b) women serving in each of the Metropolitan police divisions; and what ranks these officers hold.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is as follows:

Ethnic minority officers in the Metropolitan Police by area, broken down into rank and gender

Broadcasting

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he plans to exercise his powers under section 8(4) of the Broadcasting Act 1990 to amend rule 21 of the current code of advertising standards in order to fulfil the requirements of the European broadcasting directive—89/552/EEC—and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have no plans to amend the ITC code of advertising standards and practice. Rule 21 states that no advertisement may encourage behaviour prejudicial to the protection of the environment, in accordance with article 12(e) of the directive, and goes on to give guidance as to how this should be interpreted in practice.

Prison Statistics

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how expenditure in real terms on prisons has moved since 1980.

Mrs. Rumbold: Expenditure on prisons has increased from £744 million in 1980-81 in 1990-91 prices to £1,342 million in 1990-91, an increase of 80 per cent.

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners, who should have been held in prisons, were held in police cells in each week to date in 1991.

Mrs. Rumbold: The number of prisoners held in police cells in each week to date in 1991 are as follows:

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the ratios of (a) prison officers, (b) governor grades and (c) Prison Department civil servants to prisoners on 1 January and 1 July in each year since 1980.

Mrs. Rumbold: The available information is as follows:

	Officer inmate ratio	Establishments Governor grades inmate ratio	Other staff inmate ratio	Headquarters Total staff inmate ratio

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many hours were worked on average per inmate by (a) prison officers, (b) governor grades and (c) Prison Department civil servants in each year since 1985.

Mrs. Rumbold: Governors are an all hours worked grade and information about the actual number of hours worked by them during any particular period is not collected centrally. Similarly, no such information is available for the wide range of grades of staff who work in prison service headquarters. The average prison officer hours worked per inmate is as follows:

Prison officer hours worked on average per inmate: 1 April 1985 to 1991

	Hours
1 April 1985	20·35
1 April 1986	20·34
1 April 1987	19·76
1 April 1988	17·30
1 April 1989	18·08
1 April 1990	18·69
1 April 1991	19·72

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many industrial disputes there are at present in the prison service.

Mrs. Rumbold: On 22 November there were registered disputes at 36 of Her Majesty's prisons. Some of these disputes cover more than one issue.

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current estimate of (a) prisoner numbers and (b) the total certified normal accommodation in the prison estate for each year to 1997.

Mrs. Rumbold: On the basis of projections made at the beginning of this year, the projected population and certified normal accommodation (CNA) for prison service establishments in England and Wales in each financial year to 1996-97 were as follows:

	Population	CNA
1992-93	45,669	49,114
1993-94	45,836	50,862
1994-95	46,932	51,676
1995-96	48,587	51,850
1996-97	50,262	51,727

The actual prison population is already 1,500 in excess of the figure projected for 1992-93. Until the end of 1994 there will also be temporary reductions in the capacities of those establishments where access is being provided to night sanitation.

Prison population projections in calendar year form are published in the Home Office Statistical Bulletin, "Projections of long-term trends in the prison population to 1999" issue 10/91, a copy of which is in the Library.

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the monetary value of the food allowance for prisoners has been in real terms in each year since 1980.

Mrs. Rumbold: The estimated average cost, per prisoner per week (at September 1991 prices), of the normal dietary scales for the 12 months ending in September, 1983-91 was:

Year[1]	Current value[2 3] £
1983	7·22
1984	7·75
1985	7·61
1986	7·25
1987	7·17
1988	7·06
1989	6·91
1990	[4]7·00
1991	[4]6·59

Notes:

[1]Information for the years prior to 1983 is not available.

[2]At September 1991 prices. Values adjusted using the retail prices index for all food items.

[3]The values include the estimated notional value at published farm gate prices of goods produced on prison farms and gardens.

[4]From January 1990, salad items, culinary adjuncts, special provision for prisoners attending court and for medical diets and supplements for dispersal prisons and for Christmas extras have been excluded from the costings. Figures strictly comparable with those for earlier years are not available.

Improved purchasing has led to steadily reduced costs since 1985 for a basically unchanged dietary scale.

Young Offenders

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many young offenders were transferred from Hewell Grange to the young offender institution at Prescoed (Usk) during September 1991.

Mrs. Rumbold: Ten.

Immigration

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what investigations are taking place into the circumstances in which the United States citizen Mr. Fred Leuchter entered the United Kingdom after being barred from entry on the ground that his presence could not be conducive to the public good, and into the role of Mr. David Irving in procuring his entry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Investigations have shown that Mr. Leuchter was admitted entirely inadvertently. Steps have been taken to avoid a recurrence. He was returned overseas on 16 November.

Dangerous Dogs

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he proposes to take in respect of those pit bull terrier owners who have been unable to arrange for their dogs to be tattooed by 30 November, in compliance with the requirements of the exemption scheme set up under section 1 of the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: One of the requirements of the exemption scheme set up under section 1 of the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991 was that the owners of dogs covered by section 1 should have them permanently marked.

We are aware that there are a number of owners of such dogs, including pit bull terriers, who have been unable to arrange for their dogs to be tattooed by 30 November. It is wrong that those owners who in other respects have taken positive steps to abide by the requirements of the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991 should not have the opportunity to obtain a certificate of exemption.

My right hon. Friend has therefore laid the Dangerous Dogs Act Compensation and Exemption Schemes (Amendment) (No. 2) Order 1991 which comes into force today, which gives owners of exempted specially controlled dogs until 1 March 1992 to arrange for their dogs to be tattooed in the approved manner. Certificates of exemption will be issued to owners who have not been able to arrange for their dog to be tattooed with a requirement that the dog is tattooed before 1 March 1992, provided that they have complied with the other requirements of the exemption scheme. If an owner has not provided the index of exempted dogs with satisfactory evidence by 1 March 1992 to show that his dog has been tattooed, the certificate will lapse, the owner will be liable to prosecution and the dog may be seized and destroyed.

The new order does not change the position for owners who did not notify the police by 12 October of their wish to have their dogs exempted from the provisions of section 1(3) of the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991, or who have not met other conditions of the certificate of exemption. Those who are in possession of dogs to which section 1 of the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991 applies who have not complied with the requirements of the law by having their dogs exempted will after 30 November be liable to prosecution.

ENVIRONMENT

SSAs

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce his standard spending assessments for local authorities.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend expects to make an announcement shortly.

Utting Report

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take action to increase to above the national average the standard spending assessment formula for Staffordshire county council to take account of the problems highlighted by pindown and the Utting report.

Mr. Key: The standard spending assessment measures the appropriate cost of providing a standard level of service. It is calculated by means of a formula based on each local authority's demographic, social and geographic characteristics. The personal social services element of the formula is applied in the same way to all social services authorities. It would not be appropriate to apply a different approach to the assessment for any individual authority.

Homelessness

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department has taken any census of the homeless in Leeds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: My Department has not undertaken a census of homeless people in Leeds. Responsibility for dealing with households accepted as homeless under part III of the Housing Act 1985 rests with local authorities; I understand that Leeds city council accepted 427 households as homeless in the quarter ending June 1991.

A count of rough sleepers was made as part of the census on the night of 21-22 April 1991; 21 people were counted in Leeds. A copy of the "1991 Census: Supplementary Monitor of People Sleeping Rough", published by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys on 9 July 1991, has been placed in the Library.

Beaches

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessments his Department has undertaken of progress achieved towards meeting the EC directives on cleaning up beaches by 1992.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Fulham (Mr. Carrington) on 12 November at columns 465-66.

Housing Organisations

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward legislation to create a legal and financial framework appropriate to consumer owned and controlled housing organisations.

Mr. Yeo: A suitable framework is already in place for the promotion and support of ownership co-operatives. Grants are available from the Housing Corporation to assist their development and capital support is provided to registered co-operatives through the Housing Corporation's approved development programme. The Corporation is currently developing a comprehensive new strategy for tenant participation in the housing association sector to include both ownership and management options. Tenant management initiatives in local authority housing are promoted by the Department through an enhanced grant programme.

Environmental Protection Act

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many commencement orders have been issued to date, pursuant to the Environmental Protection Act 1990; and for what sections of the Act they have been applicable.

Mr. Baldry: Nine. They are as follows:

Sections 128 to 139 (save for the amendments made by ss, 128, 130 and 132), 89(7) to (9) and (11) to (13), 105 (partially), 3, 1, 2, 4 to 28, 100 to 104, 105 (partially), 159 and 162(2) (partially), 86(2), (6) to (8), (11), (14) and (15); 88(5), (7) and (9)(b), 89(4), 90(1), (2) and (7), 94(1) and (2) and 96(2) and (3) and 162(1) (partially), sections 86(1), (4), (5), (9) and (13); 87(1), (2) (3)(a) to (e) and (4) to (6), 88(1) to (4), (6), (8), (9)(a) and (c) to (e) and (10); 98(1), (2) (5) and (6) (England and Wales only).

The amendments made by sections 128, 130, and 132, 162(2) (partially), 86(3) and (10), 87(7), 89(1)(a) to (f), (2), (3), (5), (6), (10) and (14), 91(1)(a) to (f), (2) to (13), 92(1)(a) to (c), (2) to (10), 93, 94(3) to (9), 95, 96(1), 98(3) and (4), 106(4) and (5), 107(8), 108(1)(b), (3)(b), (5), (7) and (9), 111(1), (2), (4), (5), (7) and (11), 113, 114(1) to (3), 115(4), 122(1) (partially) and (4), 123(7) and (9), 124 to 126, 156, 158, 162(1) and (2) (partially);

Sections 86(1), (4) (5) and (13), 87(1), (2), (3)(a) to (e) and (4) to (6), 88(1) to (4), (6), (8) (9)(a), (c) and (d) and (10) and 98(1), (5) and (6) (Scotland only).

Sections 29 to 32, 50, 51, 60 (partially), 68, 71, 72, 75, 77, 147, 162(1) and (2) (partially), 86(12), 87(3)(f), 89(1)(g), 90(3) to (6), 91(1)(g) and 92(1)(d), 152 and 49.

Housing Action Trusts

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether council employees working in Liverpool's direct labour organisation will be allowed to submit competitive tenders for forthcoming HATS projects.

Mr. Key: No. Under section 1 of the Local Authorities (Goods and Services) Act 1970 local authorities may only enter into agreements with designated public bodies to supply goods, professional services and maintainance work of a minor nature. Although section 89 of the Housing Act 1988 does designate HATS as public bodies for the purposes of the 1970 Act, Liverpool's direct labour organisation would not be able to submit tenders for the major works contracts to be conducted under the HATS projects.

Harbours Act 1964

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the lengths of long distance routes approved under the National Parks and Access to the Countryside Act 1949 which pass through harbours regulated under the Harbours Act 1964.

Mr. Baldry: The majority of long distance paths start or follow significant lengths of the English coast. Some will pass through harbours regulated under the Harbours Act 1964. However, precise information in the form requested is not held centrally and cannot be obtained except at disproportionate cost.

Air Pollution

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the level of actual applications by local authorities for authorisations under the Environmental Protection Act 1990 Air Pollution Regulations; and what estimate his Department has made of the number of applications which should have been made to date.

Mr. Baldry: My Department has not yet received all the quarterly returns for July, August and September from local authorities enforcing part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. The figures for the first quarter (April, May and June) were 18 applications for new processes and 70 applications for existing processes. My Department estimated that the first block of processes due to apply for authorisation in the six months ending 30 September would comprise 4,600 to 4,800 processes as well as between 2,000 and 15,000 waste oil burners. It was only to be expected that the great bulk of applications would be received towards the end of this period.

Council House Sales

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest estimate of funds generated from capital receipts obtained through the sale of council houses; and whether he will now allow local authorities to use these receipts for reinvestment in new construction projects.

Mr. Yeo: The capital value (net of discount) of sales of dwellings by local authorities in England between April 1979 and June 1991 amounted to nearly £18 billion.

Since 1 April 1990 local authorities have been free to use 25 per cent. of the receipts from the sale of council dwellings for new capital investment. However, our general policy is to encourage the private sector, including housing associations, rather than local authorities to be the provider of new subsidised housing.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how he proposes to allocate resources in 1992-93 for waste disposal from within the local authority other services block.

Mr. Heseltine: I have decided that more investment in waste disposal facilities is needed so as to improve environmental standards. However, this cannot be achieved because local authority investment is necessarily restricted by public expenditure considerations. I have therefore decided that in future, investment in new facilities or major improvements in existing facilities will be drawn from the private sector unless there are overwhelming arguments to the contrary. To bring into effect these arrangements, I have decided that all capital expenditure resources for waste disposal within the other services block should be allocated by way of supplementary credit approvals (SCAs). These are divided between four main programmes as follows:

	1992-93 £ million
Landfill gas/contaminated land	25
Recycling	15
Incinerators	10
Waste disposal (main progamme)	50
TOTAL	100

Furthermore, I have decided that in line with the Government's policy of increasing the role of the private sector in the disposal of municipal waste, main programme waste disposal schemes, and incinerators, will be considered for supplementary credit approvals only if they fall within the following categories:

(a) expenditure which is contractually committed on 25 November 1991;

(b) works necessary to make good and maintain sites and facilities which will not be transferred to the private sector;

(c) essential works necessary to keep sites and facilities operational until they can be transferred to the private sector, or until alternative private sector sites and facilities can be provided;

(d) investment in existing sites and facilities for which the authority have been unable to attract private sector investment, or secure satisfactory alternative provision from the private sector;

(e) expenditure related to authorities' regulatory functions.

These criteria do not affect the requirement under the Environmental Protection Act 1990 for authorities to devolve operational control to a Local Authority Waste Disposal Company (LAWDC), joint venture, or private company.

My Department will be writing to waste disposal authorities to let them know the detailed arrangements under which these SCAs will be allocated.

The scope of the current programme of SCAs for landfill gas has been extended to include work on land contaminated by other pollutants.

Local Government Commission

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to consult local government about the guidance he proposes to issue to the Local Government Commission to be set up under the Local Government Finance Bill.

Mr. Portillo: I have issued to the local authority associations and other organisations with an interest, a paper on the guidance we propose to issue to the new Local Government Commission. Copies have been placed in the Library and additional copies are available in the Vote Office.

Faslane Incident

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will conduct an investigation into the incident at Faslane in which a constituent of the hon. Member for Renfrew, West and Inverclyde was attacked by an unknown assailant during the course of his work as a security guard; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have been asked to reply.

I understand that the incident in question relates to an altercation between two security guards employed by a private firm working at a contractor's site at the Royal Navy armaments depot, Coulport. The matter has been investigated by the MOD police and I am satisfied that no breach of security has occurred.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Economic Growth

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the average United Kingdom rate of economic growth since 1973 with comparable data for the previous decade, together with figures for manufacturing output, manufacturing employment and unemployment, and the levels of the real exchange rate in terms of relative export prices.

Mr. Mellor: Most of the information can be derived from data available on the Central Statistical Office's database as series CAOP—gross domestic product at constant factor cost; DVIS—index of the output of manufacturing industries; DYAW—employees in manufacturing industries; BCJD—United Kingdom unemployment total, seasonally adjusted; and BQHM—relative export unit value index.

Data in respect of manufacturing employment and unemployment are available from this source only from 1971. Data for earlier years are available in "British Labour Statistics Historical Abstract 1886-1968" and in "British Labour Statistics Year Books" for 1969 and 1970.

Copies of these publications are available in the Library of the House.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what estimates he has of the increased yield in VAT in 1992-93 as a result of the change he announced on 21 October for the payment of VAT by larger businesses from a quarterly payment system to a monthly system;

(2) what estimates he has of the reduction in yield from VAT in 1992-93 as a result of the change he announced on 21 October 1991 in the collection of VAT on imported goods to the system of postponed accounting.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Moving the larger VAT payers from quartely to monthly reporting in the autumn of 1992 will create an estimated once-off cash flow gain to the Exchequer in 1992-93 of about £1½ billion, although the precise effect is difficult to predict since it will depend on larger payers' tax liabilities in 1992-93.

Requiring traders to account for VAT on EC imports on their normal domestic VAT return from 1 January 1993, instead of monthly at importation as at present, will subsequently produce a once-off cash flow loss to the Exchequer in 1992-93 of about £1½ billion. Again, the precise effect is uncertain as it will depend on the pattern and terms of trade in 1992-93.

Had the Government introduced postponed accounting for EC imports in isolation the cash flow loss to the Exchequer in 1992-93 would have been about £2 billion. The cost would be more because all the VAT on imports would be paid quarterly, but the effect of introducing monthly returns first is that some VAT on imports—that of the largest payers—is paid monthly, rather than quarterly, under postponed accounting.

Credit

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what was the volume of outstanding credit granted by Finance Houses Association members to consumers in 1989 and 1990;

(2) what percentage of non-mortgage outstanding credit was accounted for by credit cards in 1989 and 1990; and what are the estimated percentage figures for the current year.

Mr. Maples: Information about credit advanced by members of the Finance Houses Association is not available from official statistics, but I understand the figures are published in the Finance Houses Association annual report 1991, a copy of which is in the Library.

The percentages of non-mortgage outstanding credit to consumers accounted for by bank credit cards were 14·4 and 16·6 at the end of 1989 and 1990 respectively. The latest available figures show that at the end of the third quarter of 1991 the percentage was 17·6 per cent. Information about credit on non-bank credit cards is not available.

EC Member States

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the national income, 60 per cent. of that figure and the Government debt of each member state in the EC, indicating the differences in accounting treatment where relevant.

Mr. Maples: For data on the national income of each member state in the EC, I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to him on 12 November 1991, at columns 506-7.

Data for the level of Government debt are not yet available on a comparable basis for all EC member states. Following are estimates of the ratio of general Government gross debt, valued in nominal terms, to GDP as at 31 December 1989.

Savings Ratio

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the level of the savings ratio in 1989 and 1990; and what is the estimated level for the current year.

Mr. Maples: The personal sector's savings ratio was 7·1 per cent. in 1989 and 9·2 per cent. in 1990. During the first half of 1991 it averaged 10·5 per cent.

Council Tax

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the average income of householders in each of the proposed council tax bands, and of the ratio of the average income level in the top band to those in (a) the middle and (b) the lowest band.

Mr. Maude: None.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of average earnings is paid in taxation, including income tax, indirect taxes and national insurance contributions, for the average householder in (a) the lowest, (b) the middle and (c) the highest of the proposed council tax bands.

Mr. Maude: No such estimates of taxes paid are available.

Illegal Arms Transfers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on how many occasions since the Criminal Justice (International Co-operation) Act 1990 came into force its powers have been invoked to work with foreign customs services to intercept illegal arms or military equipment transfers; what has been the cost to date of implementing the Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 21 November 1991]: Three requests which are arms related have been received by HM Customs. The directly identifiable costs to Customs of handling these requests has been approximately £45,000.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

BBC World Services

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those countries to which the BBC external services broadcast.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The BBC World Service in English is broadcast throughout the world. Broadcasts are also made to relevant countries in the following 35 languages:

Arabic, Russian, Spanish (for Latin America), Polish, Mandarin, Cantonese, French, German, Czech, Slovak, Hungarian, Romanian, Portuguese, Hindi, Persian, Bulgarian, Turkish, Serbian, Croatian, Greek, Indonesian, Urdu, Bengali, Hausa, Swahili, Vietnamese, Finnish, Burmese, Pashto, Somali, Thai, Slovene, Tamil, Nepali, Sinhala.

Democratic People's Republic of Korea

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's planned relations with the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns), on 16 October at column 156.

Gibraltar

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how the interests of Gibraltar are represented within the European Community and the European Parliament.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Gibraltar's interests are represented by the British Government in the European Community. In the European Parliament there is an informal arrangement whereby a number of British MEPs take a close and active interest in Gibraltar.

Ethiopia

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of Ethiopia towards good government.

Mrs. Chalker: A broad-based transitional Government was formed in August. Elections to a new national assembly are due within two years. Her Majesty's Government welcome the transitional Government's commitment to respect for human rights, democracy and the liberalisation of the largely state-controlled economy inherited from the Mengistu regime.

Kenya

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Government of Kenya following the arrest of 20 leading Opposition leaders on 15 November.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer my hon. Friend to the replies I gave the hon. Members for Norwood (Mr. Fraser) on 22 November, at column 323, and for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett) on 20 November, at column 266.

Mozambique

Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will cease providing military aid to Mozambique.

Mrs. Chalker: No.

PRIME MINISTER

EC Foreign Policy

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to reject any proposal for a common EC foreign policy or for foreign policy co-ordination which would impinge on the United Kingdom's relations with other Commonwealth countries or restrict the right of the United Kingdom to work with other Commonwealth countries on any matter of Commonwealth concern.

The Prime Minister: We shall not accept any treaty text which would impair our ability to maintain and develop our relations with other Commonwealth countries.

Livestock Premiums

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to ensure that the Scottish Office, Welsh Office and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food co-ordinate the payment of livestock premiums so that all farmers in Great Britain receive payments at the same time.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food announced on 14 May that it was hoped to pay the majority of first advances under the sheep annual premium scheme no later than early autumn. This target was comfortably achieved in all parts of the United Kingdom. Payment of the second advance is already under way. Each agriculture department aims to make payments under the livestock schemes as quickly as possible. Producers' interests would not be best served by co-ordinating payments in the way suggested.

Traffic, Parliament Square

Mr. Soley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the reasons why all traffic was stopped from entering Parliament square at 15.05 hours on 19 November.

The Prime Minister: The management of traffic in London is an operational matter for the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis. I understand however that traffic in Parliament square was held up for a short period at 15.05 hours on 19 November to facilitate the passage of the President of Hungary to the Palace of Westminster.

Homelessness

Mr. Battle: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to co-ordinate the activities of the Department of the Environment in dealing with homeless people and the activities of the Resettlement Agency in funding replacement bed spaces for closed resettlement units.

The Prime Minister: Regular discussions are held between Ministers and officials of the Department of the Environment and the Department of Social Security and the Resettlement Agency. At a local level, the agency holds detailed discussions on the provision of replacement beds for resettlement units which have closed or are to close with local authorities and the voluntary organisations in the area concerned.

Nuclear Testing

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if, pursuant to the answer of 5 November, Official Report, column 43, he will publish the text of the letter from Her Majesty's ambassador in Washington to the Chief of the Shoshone Nation regarding the continuation of British nuclear testing in Nevada.

The Prime Minister: I have arranged for the text of the letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if, pursuant to the reply of 5 November, Official Report, column 43, he will publish the text of the letter on nuclear testing from his Australian counterpart.

The Prime Minister: Any decision to publish the text of the letter is one for the Australian Government.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disabled People

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to introduce a tax-free, non-means tested benefit designed to cover the extra costs incurred by disabled people in their daily lives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Disability living allowance, which will be both tax-free and non-income-related, will be introduced in April 1992. For people disabled before the age of 65, it will replace and extend the help with the extra costs of disability currently available through attendance allowance and mobility allowance.

Income Support

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will undertake to restore the full rate of income support for those aged under 25 years.

Miss Widdecombe: There are no plans to remove the differential between the levels of income support personal allowances for those aged up to 24 years and those aged 25 and over.

Resettlement Units

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many resettlement units outside London have been closed since 1987; and whether dates have been set for closing the remaining units;

(2) what funding is being made available for resettlement unit replacement bed spaces; and what allowance for inflation is given for both revenue and capital costs;

(3) what consultation is taking place with housing organisations, local authorities and residents regarding the planned closure of resettlement units outside London;

(4) when it is expected the Leeds resettlement unit will close; and whether the planned number of replacement bed spaces will cater for the same number of beds as in the existing resettlement unit;

(5) if he will ensure that proceeds of the sale of land and buildings in the resettlement unit closure programme will be used to fund replacement beds.

Miss. Widdecombe: The management of the resettlement units replacement programme is a matter for Mr. Tony Ward, the chief executive of the Resettlement Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Social Fund

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many social fund inspectors were employed on 30 June 1991;

(2) how many applications for review by a social fund inspector were outstanding for more than one month on 30 June 1991.

Mr. Scott: I am informed by the Social Fund Commissioner that on 30 June 1991, there were 54 social fund inspectors employed and 1,666 review applications outstanding for more than one month. Since 30 June 1991 the Social Fund Commissioner has recruited a further 12 inspectors.

Bed-and-Breakfast Accommodation

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost in the current financial year of paying a £10 per week per person allowance for people in bed-and-breakfast accommodation without adequate cooking facilities.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not available.

Benefits Uprating

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list any occasions when, in benefit upratings from 1986 onwards, the power to round benefit rates up or down under section 63(5) of the Social Security Act 1986 has not been used to round rates to the nearest 5p indicating by how much and in which direction any rounding diverged from that practice.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 18 November 1991]: The table lists those rates whose increased amounts, from April 1987 to April 1991 upratings inclusive, were not rounded in the manner specified. In each case the rate was rounded up or down to the nearest amount indicated except where otherwise specified. The 1986 uprating order was made before the commencement of the Social Security Act 1986.

Benefits

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many income support and unemployment benefit claimants have (a) successfully and (b) unsuccessfully claimed income support under the hardship rule during each quarter from October 1989 onwards in Wales; and how many such claims were in doubt due to (i) not actively seeking work, (ii) refusing suitable employment and (iii) availability for work.

Miss Widdecombe: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Playing Fields

Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals he has relating to the redevelopment of school and educational playing fields; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: My Department has provided funding for the Sports Council to establish a national register of recreational land, which will enable gains and losses to be monitored. The register will include educational playing fields. Decisions on the disposal of playing fields at local education authority maintained schools are for the education authority. However, in view of public concern about the loss of playing fields, we are considering the issue.

Further Education (Special Needs)

Mrs. Heal: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what provision has been made for the further education funding councils to consult people and organisations with specialist knowledge of special educational needs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The Further and Higher Education Bill currently before Parliament requires the further education funding councils to have regard to the requirements of those with learning difficulties in making provision for further education. The funding councils will be able to determine what consultation is needed to enable them to carry out this duty effectively.

Mrs. Heal: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to ensure students with special educational needs wishing to pursue courses of further or adult education are enabled to choose between provision in schools and provision in colleges of further education.

Mr. Eggar: The Further and Higher Education Bill currently before Parliament will ensure that a wide range of educational provision continues to be available for students with special educational needs, including provision in schools and in colleges of further education.

Voluntary Aided Schools

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list all the bids submitted by North Yorkshire local education authority for resources from the voluntary aided schools capital programme and the cash value of these bids in 1987-88 and in each year since then; and if he will list the bids approved and resources allocated in cash terms and at 1987-88 prices.

Mr. Fallon: The information requested is as follows:

Note:
[1]Projects on Design List—allocation in respect of design fees only.
For 1992-93 bids for new minor works invited only in respect of Basic Need or Surplus Place removal. Allocations do not include committed expenditure for projects started in earlier years.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he advised local education authorities that they may no longer apply for resources from the voluntary aided schools capital programme for schools needing work to remedy accommodation deficiencies or overcrowding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: My right hon. and learned Friend has given local education authorities no such advice. They are free to bid for projects at voluntary aided schools needing work to remedy accommodation deficiencies or overcrowding, and many have done so. Decisions on which projects will receive allocations will be announced in December.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he raised the limit for minor works projects funded by the voluntary aided schools capital programme from £120,000 to £250,000; how he consulted local education authorities about this change; what assessment he has made of local education authorities requirement for resources to fund minor works projects costing over £120,000; how much extra money he intends to distribute to local education authorities for funding minor works; and how much of the voluntary aided schools capital programme for 1991-92 was allocated in respect of projects costing between £120,000 and £250,000.

Mr. Fallon: The limit for minor works projects funded by the voluntary aided schools capital programme is to be raised from £120,000 to £250,000 with effect from 1992-93 as announced in the Department's letter of 30 May to local education authorities inviting bids for 1992-93 capital expenditure. Local authority associations were consulted in March on the proposed change, and were content. Local education authorities' requirements for resources to fund minor works projects costing over £120,000 have been assessed on the basis of previous years' bids. A decision on how much extra money to distribute to local education authorities for minor works will be announced when allocations for all voluntary aided school projects are announced in December. A total of £1·5 million was allocated in respect of new projects costing between £120,000 and £250,000 in 1991-92.

Parents Charter

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, in making his request to head teachers that schoolchildren should take copies of the parents charter for distribution to their parents, what advice he took to ensure that this will not contravene section 45 of the Education Act 1986.

Mr. Eggar: There is no question of the distribution of the parents charter falling within the scope of sections 44 and 45 of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986, which relate to political teaching in schools, nor within the scope of section 2 of the Local Government Act 1986 which relates to the distribution of political propaganda.

The parents charter is addressed not to pupils but to their parents. It sets out in objective terms the rights which parents now have in relation to their children's education, and those changes which the Government propose to introduce if Parliament gives its approval. It fully meets the published guidelines on Government publicity.

The decision on distribution is one for the governors and head teacher of each school, and not for local education authorities. The majority of schools have already responded positively to my right hon. and learned Friend's invitation to order copies for their parents. Others should follow their example and not be intimidated or misled by inaccurate advice.

Higher Education

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the age participation index figure for higher education in Scotland and in England and Wales, respectively, for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Separate age participation indices for England and Wales are not calculated.

The available figures are as follows:—

Academic year	Great Britain[1]	Scotland[2]
1981-82	13·1	18·1
1982-83	13·3	18·0
1983-84	13·1	18·7
1984-85	13·7	19·4
1985-86	13·9	19·1
1986-87	14·0	19·7
1987-88	14·6	20·9
1988-89	15·1	21·2
1989-90	17·1	24·5
1990-91	[3]19·3	n/a

[1] Defined as the number of under 21 year old United Kingdom domiciled initial entrants expressed as a proportion of the average of the total number of 18 and 19 year olds in the population. Initial entrants are those students entering a course of higher education for the first time. Source: DES.
[2] Provisional.
[3] Defined as the number of Scottish domiciled entrants to full-time higher education anywhere in the United Kingdom who are aged 20 or less, expressed as a percentage of the population of 17 year olds one year previously. Source: SOED.
n/a = not available.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of full-time undergraduate and post-graduate students, respectively, attending universities in Great Britain were matriculated at Scottish universities at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Alan Howarth: In the academic year 1990-91, 16·1 and 12 per cent. of full-time undergraduates and post-graduates respectively attending universities in Great Britain were matriculated at Scottish universities.

Scottish Universities

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of the recurrent grant distributed by the Universities Funding Council or the University Grants Committee went to Scottish universities in each of the last five years.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Scottish universities' share of the recurrent grant allocated to GB universities by the University Grants Committee or the Universities Funding Council was 15 per cent. in academic years 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89 and 14 per cent. in 1989-90 and 1990-91. These percentages are based on the figures issued by the UGC or the UFC in their recurrent grant announcement letters before the beginning of the years in question.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the percentage of students at Scottish universities who are domiciled in England and abroad, respectively, for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Alan Howarth: In the academic 1990-91, 19·2 per cent. and 13·8 per cent. of students attending Scottish universities were domiciled in England or overseas.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Environmental Issues

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will now update the table on page XV of the Environment Committee's first report on environmental issues in Northern Ireland, of Session 1990-91, providing a list of known legislative commitments for DOE (NI).

Mr. Needham: Copies of the legislative programme prepared by the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland environment service during November 1991 are available in the Library of the House.

Hypothermia

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table showing how many people categorised by age died of hypothermia, or illnesses associated with hypothermia, in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is as follows:

Deaths from hypothermia in Northern Ireland[1]

Maydown Incinerator

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will now clarify the position regarding the proposal for a toxic-hazardous waste incinerator at Maydown, Londonderry, in the light of the recent statement by the Minister for the Environment in the Republic of Ireland that the Republic would have to construct a toxic waste incinerator in the near future.

Mr. Needham: The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland has not received a planning application for a toxic-hazardous waste incinerator at Maydown, Londonderry. A planning application for a major development involving a hazardous waste incinerator would not be determined without a public inquiry held under the terms of article 31 of the Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991.

Unemployed Claimants

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many unemployed claimants have, since April 1990 (a) been issued with warning letters for not actively seeking work, (b) had their claim referred to an adjudicating officer for not actively seeking work, (c) had their claims allowed or disallowed for not actively seeking work, (d) had their claim referred to an adjudicating officer for refusing suitable employment and (e) how many of those in (d) have had their benefit (i) disqualified or (ii) not disqualified.

Mr. Hanley: Social security operational matters are the responsibility of Mr. Alex Wylie, chief executive of the Social Security Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies of his reply will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Ethiopia

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Minister for Overseas Development last visited Ethiopia.

Mrs. Chalker: I last visited Ethiopia on 28-29 January this year. Senior officials visited in October and November.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to announce increased levels of aid to Ethiopia.

Mrs. Chalker: We have provided increasing levels of humanitarian aid to Ethiopia. Since September 1990, we have committed almost £53 million for this purpose, including our share of EC emergency aid. We expect to continue to respond generously to meet emergency needs.

We are considering the future shape and level of our bilateral development aid programme. Our major contribution to Ethiopia's development, however, will continue to be through the multilateral development institutions, particularly the EC. Ethiopia is the largest single recipient of aid under Lomé IV.

Yemen

Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans the Government have to impose cuts in development aid to Yemen.

Mrs. Chalker: We keep under continual review the level of aid to all countries in the light of the resources available, of the policies being pursued by the recipient Governments, and of changes in our priorities.

Simple Truth Appeal

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes), Official Report, 11 November, column 352, regarding the £43,210,000 raised overseas for the Simple Truth Appeal, when this was paid into the appeal; and when it was paid out.

Mrs. Chalker: Of the £43,210,000 raised overseas by the Simple Truth Appeal, £31,468,000 was contributed by overseas Governments and £11,742,000 by individual and corporate donors. These contributions were made direct to United Nations and Red Cross agencies.

Somalia

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of aid to Somalia for the last 10 years.

Mrs. Chalker: Details of United Kingdom bilateral aid to Somalia since 1981 are as follows:

Year	Project aid	Programme aid	Technical co-operation	Disaster relief and food aid	Total
1981	108	144	865	1,324	2,441

1990	—	101	1,577	—	1,678

So far in 1991 we have committed £5·13 million disaster relief to Somalia, including our share of EC emergency aid. The development aid programme was closed in January 1991 due to the deterioration in security.

ODA Review

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Overseas Development Administration will produce its next annual review.

Mrs. Chalker: The ODA's annual review was published earlier this month. The publication date for the 1992 review has not yet been decided.

Know-how Funds

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all those countries currently in receipt of know-how funds, the amounts of money and costs of services provided, and those countries currently being considered for inclusion in the scheme.

Mrs. Chalker: The know-how fund currently funds projects in Poland, Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Bulgaria, Romania, the Baltic states and the Soviet Union. It funded projects in the former GDR from April 1990 until German reunification. We have no plans at present to extend the fund to any additional countries.

Expenditure under the Fund in 1989-90 and 1990-91, and commitments to date in 1991-92 by country are as follows:

£ million

Country	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92
Poland	2·3	10·9	12·1
Hungary	n.a.	1·6	5·9
Czechoslovakia	n.a.	2·0	4·3
Ex-GDR	n.a.	0·5	n.a.
Bulgaria	n.a.	n.a.	1·3
Romania	n.a.	n.a.	1·3
Baltic states/Soviet Union	n.a.	n.a.	8·8

The budget for 1991-92 has been increased to £46 million covering all countries.

The cost of services paid for by the know-how fund depends on the nature of the services and of the project. We have to date committed funds to some 400 projects. The report on the first 1·5 years of the know-how fund give an idea of the individual costs involved. This is available in the House Library.

EMPLOYMENT

Autumn Statement

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give details of the programmes and purposes on which the extra cash announced in the autumn statement will be spent.

Mr. Jackson: The additional planned resources will go towards helping unemployed people, improving the skills of the work force and assisting small businesses and enterprise. The details of the plans will be announced in the departmental report that will be published early next year.

Apprenticeships

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the numbers beginning apprenticeship as bricklayers, joiners, electricians, plasterers and plumbers in each year since 1981.

Mr. Jackson: Information is not available about apprenticeships according to the year in which they begin.

Training Credits

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many training credits have been issued in the pilot areas to young people; how many young people have taken them up; what other information he has on the take-up of credits in those areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: As at 13 October 1991, some 27,000 training credits had been issued within the 11 pilot schemes. Over 12,000 of these have already been used by young people to obtain high-quality training of their choice. This number continues to rise. We hope to publish evaluation results from the first nine months of operating training credits in the spring of 1992. Evaluation will, of course, continue well beyond that, to identify the achievements of young people currently beginning training and the impact of credits on young people who leave school in 1992 and subsequently.

Employment Action

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest information he has about the number of people who have taken up places on employment action; how many have left employment action; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The information requested is not yet available. Employment action came into operation only on 1 October, but we are confident that, by the end of March 1992, there will be provision in place to help 30,000 people.

First Aid Code of Practice

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action he proposes to take to provide further supplies of the first aid approved code of practice —ISBN 0 11 8855360—in HMSO outlets; what reasons account for the shortfall; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The Health and Safety Executive has already made arrangements for further supplies of this publication to be made available to HMSO outlets. The reasons for the present shortfall are the unexpectedly high demand for the publication and some small delay in reprinting due to minor changes being made in one of its annexes.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish the level of employment in the Leeds metropolitan district (a) in manufacturing industries, (b) in the service sector and (c) in all industries and services for (i) male and female employees, (ii) full time and (iii) part time; for each year since 1979 both as a number and as a percentage.

Mr. Jackson: Information for employees in employment by district is only available from the censuses of employment for 1981, 1984, 1987 and 1989. This can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Low Pay

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish the number and percentage of (a) men and (b) women working full time and part time earning less than (i) £2·00 per hour, (ii) £2·50 per hour, (iii) £3·00 per hour, (iv) £3·50 per hour, (v) £4·00 per hour, (vi) £4·50 per hour and (vii) £5·00 per hour in the (1) Leeds, West constituency and (2) the Leeds metropolitan district.

Mr. Jackson: The information available from the 1991 new earnings survey closest to that requested is given in the following tables:

Training Credits

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on progress towards the planned national extension of training credits for young people.

Mr. Howard: I am delighted to be able to announce today the seven training and enterprise councils and two local enterprise companies which will develop training credits schemes to operate from April 1993. These schemes, together with the existing 11 training credits pilots, will mean that some 20 per cent. of the national total of 16 and 17-year-old school leavers will be able to benefit from the increased opportunities offered by training credits. It remains the Government's intention to expand training credits progressively, so that by 1996, within the lifetime of the next Parliament, all young people aged 16 or 17 leaving full-time education will have the offer of a training credit.

The TECs and local enterprise companies that will develop training credits schemes to operate from April 1993:

Calderdale and Kirklees
Isle of Wight
Merseyside
Northamptonshire
Staffordshire
South Thames
Mid Glamorgan
Caithness and Sutherland
Dunbartonshire

HEALTH

Meat Inspection

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will meet the Institution of Environmental Health Officers to discuss whether meat inspection should remain a local authority function.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary at the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food gave to her on 21 November at column 299.

Hospices

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the total value of extra help provided by the Government for hospices over the last 12 months.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridge (Sir R. Rhodes James) on 18 November at column 43.

Health Care, London

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the terms of reference and scope of the Tomlinson inquiry into delivery of health care in London; what assistance the inquiry is obtaining from the King's fund study in the same field; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The terms of reference of Sir Bernard Tomlinson's inquiry are:

"To advise the Secretaries of State for Health and Education and Science on how the relevant statutory authorities are addressing the provision of health care in inner London, working within the framework of the reformed NHS, including the balance between acute and primary health services; and the organisation and provision of undergraduate medical teaching, postgraduate medical education and research and development; taking account of:

the health needs of London's resident and day-time population;

the emerging purchasing plans of health authorities and their likely impact on inner London hospitals; future developments in the provision of acute and primary care; and the need to maintain high quality patient care and, as a foundation for this, high standards of medical teaching and research and development."

I understand that Sir Bernard and members of his expert team have already held useful discussions with members of the King's Fund Commission studying health services in London, with a view to future co-operation.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a list of those general practitioner fundholding practices in England which have set up private companies for aspects of their patients care.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not held centrally.

Hospital Security

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the security arrangements in NHS hospitals.

Mr. Dorrell: Security arrangements at NHS hospitals are the responsibility of and can best be determined by local hospital managers, in the light of their knowledge of their premises and the level of access necessary for patients, staff and visitors.

To help local managers, the National Association of Health Authorities issued the NHS Security Manual to all health authorities in 1984. This is now being revised and updated with the help of a £37,000 grant from the Department.

The new manual will take account of the most recent developments in security and crime prevention techniques and is being developed in consultation with key experts in the field and other interested private and public sector organisations. It will be available for circulation to health authorities and NHS trusts early next year.

Nurses, Midwives and Health Visitors Act 1979

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to introduce changes to the Nurses, Midwives and Health Visitors Act 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Nurses, Midwives and Health Visitors Bill was introduced in another place on 5 November.

Pregnancy Terminations

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which EC countries permit the treatment of non-resident women for legal termination of pregnancy.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Mifegyne

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many briefing seminars concerning Mifegyne have been held by Roussel UK; where they were held; and approximately how many health personnel attended each seminar.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally. My hon. Friend may wish to contact Roussel UK for the information requested.

Mental Handicap

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on how financial support for the mentally handicapped in residential care is calculated regarding training, education, employment and other day care elements; and how it is planned to be changed after 1 April 1993.

Mr. Dorrell: The provision of day care and other personal social services is the responsibility of local authority social services departments. They are responsible for assessing the need for services in individual cases and for deciding how this might appropriately be met. This will not alter after 1 April 1993.

Midwives

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many student midwives completed training in each of the last four years; and how many new midwives positions were created in that period.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The number of student midwives who completed training in England in the last four years and became eligible for registration is as follows:

1988	2,521
1989	2,088
1990	2,499
1991	2,336

Note: These figures were provided by the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting.

Information regarding the number of new midwifery positions created in the same period is not centrally available.

Employment of Children

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will bring the outstanding provisions of the Employment of Children Act 1973 into force.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no plans to implement the Employment of Children Act 1973.

The main legislation governing the part-time employment of children under minimum school leaving age is the Children and Young Persons Act 1933. This sets out general restrictions governing hours of work and conditions of employment. Further restrictions are contained in local authority byelaws made under the Act. The provisions of primary legislation and byelaws serve as an effective framework to protect children who work part time.

Huntington's Chorea

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much his Department spends in research into the cause and cure of Huntington's chorea.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

The Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid through this Department, is the main agency for funding medical research in this country. In the last financial year (1990-91) the council spent £100,000 on research relevant to Huntington's chorea. The council is always willing to consider for support soundly based new scientific proposals in competition with other applications. The health departments, universities and medical schools may also be funding some research on Huntington's chorea but information on this is not collected centrally.

Hospitals, Liverpool

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the future of Mossley Hill, hospital.

Mr. Dorrell: Mossley Hill hospital has a secure future. Liverpool health authority are currently implementing plans to centralise mental health services on the Mossley Hill site. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Michael Emberton, the chairman of Liverpool health authority, for further details.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether there are any plans to amalgamate the Royal Liverpool teaching hospital and Broadgreen hospital, or to transfer services from one hospital to the other; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: I am not aware of any plan of the Royal Liverpool University Hospitals trust and the Broadgreen Hospital trust to amalgamate as a single trust. Any such proposal would need to be put to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State formally for consideration and would involve the dissolution of the two existing trusts and further public consultation.

Any transfer of health services is a matter for the providers of those services in consultation with purchasers. This is a matter for local discussion and decision.

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether he intends to seek tenders for private capital to finance the hotel residential accommodation at the proposed obstetric and gynaecology hospital in Liverpool;

(2) how many tenders have been put out for the proposed obstetric and gynaecology hospital in Liverpool;

(3) what is his Department's capital limit on the proposed obstetric and gynaecology hospital in Liverpool;

(4) if his Department intends to provide funding for the whole of the capital cost of the acute block and the hotel accommodation for the proposed obstetric and gynaecology hospital in Liverpool;

(5) what are his Department's building cost estimates for the 163-bed acute block and the 100 hotel residential beds of the proposed obstetric and gynaecology hospital in Liverpool; what were the trust application building cost estimates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 12 November 1991]: Approval in principle was given by the Department in September to a new obstetric and gynaecology hospital in Liverpool. The base costs, for approval in principle purposes, was estimated to be around £16 million. This figure was announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 10 September and was quoted in the trust application document. With additions for fees, equipment and on-costs (infrastructure) the cost is estimated to be £26·46 million to which will be added VAT and inflation.

Approval in principle does not signal a specific allocation of capital. Any proposal to use private sector capital must be demonstrated to represent value for money and would require the approval of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer. His approval has not been sought in relation to this scheme.

Estimates of building costs are made by the relevant health authority, whose responsibility it is to seek tenders. The district health authority has not yet reached that stage.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Public Limited Companies

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish a table showing which completed inspectors' reports relating to public limited companies have not been published over the last 10 years.

Mr. Redwood: The table lists all inspections into public companies under sections 432 and 442 of the Companies Act 1985 (or their predecessor sections) where the inspectors have submitted their final report since 1 November 1981 and that report remains unpublished.

The decision whether to publish the reports marked with an asterisk remains under consideration. Substantial interim reports on Bryanston Finance Limited and Dunlop Holdings Limited were published on 22 March 1983 and 17 February 1981 respectively.

Date of appointment	Company Name	Date of report

23 June 1989	The Bestwood plc	*26 March 1991
6 February 1990	BOM Holdings plc	*2 August 1991

Supervisory Bodies

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will propose legislation under which no unelected person would be able to sit on the councils of the bodies recognised as supervisory bodies under the Companies Act 1989.

Mr. Redwood: No.

Auditing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will propose legislation under which auditing firms criticised in the inspectors' report would be required to return the audit fee to the company.

Mr. Redwood: No.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will propose legislation under which it would be a criminal offence for the recognised supervisory bodies to recommend passive auditing guidelines.

Mr. Redwood: No.

Caparo Judgment

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will now propose legislation under which the Caparo judgment would be reversed.

Mr. Redwood: We have no plans to do so.

Vehicle Prices

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received about the relative pre-tax pricing of vehicles in the United Kingdom for ordinary car buyers and for fleet buyers and for purchases of the same vehicle on the continent; and what plans he has to introduce legislation or take other steps to safeguard the consumer's interests in this area.

Mr. Redwood: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations about car prices. A reference relating to the supply of new motor cars was made to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission on 9 May 1990. In making the reference the Director General of Fair Trading drew attention to concern about apparent differences between prices in the United Kingdom and other European countries. On 31 October 1991 the Commission delivered their report to the Secretary of State who is currently considering it. The report will be published as soon as is practicable. The contents of all MMC reports remain confidential until publication. If the MMC find no adverse effects the Secretary of State has no power to act. If the MMC have reached any adverse findings he will decide what steps, if any, should be taken to remedy the situation. He will also consider whether or not to announce a period of consultation before reaching his conclusions if the report is adverse.

Office of Telecommunications

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list for the Office of Telecommunications for each year since it was established (a) staffing levels and (b) its annual cost at both actual and current prices.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 22 November 1991]: The staffing levels and the annual expenditure of OFTEL in each financial year since it was established are as follows:

	Staff level (actual)	Financial expenditure actual £k	1990-91 prices £k
1984-85	53	1,668	2,373
1985-86	91	2,792	3,765
1986-87	109	3,404	4,444
1987-88	115	3,573	4,424
1988-89	117	3,825	4,419
1989-90	118	4,291	4,655
1990-91	130	6,424	6,424
[1]1991-92	150	7,375	6,893

[1] provisional

Note: OFTEL's expenditure is fully recovered from licence fee income.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give the annual salary of the Director General of Telecommunications for each year since his appointment, giving year-on-year percentage rises.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 22 November 1991]: The figures requested are as follows:

Year ended 30 June	Salary £	Percentage increase
1985	50,000	—
1986	55,022	10·0
1987	60,224	9·5
1988	62,903	4·4
1989	66,341	5·5
1990	71,780	8·2
1991	81,915	14·1
1992	87,805	7·2

Trade Statistics

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will state the total exports and imports of the United Kingdom with the other countries of the European Community for the years 1989 and 1990 and the first six months of 1991 together with the export to import ratio for each period.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 22 November 1991]: Information on United Kingdom visible trade is regularly published in "Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom", which is available in the Library of the House.

European Co-operative Statute

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the United Kingdom Government's policy on the draft European co-operative statute.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 18 November 1991]: The Draft European Co-operative Statute is still at a draft stage. Should a formal proposal emerge from the Commission, the Government will consult widely among interested organisations, as is the normal practice.

TRANSPORT

Overloaded Lorries

10. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what new proposals he has to reduce the problem caused by overloaded lorries.

Mr. Chope: About twice as many vehicles will be weighed by the vehicle inspectorate this year as five years ago.

Manchester Airport (Rail Link)

11. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about a rail link to Manchester airport from the south.

Mr. McLoughlin: The main market is to and from Manchester and other points to the north of the airport. That will be well served by the link which is currently under construction. I understand British Rail has no plans to build a southern spur to the rail link to Manchester airport at present.

Channel Tunnel

12. Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to improve the rail connections between the channel tunnel and north-west England in time for the opening of the tunnel.

Mr. Rifkind: British Rail plans to invest over £1·4 billion in channel tunnel services. The north-west will have through passenger services and freight terminals at Trafford Park and Liverpool.

13. Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about British Rail's proposals for the location of rail freight depots to serve European destinations via the channel tunnel, with specific reference to the needs of south-west England.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail has announced the locations of all nine of its proposed channel tunnel freight terminals. Initially the terminal at Cardiff will serve south Wales and the south-west of England. British Rail is exploring the prospect of a terminal at Avonmouth.

16. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a further statement on the establishment of freight terminals in the north-west of England for ongoing carriage of trade through the channel tunnel.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail has announced that there will be channel tunnel freight terminals in Trafford Park (Manchester) and Seaforth (Merseyside) to link industry in the north-west with the channel tunnel. Both terminals are due to open in 1993.

17. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on environmental protection and compensation for residents of north-west Kent along the line of the recently-announced route for the channel tunnel high-speed rail link.

Mr. Freeman: There will be full public consultation on environmental protection measures, and voluntary purchase will be offered for homes required for, or seriously affected by, the construction and operation of the rail link. Neither the protection measures, nor the purchase scheme, can be adequately defined until the preferred route has been engineered in greater detail.

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans there are to improve British Rail freight links between Southampton and the channel tunnel.

Mr. McLoughlin: The planning and running of its international freight services is a commercial matter for British Rail. Freight from Southampton through the channel tunnel will be routed through the freight terminal at Willesden.

26. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what marketing strategy is to be used by British Rail in disposing of the residential properties they have bought in the Warwick gardens area of Dulwich in anticipation of the channel tunnel rail link going through south-east London.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail will seek to minimise any disruption of the local housing market by operating a carefully controlled sales programme.

23. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with the chairman of British Rail concerning the passenger and freight railway services proposed between south Wales and the channel tunnel.

Mr. Freeman: On 25 October I visited the site of the planned channel tunnel freight terminal in Cardiff.

Transport Expenditure

14. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide a geographical breakdown by United Kingdom nation and region for the additional projected increase in transport expenditure for 1992-93 and 1993-94; and if he will make a statement;

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide a geographical breakdown by United Kingdom nation and region of the additional projected increase in transport expenditure for 1992-93 and 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: British Rail's spending will include projects that benefit the whole of the United Kingdom; but its investment programme for the two years is not yet settled, and so no geographical analysis can be made.

Road Pricing

15. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent calculations his Department has made as to the impact that road pricing would have on traffic flows in Greater London and the south-east.

Mr. Chope: We are now beginning detailed research to establish whether road pricing could become a practicable option for London and what its many effects would be. This assessment will include the likely impact on traffic flows.

A10

18. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects completion of the dualling of the A10 between Cambridge and Ely.

Mr. Chope: Announcement of a preferred route following consultation is expected in spring 1994. Later progress will depend upon progress with statutory procedures and resources available for the roads programme.

Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency

19. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency has to use its data base for commercial marketing purposes.

Mr. Chope: The DVLA's intention to explore the commercial use of its databases is included in its 1991-92 business plan, a copy of which is in the Library.

Network SouthEast

20. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with British Rail about further investment in rolling stock by Network SouthEast; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Around 800 passenger vehicles are currently on order for Network SouthEast which will significantly improve the quality of service for many passengers. These are as follows:

Network SouthEast new trains on order

Route	Number of Vehicles	Class	End delivery
Chiltern lines	89	165/0	March 1992
Thames lines	91	165/1	Summer 1992
Kent link	400	465	Spring 1993
Waterloo and City	20	482	Late 1992
Kent link	86	466	Spring 1993
Thames express	63	166	Summer 1993
West of England (Waterloo-Exeter line)	63	159	Summer 1992

Rail Safety

21. Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss safety.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. and learned Friend has regular meetings with Sir Bob Reid, the British Rail chairman, to discuss a variety of railway issues. Safety remains the top priority for both the Government and British Rail.

Road Schemes

24. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has had referring to environmental aspects of proposed road schemes.

Mr. Chope: I received many representations on various aspects of the roads programme.

London Underground

25. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the chairman of London Transport to discuss improvements to the underground network.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. and learned Friend and I meet the chairman of London Transport regularly to discuss a variety of issues, including improvements to the underground network. The increase in grant announced in the Chancellor's autumn statement means that the Underground will have the resources that it needs to provide London with a system described by the chairman as a "decently modern metro".

Road Traffic (East London)

27. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on traffic conditions at the intersection of the Mile End road—A11—and Cambridge Heath road in London E1.

Mr. Chope: Traffic conditions at the junction of the A11 and Cambridge Heath road are a matter for the highway authority, the London borough of Tower Hamlets. I understand that the police increased enforcement activities in the area while work was in progress to repair a gas main on the nearby A13.

London Regional Transport Grant

28. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the proposed increase in grant to London Regional Transport.

Mr. Freeman: The chairman of London Transport has welcomed the increased funding announced in the autumn statement.

Tube Stations (Refurbishment)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much he expects London Underground Ltd. to invest in the refurbishment of the Elephant and Castle and Rotherhithe tube stations during (a) 1991-92 and (b) 1992-93.

Mr. Freeman: Following the recent announcement by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer of a record £3·8 billion grant for London Transport over the next three years, London Underground Limited (LUL) is currently reassessing its future investment programme. Although this work is not yet complete, I understand from LUL that work on the £6 million refurbishment of Elephant and Castle is likely to restart in 1992-93.

I understand that LUL does not have any firm date for refurbishment works at Rotherhithe, but the station may be included in a general refurbishment programme which will benefit several stations over the next few years.

Rail Freight Services

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans there are to improve British Rail freight services between Southampton and other major cities and ports.

Mr. McLoughlin: This is a commercial matter for the British Railways Board. However, I understand that Railfreight Distribution is at present considering the potential for expansion at Southampton.

M271

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans there are to extend the M271 direct into the Western docks area of Southampton; and what is the time scale.

Mr. Chope: My Department has no such proposals, and I am not aware of any by Hampshire county council.

M27

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans there are to complete the transportation links between Dover/Folkestone to Devon using the existing M27; and what is the time scale.

Mr. Chope: The national roads programme includes 21 schemes for improvements to sections of the A20, A259 and A27 between Dover and the M27 motorway, and another 16 schemes for sections of the A31, A35 and A30 westwards from the M27 to Exeter, collectively valued at some £438 million at November 1987 prices. Some of these are now under construction and the others are at various stages of preparation. Subject to satisfactory completion of the statutory procedures and continuing availability of funds, we would expect all to be completed by the end of the decade.

The needs of the trunk road network are kept under constant review, and it is possible that further schemes along the south coast route might be added to the programme from time to time.

M3

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate is now foreseen for the completion of the missing link of the M3 motorway.

Mr. Chope: The Compton to Bassett section of the M3 is due for completion by the end of the year. The final section of the M3 around Winchester is programmed for completion by the end of 1994. This will complete the motorway route from London to Southampton.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport for what period a class I certificate for a heavy goods vehicle licence, DL 923, normally remains valid; if there are any circumstances in which this period can be extended; and whether he has any plans to seek to amend these arrangements.

Mr. Chope: Heavy goods vehicle test pass certificates (DLG23) were issued prior to 1 April of this year and are valid for five years. If drivers do not claim their full entitlement within the five year period the validity of the test pass certificate lapses.

From 1 April, drivers issued with large goods vehicle (LGV) or passenger carrying vehicle (PCV) test pass certificates must claim full entitlement within two years of passing the test.

The period is laid out in regulations and there is no current plan to change them.

Transport, London

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out in tabular form the proportion of (a) inner London and (b) central London residents who used each of the following modes of transport for non-work trips for 1989 and 1990, respectively: (a) the Underground, (b) bus, (c) British Rail, (d) car, as driver, (e) car, as passenger, (f) cycle, (g) motor cycle and (h) pedestrian, respectively.

Mr. McLoughlin: The figures requested are not available. Data are being collected for 1991 as part of the London area transport survey and results will be available in 1993.

Harbours Act 1964

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the harbours covered by the Harbours Act 1964 together with the name and address of the harbour authority.

Mr. McLoughlin: There are several hundred harbours as defined in section 57 of the 1964 Act. I am sending the hon. Lady a list.

Driving Licences

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many driving licences were renewed by drivers over the age of 70 years during 1990-91.

Mr. Chope: A total of 618,235 licences were renewed by drivers over the age of 70 years during 1990-91.

British Rail Staff

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people were employed by British Rail in 1979 and in 1990.

Mr. Freeman: British rail had 134,361 employees at 31 March 1990. The figure at 31 December 1979 was 244,084.

Rights of Way

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the footpaths and bridleways through harbours which have been closed in the last 10 years.

Mr. McLoughlin: Apart from applications (of which no central information is kept) from harbour authorities to the local highway authority for footpath or bridleway closures under the Highways Act 1980 and references in private Acts, provision has been made in two recent harbour revision orders, those for the Mersey Docks and Harbour Company in 1984 and for Blyth in 1989, for the stopping up of specific public rights of way and the provision of alternative public footpaths.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will require all details of footpaths and bridleways through trust ports to be stated in the objectives of the sales.

Mr. McLoughlin: No. Objectives of sale agreed between individual ports authorities and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State represent criteria which the authority will take into account when assessing competing bids for the port. It would be inappropriate for them to incorporate details of footpaths and bridleways through the port. The same procedures for the extinguishment of footpaths and bridleways will continue to apply following privatisation as before it.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether there is any requirement for a harbour authority to maintain for public inspection a map of footpaths and bridleways in the area of the harbour.

Mr. McLoughlin: No. It is the responsibility of the surveying authority (usually the county highway authority) to provide information about all public footpaths and bridleways in its area.

Road Casualties

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by what percentage the number and the rate of each category of fatal and serious road casualties has changed since the target was set of reducing casualties by one third by the year 2000.

Mr. Chope: The Government target of reducing casualties by one third by the year 2000 was set in 1987, using the average annual number of casualties in the years from 1981 to 1985 as a baseline. The requested information is as follows:

Fatal and serious casualties in road injury accidents: Great Britain

	Casualties		Percentage change
	1981-85 average	Year to June 1991[1]	1981-85 to 1991
Fatal	5,598	4,655	−16·8
Serious	74,532	55,528	−25·5
	Casualty rate per 100 million vehicle kilometres
Fatal	1·9	1·1	−39·4
Serious	25·0	13·6	−45·7
Traffic:[2] (hundred million vehicle Kilometres)	2,983	4,092	37·2

[1]Casualty and traffic data for 1991 are provisional.
[2]Source for traffic data: "Traffic in Great Britain 2nd Quarter 1991" Department of Transport Statistics Bulletin (91)7.

Traffic Congestion

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the national economic costs of traffic congestion.

Mr. Chope: We are taking a wide range of measures to deal with congestion, including substantial investment in public transport, roads and traffic management. There is no precise estimate of the total costs of congestion, but the cost is some billions of pounds each year.

Road Building and Maintenance

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of the money raised from motor taxation is spent on road building and maintenance; and what comparable information he has for Germany, the USA and Japan, respectively.

Mr. Chope: For 1991-92, the amount spent on building, maintaining and policing roads in the United Kingdom will be approximately 40 per cent. of motoring taxation revenue. Comparable information for Germany, the USA and Japan is not readily available.

A12

Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what were the traffic flows along the A12 between (a) the M25 junction and Margaretting, (b) Boreham and Hatfield Peverel, (c) Feering and Marks Tey, (d) Marks Tey and Stanway and (e) at Four Sisters in 1989, 1990 and 1991, respectively.

Mr. Chope: Average daily traffic flows on the A12 were as follows:

	1989	1990	1991
M25-Margaretting	62,000	63,000	67,000
Boreham-Hatfield Peverel	62,000	65,000	69,000
Feering-Marks Tey	53,000	52,000	54,000
Marks Tey-Stanway	63,000	63,000	64,000
Four Sisters	32,000	32,000	34,000

Trust Ports

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will amend the objectives of sale under the privatisation process of trust ports which include sites of special scientific interest in their boundaries to require a stated environment objective where one has not been included.

Mr. McLoughlin: No. There will be no change in the arrangements for the protection of an SSSI as a result of the privatisation of a trust port. There is already a requirement on the local planning authority to consult the relevant conservation agency when dealing with a planning application for a development affecting an SSSI. Similar consultations are undertaken by bodies proposing developments which are permitted developments within the general development order.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what level of inspection will be adopted by his Department to ensure that the fitting of heavy goods vehicle speed limiters on existing vehicles by operators has been carried out correctly;

(2) if he will set out the procedures to be adopted by heavy goods vehicle operators when the fitting of speed-limiting devices on existing vehicles becomes obligatory.

Mr. Chope: All new HGVs over 7·5 tonnes maximum gross weight will have to be fitted with speed limiters as from 1 August 1992. It is intended that compliance with the requirement should be checked when vehicles are type-approved, and at subsequent annual roadworthiness tests.

Regulations covering existing vehicles will be made shortly. They will require limiters to be fitted to the more recently registered of the biggest and heaviest HGVs already in service. Compliance with this requirement will be checked at annual roadworthiness tests.

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to ensure the wearing of seatbelts by passengers in heavy goods vehicles and vans.

Mr. Chope: Passengers travelling in the specified passenger seat are required to use a seat belt where one is fitted. Responsibility for enforcing the law rests with the police. We take every opportunity to stress the benefits of using belts, and of fitting them in vehicles which do not already have them.

Swale Crossing

Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the strategy and timetable for the planning and construction of a second crossing of the Swale to the Isle of Sheppey.

Mr. Chope: The proposed A249 Iwade-Queenborough scheme will include a second crossing of the Swale. Investigation of options is in hand and the next step will be public consultation early in 1993. Thereafter, the programme will depend on public reaction and the time needed to complete the detailed design and statutory procedures.

A1M (Compensation)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will review the case for compensation for those homes close to the A1M in Hertfordshire to be compensated by central Government funds for extra noise and air pollution; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: No. Compensation is already provided for in existing legislation: both for those from whom land is required for road schemes; and for those from whom no land is taken but whose properties depreciate in value because of such factors as noise, fumes and smoke arising as a direct result of the use of a new or altered highway.

Vehicle Distancing

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress is being made to prevent vehicles driving too close to vehicles in front.

Mr. Chope: The Department has been conducting an experiment with chevron markings on the M1, to determine whether such markings are effective in reducing the amount of close following. The results of the experiment will be published shortly.

British Rail

Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a table listing the current and forecast levels of public service obligation grant and external financing limit for British Rail, and the outturn figures since 1975.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested for public service obligation grant and external financing limits for British Rail since 1975 and current forecasts to 1994-95 is as follows:

Iwade Bypass

Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce a decision on the A249, Iwade bypass.

Mr. Chope: As soon as possible.

Car Telephones

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many prosecutions have taken place in the last two years for driving with a hand-held car telephone; what steps he is taking to prevent such driving; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: There are no separate statistics available on the number of prosecutions arising from the use of hand held car telephones. It is not a specific offence to use a car telephone whilst driving. Prosecution would result where the use of such a device leads a driver to drive without due care or without exercising proper control. Advice on the use of car telephones is given in a variety of publications including the highway code.

European Commission

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library a copy of the article 169 letter he received in mid-October from the European Commission, in respect of EC directive 85/337/EEC.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 14 November 1991]: No. It is an accepted convention that correspondence between the Government and the Commission is confidential.

River Itchen (Bridge)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has now invited tenders for bridge works over the River Itchen as part of the M3 Bar End-Compton.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 15 November 1991]: Tenders have been invited for bridge works in advance of the main M3 Bar End Compton contract, but these do not include a bridge over the River Itchen.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the advance works prior to the letting of a contract for bridge works over the River Itchen require an archaeological dig or any other work liable to damage the River Itchen watermeadows site of special scientific interest.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 15 November 1991]: The advance works will affect a small corner of the Itchen Valley water meadows site of special scientific interest (SSSI). Ecological and archaeological work will be carried out in the affected area of the SSSI before any construction starts on that part of the site.

Environmental Assessments

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library a copy of the correspondence between himself and the European Commission on (a) M3 motorway, reference P/1324/90 dated 26 March 1990 and 23 May 1991, (b) the Hackney Wick to M11 link road, dated 21 June 1990 and 14 August 1990 and (c) the A406 east London river crossing dated 24 October 1989 and 22 December 1989, with copies of any subsequent correspondence in respect of each.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 18 November 1991]: No. It is an accepted convention that correspondence between the Government and the Commission is confidential.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will give a breakdown of the costs to his Department of preparing environment assessments in accordance with the EC directives;

(2) if he will list those private consultants selected by his Department to carry out environmental assessments in accordance with the EC directive and to which particular assessment they were attached;

(3) if he will list the schemes for which his Department has prepared an environmental statement as required under the EC directive, with full details of the costs of the preparation of these statements; and which have been prepared, (a) by his staff within the Department of Transport and (b) by outside consultants.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 20 November 1991]: Consultants are appointed to undertake the preparation and supervision of trunk road schemes under the direction of the Department of Tranport's staff. The consultants are responsible for the full range of duties associated with each commission, including an environmental assessment. The preparation of the environmental assessment, including the environmental statement, is not costed separately. Attached is a list of schemes for which an environmental statement in accordance with the EC directive 85/337 as applied by section 105A of the Highway Act 1980 has been published, together with the name of the consultants appointed to carry out the work:

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Room Bookings

45. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Lord President of the Council what changes he proposes in the arrangements for hon. Members to book rooms in the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. MacGregor: I have no such proposals.

European Standing Committees

46. Dr. Godman: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make a statement concerning the modus operandi of European Standing Committee A and B.

Mr. MacGregor: Experience so far shows that the two European Standing Committees are working well and have made a real contribution to the improved scrutiny of European legislation. I am currently seeking views from the Select Committee on Procedure as part of a first stage review of the new scrutiny arrangements and will consider carefully any recommendations which the Committee might make.

Parliamentary Hours

47. Mr. Butler: To ask the Lord President of the Council whether he is now in a position to bring forward proposals to reduce the number of late sitting hours in the House of Commons.

Mr. MacGregor: This is one of the issues that the Select Committee on Sittings of the House is considering, and we await its recommendations.

One recent improvement has been that, since they were set up in January, the European Standing Committees have made a significant contribution to reducing the burden of late night debates on the Floor. Some 20 or so of their debates would probably have been held on the Floor after 10 pm under the previous arrangements.

Disabled People (Access)

48. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Lord President of the Council what further action he is taking to improve access to all parts of the Palace of Westminster for people with disabilities.

Mr. MacGregor: I commissioned consultants earlier in the year to look at means of improving access to the main public areas. Their initial report has been examined and further advice is now being sought.

Register of Members' Interests

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will initiate a proposal to require hon. Members to declare the amounts of remuneration they received from outside directorships, consultations and all other payments made for outside work in the Register of Members' Interests.

Mr. MacGregor: No.

DEFENCE

Diving Forces

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his assessment of the risk of mining or sabotage in or around British ports by terrorists.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The assessment of this type of threat from terrorists is not the responsibility of the MOD.

Service Personnel (Deaths)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the reasons why certain documents, including boards of inquiry reports relating to deaths of service personnel, should remain confidential to his Department.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A board of inquiry aims to establish the facts of an incident and make recommendations to prevent a recurrence. It can help witnesses to speak freely and frankly if their evidence is treated confidentially. Other documents may be confidential for a variety of reasons, such as national security or medical or commercial confidentiality. Coral Sea Battle

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which Royal Navy vessels are due to take part in the battle of the Coral sea celebrations in April/May 1992.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No participation by RN ships in the commemoration is planned.

Glen Parva Barracks

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will be putting into effect plans to centralise army pay and records at Glen Parva barracks, South Wigston.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We currently have no plans to centralise Army pay and records at Glen Parva barracks, South Wigston.

Exercise Starfish

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which Royal Navy vessels and in which years have taken part in exercises called Starfish.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: HM ships regularly take part in the naval exercise STARFISH which is undertaken by member countries under the five power defence arrangements. Ships involved since 1981 are as follows:

Year	Ship(s)
1981	Wasperton
	Monkton
1982	Ajax
	Beachampton
	Wolverton
1983	Avenger
	Wasperton
	Monkton
1984	Falmouth
	Monkton
	Wolverton
1985	Plover
	Starling
1986	Amazon
	Beaver
	Starling
	Swallow
1987	Plover
	Starling
1988	Sirius
	Peacock
1989	Brave
1990	Battleaxe
	Plover
1991	Manchester
	Peacock

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which Royal Navy vessels are due to take part in Exercise Starfish 92.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is planned that the Royal Navy will take part in Exercise Starfish 92, but details of which ships will be involved are still under consideration.

Dounreay

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for how long the prototype fast breeder reactor at Dounreay has been supplying electricity to HMS Vulcan; and at what cost.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Since 1957, when the MOD Vulcan facility was established, it has obtained its electricity from the Scottish Hydroboard via the adjacent Atomic Energy Authority (Technology) establishment at Dounreay. The power consumed by Vulcan is metered and paid for at commercial rates.

Female Sailors

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total added cost of fitting out ships of the Royal Navy to cater for female crew.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The estimated cost of work done to date to provide accommodation and associated facilities on HM ships for female crew is £1·6 million.

New Zealand

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Royal Navy is currently prepared to send ships to visit New Zealand.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no plans for Royal Navy ships to visit New Zealand in the immediate future.

Navy (Nuclear Weapons)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are his plans in respect of the removal of tactical nuclear weapons from Royal Navy surface ships.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Steps are being taken to remove tactical nuclear weapons from Royal Navy ships in accordance with the Government's new policy that such weapons will no longer be carried at sea in normal circumstances.

Staff Cars

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many officers are based in each auditing district; and how many staff cars are provided in each district.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information is not held in the form requested, but the numbers of staff cars and service officers based in the United Kingdom are as follows:

	Officers	Staff cars
RN	7,142	551
Army	10,652	1,719
RAF	12,880	1,095

The totals of cars include those held in pools which are available for use by all ranks, service and civilian, for travel on official business where this is the most cost effective option.

Nuclear Testing

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions Her Majesty's Government have had with the United States Department of Energy about contamination resulting from the testing of United Kingdom nuclear weapons in Nevada.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We have regular discussions with the United States authorities on all aspects of United Kingdom nuclear tests carried out at the Nevada test site.

Storage Depots

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether arrangements have been made for environmental clean-up at the naval fuel storage depot at (a) Invergordon and (b) Finnart before their closure.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is normal practice for the existence, nature and extent of any contamination to be identified by the MOD prior to the disposal of land. Any decontamination required would either be undertaken by the Department or by the acquiring authority, dependent upon the circumstances of the land disposal.

"Options for Change"

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make it his policy to review the arrangements for financial assistance for serving officers who are required to change uniforms as a result of the implementation of the "Options for Change" proposals;

(2) what contribution will be made to officers of each rank who are required to change regiments as a result of the imlementation of the "Options for Change" proposals in order to enable them to meet the cost of the new uniforms which they will require.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The levels of uniform grants payable on the amalgamation of regiments are currently under consideration. In general officers are expected to meet the costs of maintaining and replacing their uniforms, but those involved in amalgamations will receive a grant to assist with the cost of essential changes in uniform when such new items are not usually provided as a free issue. It is our intention to keep changes in uniform to the minimum, and where possible to allow officers to wear out their existing uniforms.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to review the redundancy arrangements for all serving personnel who are made redundant as a result of the implementation of the "Options for Change" proposals.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No, although we are reviewing arrangements for housing and resettlement.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many junior non-commissioned officers and other ranks with under 12 years' service he expects to be made redundant as a result of the implementation of the "Options for Change" proposals;

(2) if he will give a breakdown by length of service of the average amount of redundancy payment which will be made to junior non-commissioned officers and other ranks made redundant as a result of the implementation of the "Options for Change" proposals before the completion of 12 years' service.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We do not expect that anyone who has served in the Army for less than 12 years will be made redundant in 1992-93.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultation he undertook prior to the setting of the limits upon financial assistance which may be made available to serving officers who are required to change uniforms as a result of the implementation of the "Options for Change" proposals.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No limits have yet been set on the financial assistance which may be made available to officers required to change uniforms as a result of the implementation of "Options for Change". The new uniforms have yet to be agreed, but once this has been done appropriate allowances will be calculated.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has about the current average cost of the uniforms of officers of each rank in each of the regiments which will exist after the implementation of the "Options for Change" proposals.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The uniforms of many of the regiments which will exist after the implementation of "Options for Change" have yet to be determined. As a guide, however, current allowances payable to newly commissioned officers to meet the costs of those uniform items which they are required to purchase from military tailors are set out in the table. These allowances are based on average prices charged by military tailors and their current levels reflect prices notified to the Ministry of Defence in January 1991.

Officers initial outfit allowance

Male officers
Dismounted officers and career officers except as below	1,716
Officers of the Household Cavalry dismounted order	2,617
Officers of the Foot Guards	2,558
Officers of Lowland Regiments	1,901
Officers of Highland Regiments	2,174
Officers of The Royal Tank Regiment, Royal Irish Rangers, Parachute Regiment, Army Air Corps, SAS and Intelligence Corps	1,679
Officers of the Royal Army Chaplains Department (includes rate for special scarf)	1,829
Female officers
Queen Alexandra's Royal Army Nursing Corps (Nursing Officers)	1,628
Non-nursing Officers	1,416
Officers of The Women's Royal Army Corps	1,259
Female direct entry to the Royal Army Medical Corps and Royal Army Dental Corps	2,075
Army Legal Corps	2,453
Royal Army Veterinary Corps	1,985

Notes:

1. These figures do not include officers on probation or Royal Army Medical Corps, Royal Army Dental Corps and Royal Army Veterinary Corps Cadets.
2. Some officers receive an extra £99 for a non-standard pattern Sam Browne/Cross Belt.
3. Officers of the Household Cavalry and King's Troop Royal Horse Artillery on full Mounted Duty receive a further grant of £2,020 on first posting to that duty.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received concerning the redundancy provisions for junior non-commissioned officers and other ranks made redundant as a result of the implementation of the "Options for Change" proposals.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We have received a number of representations about our general plans for redundancies.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many serving officers of each rank will change regiment as a result of the implementation of the "Options for Change" proposals.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It will be some time before this information is available.

Korea (Nuclear Weapons)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the People's Republic of China about assistance by that country to the nuclear weapons programme of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Rabbits

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the legitimate methods available for controlling the rabbit population.

Mr. Gummer: In order to prevent or reduce the damage caused by rabbits a wide range of legitimate control methods are available. These include shooting, gassing, trapping and the use of rabbit-proof fencing. My Department also funds a substantial programme of research into ensuring that controls are available which are not only effective but humane and environmentally safe.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has about the increase in myxomatosis in the rabbit population in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I have no information about the prevalence of myxomatosis in the rabbit population. However, the increasing rabbit population may have led to a greater number of individual rabbits being seen to be affected by the disease, without there necessarily being an increase in the percentage of the population affected.

Milk

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will make a statement on the future of producer-processors in the Pennine villages whose livelihood comes from selling milk and milk products to their local communities;

(2) what is his assessment of the impact on communities of the differential levy on producer-processors;

(3) if he will make a statement on the impact of the levy from the milk marketing board on direct sellers of milk and milk products.

Mr. Curry: Under Community law the milk marketing boards have the exclusive right to purchase from producers in their area milk produced and marketed without processing. Producers may, however, with the agreement of the board, sell their milk direct to consumers or retail outlets subject to the payment of a levy.

The Milk Marketing Board's entitlement to levy producers has been the subject of legal proceedings in which the European Court of Justice confirmed that the board's exclusive rights extended to direct sellers. The High Court subsequently found that the size of the levies was lawful. This judgment is subject to appeal. Change to the present milk marketing arrangements is essential to enable producers and processors to operate more flexibly to meet the needs of consumers and to give full scope to their entrepreneurial talents. The Government are therefore looking to the England and Wales Milk Marketing Board to advance rapidly in discussion with the Dairy Trade Federation its proposals for change to voluntary co-operative status. The process of change must however be orderly. Until new arrangements are introduced the proper and reliable operation of the milk marketing scheme must be sustained and producers will have to operate within its rules.

Set-aside

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will consider introducing a system of nitrogen set-aside, to replace the present arrangement of land set-aside.

Mr. Curry: Limiting nitrogen use is not a cost-effective or practical way of addressing the problem of surplus production under the common agricultural policy. However, rules concerning the quantity and timing of nitrogen fertiliser applications will in due course be introduced in nitrate vulnerable zones, in line with the provisions of the nitrate directive agreed at the Environment Council on 14 June.

Sheep Dips

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has for ending the compulsory dipping of sheep.

Mr. Curry: The compulsory dipping period for 1991 ended at the beginning of this month. Arrangements for 1992 will be considered when the results of this year's dip are available.

Slaughterhouses

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many man years have been used by his staff involved in listing all abattoirs to advise on hygiene and welfare standards in exporting premises for 1990-91 and 1991-92; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Local authorities are responsible for enforcing legislation on hygiene and welfare at abattoirs. Officers of my Department visit all abattoirs to advise on hygiene and welfare standards and, in relation to export-approved red meat premises, to ensure that Community requirements are observed. The manpower involved amounted to 60 man years in 1990-91; the figure for 1991-92 is expected to show an increase over this figure to reflect increased demand for advice on single market requirements.

SCOTLAND

Dogs (Poisoning)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about recent incidents of poisoning of dogs caused by agricultural pesticides in East Lothian.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: On 12 November The Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department (SOAFD) learnt that a number of pet dogs had died or been taken ill apparently after eating blue coloured pellets in Niddrie walkway, Muckletts road, Musselburgh. The total number of reported deaths is seven.

Analysis of the stomach contents of three of the dogs carried out by the Department's scientific staff indicates that they died from metaldehyde poisoning.

The police cordoned off the main extrances to the walkway and warning notices were posted by the environmental health department of East Lothian District Council. SOAFD also issued a notice of requirement under the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 directing the farmer concerned to search for and remove molluscicides from the area and its adjacent boundaries.

A full report on the incident leading to the deaths of the dogs is being prepared and will be submitted shortly to the procurator fiscal.

Higher Education

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the estimate of the funding needed to repair, and bring up to 1990 standards, the fabric and building services of the further education and central institutions in Scotland; and how many of them are now regarded as being in a poor state of repair.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The condition of buildings in the further education sector is a matter for the relevant education authority and in the grant-aided colleges for the board of governors of the college concerned. The Scottish Office Education Department in its allocation of capital expenditure resource to the grant-aided colleges gives priority to proposals aimed at maintaining the physical condition of buildings and services.

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his policy towards mergers between higher education institutions in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The Universities Funding Council will publish later today a report to me by its Scottish Committee entitled "Criteria for Assessing Merger Proposals from Institutions of Higher Education". In my foreword to the report, I have said:

"I am most grateful to Professor Shaw, members of his sub-group and the Scottish Committee of the Universities Funding Council for the very thorough and careful consideration that has gone into their report. I also appreciate the contribution made by the many contributors to the consultation exercise carried out by the Committee.

The report is a valuable and timely landmark in a period of very rapid change in higher education resulting from publication of our White Paper in the Spring and the introduction of the Further and Higher Education (Scotland) Bill earlier this month. In our White Paper, we set out our commitment to continued expansion of higher education to meet the growing demand from all those able to benefit from it. In recent years Scottish higher education institutions have responded very well to the changing demands of students for more courses, delivered in different ways to suit the more diverse nature of the modern student population. In doing so, they have achieved exactly the sort of efficient expansion to which our White Paper referred. There is still scope for yet more such innovation in teaching and administration, and collaboration or even closer association up to and including full institutional merger has a contribution to make to this process.

This report provides an excellent analysis of the factors which higher education managements, staff and students should take into account when considering mergers. It provides what I am certain will become a key reference for all those committed to enhancing and developing further the achievements of Scottish higher education. I commend this report to all those involved who share our commitment to meeting the needs of future generations of students.

I would therefore expect institutions to assess any proposals for merger against the principles and criteria set out in the report; and in considering such proposals I shall look for evidence that this has been done."

A copy of the report will be placed in the House Library.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of students following degree courses in universities and central institutions in Scotland for each of the last five years.

Mr. Lang: The number of students following first degree courses in universities and central institutions is given in the table:

Number of students

Year	Universities		Central Institutions
	Full-time	Part-time	Full-time	Part-time
1986-87	40,541	2,285	14,675	717
1987-88	41,579	2,194	15,278	909
1988-89	42,055	1,814	16,516	1,180
1989-90	44,094	1,655	17,936	1,792
1990-91	46,417	1,277	20,147	2,235

New Legislation

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the proposals in the citizens charter and in the documents the parents charter, the patients charter and the courts charter published by his Department for which new legislation will be required.

Mr. Lang: The following proposals which fall within my responsibilities will require new legislation:

Citizens Charter

(a) to ensure fair competition and extend compulsory competitive tendering to a wider range of local authority services;

(b) to enable the Commission for Local Authority Accounts to require local authorities to publish common standards of performance; and

(c) to require local authorities to consider and respond publicly to auditors reports.

Provisions covering these three proposals are included in the Local Government Bill which was introduced to Parliament on 4 November.

Parents Charter

(i) to publish comparable information about schools in a standard format relating to public examination results, truancy rates, the destination of school leavers and school running costs; and

(ii) to provide for the new pupil report card.

Provisions covering these proposals are included in the Education (Schools) Bill which was introduced to Parliament on 6 November.

School Meals Census

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the results of the annual census of school meals in Scotland held in January 1991; and what were the corresponding 1990 results.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is set out in the table. The number of pupils taking school meals has continued to increase, despite a fall in the number of pupils present on census day. Almost half the pupils present on census day took school meals with an estimated 17 per cent. bringing their own food to school. Free meals formed 31 per cent. of the total meals provided. Cafeteria style meals remain more popular than two course fixed meals although the uptake dropped slightly from 69 per cent. to 67 per cent. of the meals taken.

Education authority schools (including nursery and special schools)

	1991 Number	1991 As percentage of pupils present	1990 Number	1990 As percentage of pupils present
Pupils present on census day	698,554		704,357
Pupils taking school meals
—on payment	230,378	33·0	230,410	32·7
—free	101,915	14·6	99,303	14·1
—total	332,293	47·6	329,713	46·8
Pupils bringing own food on school premises[1]	106,110	16·9	100,469	16·0

[1] Excluding Grampian.

A detailed statement of the returns from education authorities from which these national figures are derived is being placed in the Library.

The following table shows, as a percentage of pupils attending their respective sectors, those primary and secondary pupils taking meals or bringing their own food.

	Primary 1991 per cent.	Primary 1990 per cent.	Secondary 1991 per cent.	Secondary 1990 per cent.
Pupils taking school meals	52·9	52·7	44·2	42·2
Pupils bringing own food[1]	25·0	20·6	6·5	6·1

[1] Excluding Grampian.

Sixty seven per cent. of all meals are of cafeteria style.

	1991 Paid	1991 Free	1991 Total	1991 Percentage of pupils present	1990 Paid	1990 Free	1990 Total	1990 Percentage of pupils present
Pupils taking fixed meals	76,252	33,849	110,101	15·8	71,819	30,019	101,838	14·5
Pupils taking cafeteria meals	154,126	68,066	222,192	31·8	158,591	69,284	227,875	32·4

Recycling

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many outlets there are in Scotland which deal with the recycling of organic effluents for agricultural land.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Scottish Office is not aware of any industrial operations in Scotland, of a significant size, which recycle such effluents for agricultural use. However, the direct application of such effluents to land, for the purpose of fertilising or otherwise beneficially conditioning the land, is a common agricultural practice which might be considered to be a form of recycling.

Hip Replacements

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give figures showing the current waiting lists for hip replacements for each health board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on waiting lists for hip replacement surgery is not collected centrally, but arrangements are in hand to collect this in future in order to monitor the commitments of the patients charter.

Urban Programme

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total of direct grants to voluntary organisations paid by his Department in the latest year for which figures are available together with other payments to voluntary organisations under the urban programme and through other Government agencies.

Mr. Lang: The latest figures available for the total of direct grants to voluntary organisations paid by the Scottish Office including the urban programme and agencies were announced by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 22 March 1991 at columns 237-38.

Citizens Charter

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total amount of planned expenditure funded by his Department for the production, promotion and advertising of the four documents being published in Scotland in connection with the citizens charter.

Mr. Lang: Expenditure on the production, promotion and advertising of the four documents published in Scotland in connection with the citizens charter is estimated at £320,000.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what responsibility the citizens charter advisory panel chaired by Sir James Blyth has for the application of the citizens charter in Scotland; and if Scottish hon. Members will be appointed to that Committee.

Mr. Lang: The citizens charter advisory panel has been appointed by the Prime Minister to advise on the development and application of the citizens charter principles to public services throughout Great Britain. Two of the seven members are Scots. The panel members are appointed on the basis of their professional expertise rather than to represent particular sectional interests.

TRANSPORT

Kent Link

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much money has been approved for re-equipment of the Kent link services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Approval has been given to the following investment in Kent link:

Project	Cost £ million
Initial build of 400 Class 465 Networker vehicles (to make 4-car trains)	297
86 Class 466 Networker vehicles (2-car version of Class 465)	67
A further 188 Class 465 vehicles	127
Infrastructure (including platform lengthening)	120
Total	611

The Government have just increased British Rail's external finance limit for next year by nearly £1 billion to a total of over £2 billion. It is for BR to allocate resources to specific schemes within its external finance limit: that limit is not hypothecated to particular projects.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what safety precautions will be installed on channel tunnel trains to deal with vehicle fires.

Mr. Freeman: The safety precautions required for Eurotunnel's shuttle trains are set out in the report on non-segregation of drivers and passengers from their vehicles, published by the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority in March 1990. The report is available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he intends to make a further statement on the channel tunnel or its associated transport infrastructure before the next meeting of the joint consultative committee in Kent.

Mr. Freeman: If any statement is made on matters of concern to my hon. Friend, I shall write to him.

Rail Line, Cowlairs

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library a copy of the railway inspectorate's provisional approval of the single line chord at Cowlairs, to which he referred in his answer of 7 November, Official Report, column 189.

Mr. Freeman: I have made arrangements for a copy of Her Majesty's railway inspectorate's provisional approval to the single line chord at Cowlairs to be deposited in the Library.

Trains (Ages)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the average age of (a) engines and (b) passenger train units currently in service, excluding InterCity, by British Rail region.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not available by British Rail region. The average ages by sector are as follows:

	Multiple units	Locomotives and loco-hauled stock
Regional railways	16	25
Network SouthEast	19	27

EC Meetings

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the EC Ministerial Council meetings at which his Department has, or will be, represented during November and December.

Mr. Rifkind: Neither I nor my ministerial colleagues have attended any meetings during November. I expect to attend the meeting of the Transport Council to be held in Brussels on 16-17 December.

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list for himself, and for each of the Ministers at his Department, details of (i) the number of visits made during the past month to destinations outside the United Kingdom but within the European Community on official business related to the European Community, (ii) the number of visits made to Brussels within the past month on official business related to the European Community and (iii) the number of nights spent over the past month away from the United Kingdom on official European Community business;

(2) if he will list (i) the number of visits made by officials in his Department during the past month to destinations outside the United Kingdom but within the European Community on official business related to the European Community, (ii) the number of visits made by officials in his Department to Brussels within the past month on official business related to the European Community and (iii) the number of nights spent by officials in his Department over the past month away from the United Kingdom on official European Community business.

Mr. McLoughlin: No. Many of my officials attend EC-related meetings outside the United Kingdom. These are very numerous and the information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Road Haulage

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he proposes any changes to the fees charged to United Kingdom hauliers for international road haulage permits in 1992.

Mr. Chope: I am glad to announce some further fee reductions following the successful negotiation of significant increases in the United Kingdom's bilateral and multilateral quota. This has resulted in greater income from permits without significant increases in costs.

Our success benefits British hauliers twice—first, from the more plentiful supply of permits and, secondly, from the reduction in fees.

The fees will be as follows, with the 1991 charges in brackets:

Single journey permit	£2	(£2)
Multi journey permit for two or more journeys	£1 per journey	(£1)
Annual period permit	£20	(£40)
Three month period permit	£5	(£10)
Multilateral EC/ECMT 3 annual permit	£40	(£80)
Multilateral EC/ECMT 3 month permit	£10	(£20)
Community Removals (annual)	£5	(£25)
Multilateral EC 1 month permit	£5	(£7)
EC 1 month cabotage permit	£5	(£5)

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will announce the outcome of his Department's recent bilateral negotiations on road transport with the Soviet Union and its republics.

Mr. Chope: These negotiations resulted in agreement that road hauliers travelling between the United Kingdom and the Soviet Union and its republics will no longer need to carry permits as from 1 April 1992. We have also reached agreement with Portugal that road hauliers travelling between the United Kingdom and Portugal will no longer need to carry permits from 1 January 1992.

These follow my Department's success in February-March this year in negotiating the ending of permits between the United Kingdom and Hungary and the United Kingdom and Czechoslovakia from 1 January 1992.

Departmental Telephone Calls

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information is available on the number of calls made to directory inquiries from his Department since 1 April 1991.

Mr. McLoughlin: Latest estimates are that about 24,000 calls to directory inquiries are made each year, representing approximately 1·5 calls for each member of staff annually.

Air Pollution

Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he intends to take to combat air pollution caused by road transport.

Mr. Chope [pursuant to the answer, 22 November, Vol. 199, c. 236]: On 1 October the EC Council of Ministers adopted an amending directive 91/542/EEC prescribing stricter limits on the same gaseous emissions from new diesel-engined trucks and buses over 3·5 tonnes. Limits on emissions of particulates are also set for the first time. There will be two stages, the first to take effect in 1992-93 and the second in 1995-96, with the potential for a third, starting in 1999. The 1992-93 stage substantially reduces the limit for emissions of NOx and establishes limits for particulate emissions. The 1995-96 stage goes further with NOx reduction, so that the limit will be less than half its present value, and reduces the particulate limit to a level of stringency similar to that to be applied in the United States from 1994.

Both directives set ambitious targets with a challenging but industrially realistic timetable, putting the United Kingdom and its EC partners on a course for substantial longer-term progress in improving the quality of air in our towns and cities.

Regulations will shortly be laid before Parliament introducing the directives into United Kingdom law.

The Government are also pressing the EC Commission to propose a directive to control CO^2 emissions from motor vehicles using a system of tradeable credits to ensure effective control of this important greenhouse gas.

On 1 November a new MOT emissions check came into effect. If motorists keep their engines in tune, less fuel is burnt and therefore fewer pollutants are emitted. It is expected that the check should improve fuel consumption and hence reduce carbon dioxide emissions by about 4 per cent. averaged over the 16·5 million cars and light vans in the MOT scheme, with substantially larger benefits to carbon monoxide and hydrocarbon emissions.

During 1992 the Government also plan to introduce an instrumented smoke check into the annual test procedure for large goods vehicles and buses.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensions

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the cost of (a) the basic state retirement pension, (b) state earnings-related pension scheme, (c) occupational pensions and (d) personal pensions as a percentage of gross domestic product each year since 1979; and what estimates he makes, stating his assumptions, for 1995, 2005, 2015, 2025 and 2035.

Miss Widdecombe: The cost of basic state retirement pension and the state earnings-related pension scheme as a percentage of gross domestic product from 1978-79 to 1990-91 is given in the table.

Estimates of the cost of basic state retirement pension and SERPS are not available for the future years quoted in the question, but estimates for certain years up to 2050-51 are published in the report by the Government Actuary on the second quinquennial review under section 137 of the Social Security Act 1975, a copy of which is available in the Library.

The Government do not publish assumptions for money GDP for the future years quoted.

Comparable information on the cost to pension providers of occupational and personal pensions is not available.

Carers Charter

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to introduce a carers charter to ensure the mutual financial independence of carers and disabled people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We have no such plans. However, by the end of the year the Benefits Agency plans to publish its own customer charter which will take account of the needs of all its customers. An independent income for carers is provided in the form of invalid care allowance—ICA. More carers are now able to benefit following recent extensions in the provision of attendance allowance, the introduction of a carer premium into the income-related benefits and increases in the ICA earnings limit, from £12 per week prior to April 1990, to £40 from April 1992.

Housing and Mortgage Statistics

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will detail the annual figures for (a) mortgage interest tax relief and (b) housing benefit for the years 1989-90, 1990-91 and the projected figures for 1991-92, respectively.

Miss Widdecombe: The amounts of housing benefit paid to beneficiaries and the tax relief given on mortgage interest in the United Kingdom for the relevant years are shown in the table.

	Housing benefit [1]	Mortgage interest relief £ billion
1989-90	4·3	6·8
1990-91	[2]4·9	[3]7·7
1991-92	[4]5·4	[5]6·1

Notes:

[1] Excludes Rate Rebates and Community Charge Benefit. Includes Rent Rebates and Rent Allowances.

[2] Estimated outturn.

[3] Provisional figure.

[4] Planned expenditure.

[5] Estimated figure based on the assumption that current interest rates are unchanged for the rest of the year.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received about the working of the housing benefit direct payment procedure, particularly with regard to delays in payment and failure by recipients of benefit always to make rental payments; what changes are being considered to the guidance notes to local authorities; and what other measures are being considered.

Miss Widdecombe: Full statutory responsibility for the administration of the housing benefit scheme rests with local authorities, which are required to ensure that the system is working effectively and in accordance with the rules of the scheme. Regulations prescribe that claims should be processed within 14 days of receipt of all the necessary information, or as soon as possible thereafter. Where, through no fault of the applicant, a claim cannot be settled within 14 days, interim payments should be made.

An important principle underlying the social security reforms is that individuals should be encouraged to take responsibility for managing their own affairs. Housing benefit is, therefore, normally paid direct to private tenants in the form of a cash rent allowance to enable them to discharge their liability to their landlord. Nevertheless, regulations do give local authorities wide-ranging powers to pay benefit direct to a tenant's landlord, for example where rent arrears have accrued or where social or medical problems clearly indicate that help with budgeting is needed. A number of representations have been received about local authorities' use of those powers, and the Department therefore intends to issue further guidance on the relevant legislation to authorities in due course.

Disabled People and Carers

Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what, in real terms, is the increase on expenditure on benefits for disabled people and carers since 1979.

Mr. Scott: Total planned expenditure on benefits for disabled people and carers for 1991-92 is £11,950 million —an increase of 152 per cent. in real terms over spending in 1978-79.

Departmental Contracts

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many computer management and consultancy contracts were awarded by his Department in 1991, excluding hardware and software purchases; if he will give the total value of these contracts; how many contracts were subject to competitive tender; and if he will give the value of these contracts.

Miss Widdecombe: Since January 1991 we have awarded 19 such contracts, excluding hardware and software purchases. The total value of the contracts is about £20 million. Eleven were let by competitive tender; the total value of these is about £13·5 million.

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the names of the companies shortlisted for each computer management and computer consultancy contract awarded by his Department in 1991, excluding hardware and software purchases.

Miss Widdecombe: Details of companies shortlisted for computer management and consultancy contracts represents commercial-in-confidence information.

Care Homes

Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will specify the measures being taken to help those in residential care and nursing homes.

Miss Widdecombe: Special higher levels of income support are available to people in residential care and nursing homes towards the cost of their fees. On 21 October, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced proposals for substantial increases, from April 1992, to the limits which apply to people in such homes, including increases of £20 a week for two groups of people —the mentally handicapped and the very dependent elderly—and £15 to almost all the other limits.

From April 1993, new arrangements will be implemented as part of the Government's community care policy for the assessment and provision of care for such people. This will improve the effectiveness and targeting of the resources.

Contributions Agency

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the powers available to inspectors at the Contributions Agency relating to entry of premises, seizure and inspection of documents; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The agency's inspectors have powers relating to entry of premises and inspection of documents to ensure that the Acts and regulations are complied with. The relevant legislation is contained in section 58 of the Social Security Act, 1986, and regulation 32 of the Social Security (Contributions) Regulations 1979 which is summarised as follows:—

Certified inspectors are empowered to:

(1) enter at all reasonable times any premises where persons are employed or from where any agency or business is being conducted.

(2) require information to be provided by individuals and inspect any records to ensure that the provisions of the Social Security and related Acts are being complied with.

The regulations require employers to produce wages sheets and other records relating to the calculation of payment of emoluments, and that such documents should be kept by employers for not less than three years after the end of the year to which they relate. The vast majority of inquiries carried out by the agency are completed in an effective and businesslike manner, without recourse to these powers which are normally used as a last resort.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Fire Stations

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals there are to (a) refurbish existing fire stations and (b) to build purpose-built fire stations in Northern Ireland; and what is the proposed start date for each project.

Mr. Needham: The Fire Authority for Northern Ireland's current works programme does not include any projects for refurbishing existing fire stations. It does, however, make provision for the following purpose-built fire stations:

Location	Proposed start date 1992
Glengormley	January
Crossmaglen	February
Carryduff	November

In addition the authority will be providing prefabricated buildings for new retained fire stations at Dromore, Co. Tyrone and Ballywalter, Co. Down. The proposed start dates for these are February 1992 and June 1992 respectively.

Departmental Telephone Calls

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information is available on the number of calls made to directory inquiries from his Department since 1 April 1991.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is not available.

Belfast Prison

Mr. Fishburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects to identify the senior figure who will carry out an inquiry into prisoner management at Her Majesty's prison Belfast.

Mr. Brooke: I am glad to say that Viscount Colville of Culross, QC has agreed to undertake this important task, with the following terms of reference:

To review the operational policy in Belfast Prison for the management of paramilitary prisoners from opposing factions; and to make recommendations.

Lord Colville will begin work immediately and I expect to receive his report early in the new year.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if it remains his policy that the agreed budgetary guidelines for the common agricultural policy must be observed; and if he will make it his policy to veto any proposals at the Council of Ministers which would lead to those guidelines being breached.

Mr. Curry: The Commission is legally bound to keep agricultural support expenditure within the guideline, the base level of which can be changed only by unanimity. The Government remain committed to ensuring that the cost of agricultural support is contained within the existing budgetary guidelines.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the amount in pounds spent on each agricultural product under the CAP in 1990.

Mr. Gummer: Expenditure on agricultural commodities under the European Agricultural Guidance and Guarantee Fund guarantee section in 1990, is given in the table.

Departmental Telephone Calls

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information is available on the number of calls made to directory inquiries from his Department since 1 April 1991.

Mr. Curry: This information is not held centrally, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Agricultural Support

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the amounts in ecu spent on non-CAP agricultural support for each EC country for 1989, 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Gummer: The Government monitor, through their embassies in member states, the introduction of new state aids and modifications to existing aids, and draw any that seem to be of doubtful legality to the attention of the Commission. The Government do not keep comprehensive details of the non-CAP agricultural expenditure in other member states, since to do so would not be a cost-effective use of resources.

Milk Quotas

Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many disputed milk quota exceptional hardship claims were taken to judicial review following consideration by the diary produce tribunal for England and Wales; in how many of those claims the courts referred the cases back to the tribunal for reconsideration; what was the total litreage of quota at issue in these cases; and what was the actual additional litreage allocated to the producers concerned.

Mr. Curry: There have been eight judicial reviews of decisions of the dairy produce quotas tribunal relating to quota claims on the grounds of exceptional hardship, as defined in paragraph 17 of part II to schedule 2 of the Dairy Produce Quotas Regulations 1984 and 1986. Of these, four claims were referred back to the tribunal for re-hearing. These re-hearings resulted in tribunal awards of quota totalling just over 1 million litres. Claimants were not required, under the provisions of the regulations, to state the litreage of quota which they considered to be at issue in that case. It is my understanding that none of the four had been awarded exceptional hardship quota in their original tribunal hearing, although two had been given primary quota awards which together totalled over 3 million litres.

Fisheries Council

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the outcome of the EC Council of Fisheries Ministers meeting on 28 October 1991.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to the reply, 6 November 1991, c. 163-64.]: I very much welcome the decision by the Japanese Government to ban large-scale high seas drift netting by the end of December 1992, with an interim step halving the use of such nets by the end of June 1992. This is a major step forward in protecting dolphins and other small cetaceans. It is particularly significant as it comes shortly after the European Community's own decision, for which we pressed hard, to stop the development of large-scale indiscriminate drift netting.

These decisions give clear notice to the world that the major fishing nations are not going to allow the development or expansion of such fisheries.

I am delighted at the news that the UN resolution calling for a moratorium on large-scale drift netting is having a clear effect. Britain continues to be determined to protect small cetaceans.

ENERGY

Departmental Telephone Calls

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information is available on the number of calls made to directory inquiries from his Department since 1 April 1991.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My Department does not hold this information.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Asylum Bill

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding the Asylum Bill.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Since July we have received approximately 200 letters from hon. Members forwarding correspondence from their constituents and about 820 letters from members of the public. A large proportion of these have been pro forma letters from members of organisations such as Amnesty International, Charter '87, A Charter for Refugees, and the Asylum Rights Campaign. The majority of correspondents have expressed opposition to one or more aspects of the Government's proposals.

Metropolitan Police (Compensation Awards)

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many members of the public have received awards from the Metropolitan police following civil actions brought by them for assault, wrongful arrest, false imprisonment or malicious prosecution in each year since 1985, inclusive; and what has been the total amount of such awards in each of those years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is not held in the form requested. However, I understand from the commissioner that the amounts paid by the Metropolitan police under awards made by the courts and out-of-court settlements arising from allegations of wrongful acts, including assault, wrongful arrest, false imprisonment and malicious prosecution by Metropolitan police officers, and the number of plaintiffs who have received awards and settlements are as follows:

Year	Awards made by the court £	Number of plaintiffs in receipt of awards	Out of court settlements £	Number of plaintiffs in receipt of settlements

Tamils

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the number in each of the last five years of Sri Lankan Tamils deported from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information available relates to all Sri Lankan citizens deported and is given in the table. No distinction is made in statistical records between Tamils and other Sri Lankans.

Terrorists

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Irish (a) men and (b) women serving prison sentences in the United Kingdom for terrorist activities have been transferred to prisons in Northern Ireland or Eire in each of the last five years.

Mrs. Rumbold: It is not possible to transfer prisoners from the United Kingdom to the Republic of Ireland because the latter has not ratified the Council of Europe convention on the transfer of sentenced persons.

Information on the number of prisoners transferred from England and Wales to Northern Ireland is given in the table. Statistics are not collated on the basis of the prisoner's nationality, sex or offence. The transfer of prisoners from Scotland to Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Vehicle Security

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will report on the progress of his talks with car manufacturers concerning the provision of security systems in cars; if he will make such provision compulsory in new vehicles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: At a seminar on crime prevention chaired by the then Prime Minister in 1986, it was agreed that the British Standards Institution and the motor vehicle manufacturers should produce a performance based standard on car security. A five-part standard—BS AU209—was subsequently published, covering mechanical locking systems, in-car entertainment equipment, window etching, central power locking and deadlocking.

My right hon. Friend is engaged in a series of meetings with the motor vehicle manufacturers to encourage them to adopt these standards for all new cars. Many manufacturers have already made significant improvements in security, but there is still much more that can be done. My right hon. Friend and I will meet the manufacturers again on 11 December to discuss their progress.

It would be a breach of European Community law for the Government to introduce separate national legislation on vehicle security since this would constitute a technical barrier to trade with member states. It was, however, agreed at the seminar on crime prevention in 1986 that the Department of Transport would seek to have the British standard on vehicle security adopted as an EC directive. That Department, with the support of the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders, is continuing to take this matter forward in the motor vehicles working group of the European Commission; its efforts have my full support and that of my right hon. Friend.

Italian Prisoners

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Italian citizens are currently serving sentences in United Kingdom prisons; how many such citizens have been permitted to return home to serve their sentences in Italian prisons; how many have applied to do so; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: On 30 June 1991, the latest date for which information is readily available, about 45 sentenced prisoners in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales were recorded as Italian citizens. Repatriations of prisoners are possible under the European convention on the transfer of sentenced persons provided the prisoner and both countries concerned consent. The Italian Government ratified the convention in October 1989, since when 26 Italian prisoners have asked to be repatriated. In five cases the application has been withdrawn or the prisoner released. In two cases the request has been refused. The remaining 19 cases are outstanding.

Primates Register

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to secure the establishment of a European primate register to conserve stocks of non-human primates used in scientific procedures.

Mrs. Rumbold: Effective measures to conserve stocks of non-human primates are clearly desirable. We are aware of an initiative from the Primate Society of Great Britain in this area and of continuing interest in such a scheme within Europe. The United Kingdom will play its full part in giving thorough consideration to any formal proposals which emerge.

Vehicle Theft Statistics

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a table showing (a) the variety of non-custodial sentences given for the offence of taking a vehicle without consent for the years 1980-88 and (b) a breakdown of custodial and non-custodial sentences for the above offence for 1989 and 1990.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is given in the tables. 1990 data are not yet available.

Television (Sponsorship)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage and type of television programmes will be allowed sponsorship by commercial companies; and what safeguards exist to prevent sponsors from influencing the quality and control of programmes.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Under the Independent Televison Commission code of programme sponsorship, any television programme may be sponsored, except news and current affairs. No sponsor is permitted any influence on either the content or the scheduling of a programme.

Animals (Scientific Procedures)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the numbers of primates used in scientific procedures in Great Britain and in Northern Ireland which were wild-caught and captive bred, respectively, in each year from 1981 to the current year.

Mrs. Rumbold: Statistics about the origin of primates held or used are not kept centrally. The number of scientific procedures performed on primates in Great Britain for the years 1981 to 1990 is given in table 18 of "Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals, Great Britain 1990", Cm. 1574, a copy of which is in the Library. In Northern Ireland only two scientific procedures were performed on primates over the period 1981 to 1990.

Departmental Telephone Calls

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information is available on the number of calls made to directory inquiries from his Department since 1 April 1991.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: This information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Crossbows

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many adults and children have been (a) killed and (b) injured in each of the last five years in incidents arising from the firing of crossbows in (i) public and (ii) private places.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of currently recorded homicide offences where the death resulted from the firing of a crossbow for the years 1986 to 1990 are as follows: 1986 nil, 1987 one, 1988 one, 1989 nil, 1990 three—two in one incident. All the victims were adults. It is not known whether the incidents occurred in public or private places. No information is available on the number of accidental deaths involving crossbows nor on incidents involving injuries whether criminal or accidental.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the latest estimate of the number of crossbows within the United Kingdom; what existing laws cover the purchase and use of crossbows; and what representations he has received from the police and others about new laws covering the use of crossbows, including licensing the ownership of crossbows.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information about the number of crossbows in the United Kingdom is not recorded centrally, but I understand from Barnett International, the largest manufacturer of crossbows in the United Kingdom, that its latest estimate of the number of crossbows in circulation is between 250,000 and 300,000.

The Crossbows Act 1987 prohibits the sale of crossbows to, and their purchase by, persons under the age of 17. The Act also makes it an offence for a person under 17 to have a crossbow in his possession, unless under the supervision of someone aged 21 or over. There are a number of other measures that bear upon crossbow misuse against people, property or animals. These include the Prevention of Crime Act 1953, Offences Against the Person Act 1861, the Criminal Damage Act 1971, the Protection of Animals Act 1911, the Wildlife and Countryside act 1981 and the Deer Act 1963.

We have received no representations from the police on crossbow controls since the passage of the Crossbows Act 1987.

In the last 12 months there has been one parliamentary question on crossbow controls. We have also received 21 items of correspondence on this issue from Members of Parliament and six letters from the public broadly favouring some form of further control.

Greyhound Racing

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will ask the Office of Fair Trading to consider the competitive aspects of bookmaker-owned greyhound tracks supplying races to the bookmaker afternoon greyhound service.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. Anyone who believes that they have evidence of anti-competitive behaviour should report the matter to the Office of Fair Trading.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will bring forward proposals for legislation to put greyhound racing on a par with horse racing; and what plans he has to treat the two industries equally, with regard to off-course betting.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government's views on the need for legislation to amend the law on betting on greyhound racing were set out in our recent reply—Cm 1757—to the Home Affairs Committee's report "Financing of Greyhound Racing"—HC 463.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the statutes which control the staging of greyhound racing, greyhound totalisators and on-course betting on greyhound tracks.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The statutory controls on betting at greyhound tracks are contained in the Betting, Gaming and Lotteries Act 1963, as amended. Further regulations governing the operation of totalisators at greyhound tracks are contained in two statutory instruments made under the 1963 Act. These are the Dog Racecourse Totalisator Regulations 1967, as amended, and the Dog Racecourse Totalisator (Percentage) Order 1980. The Dog Racecourse Totalisator (Percentage) Order 1991 was published on 22 November, and comes into force on 20 December.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Office of Fair Trading considered the competitive aspects of bookmaker-owned greyhound tracks supplying racing to the bookmaker afternoon greyhound service; how long the inquiry took; and who supplied information to the inquiry.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that the Office of Fair Trading's informal inquiries are made under section 2(2) of the Fair Trading Act 1973, which imposes on the Director-General of Fair Trading a duty to keep commercial activities under review and to collect information with a view to his becoming aware of monopoly situations or uncompetitive practices. The OFT has considered whether the ownership of greyhound tracks by off-course bookmakers raises concerns under the competition legislation, but to date no evidence has been received to suggest formal action is warranted. Details of information collected by the OFT are subject to confidentiality requirements, particularly section 133 of the Fair Trading Act 1973, and cannot therefore be disclosed.

Young Offenders

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) in what circumstances teenagers are placed in young offender institutions for non-violent offences; and whether he has any plans to end this practice;

(2) under what circumstances it is his policy for persons aged 15 years to be locked up in prisons or young offenders' institutions; and whether he has any plans to end this policy;

(3) from what age young people who have committed offences can be dealt with through the prison system;

(4) if he will bring forward proposals to remove persons under the age of 21 years from the prison system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: From the age of 10, juveniles convicted of murder or manslaughter may be detained under section 53 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933. Section 53 detention is available from the age of 14 for juveniles convicted of other offences carrying a maximum penalty for an adult of imprisonment for 14 years or more. Juveniles aged under sixteen and a half years who are detained under section 53 are normally held in the child care system rather than Prison Service establishments. Detention in a young offender institution is available for males from the age of 14 and females from the age of 15 for any offence for which an adult may be sentenced to imprisonment. Male defendants aged 15 and 16 may be remanded in prison. The Criminal Justice Act 1991 provides for the abolition of courts' power to sentence 14-year-old boys to detention in a young offender institution; for the ending of prison remands for 15 and 16-year-old males: and tightens the restrictions on the use of custodial sentences for young offenders.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what steps he intends to take to prevent suicides at Feltham and other young offenders' institutes;

(2) what plans he has for a public inquiry into the suicide rate at young offenders' institutions.

Mrs. Rumbold: Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons, Judge Tumim, prepared at my right hon. Friend's predecessor's request last year a report on suicide and self-harm in Prison Service establishments. My right hon. Friend responded to that report in the White Paper

"Custody, Care and Justice", Cm 1647. We have also received, and circulated to all governors, the summary report of research carried out by Dr. Alison Liebling of the Cambridge university institute of criminology into self-injury among young offenders. A wide-ranging programme of work is in hand to try to reduce the incidence of suicide and self-harm in young offender institutions and other penal establishments. In work with young offenders, the emphasis is on the development of personal officer schemes, the provision of useful activity and measures to address problems of vulnerability and peer group pressure. A recent initiative at Feltham, which I welcome, has been the introduction of weekly case conferences to review the care of the most vulnerable prisoners.

I do not think that a public inquiry into the suicide rate at young offender institutions would materially advance the substantial efforts already being made at Feltham and elsewhere to provide care for a particularly vulnerable section of the prison population.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for how many hours a day he advises that teenagers should be kept in solitary confinement in prisons or young offenders' institutions.

Mrs. Rumbold: There is no such thing as solitary confinement in prisons or young offenders' institutions. However, an inmate may be removed from association with other inmates where this appears desirable either for the maintenance of good order or discipline, or in his own interests, under young offender institution rule 46 or prison rule 43. The length of time for which an inmate is removed from association will depend on the circumstances of each case. No inmate should be segregated for longer than is absolutely necessary. Each case must be kept under continuous review.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to provide alternatives to custodial sentences for young offenders.

Mr. John Patten: A wide range of community sentences already exists for young offenders. The emphasis is on dealing with young offenders in the community wherever possible. The Criminal Justice Act 1991 establishes a new sentencing framework providing courts with a wider range of strengthened community penalties. The Act creates two new community sentences—the curfew order backed by electronic monitoring and the combined probation and community service order—which will be available from the age of 16.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what investigation he has made into the psychological effect on persons under the age of 16 years of being held in young offender institutions and being held for long periods in solitary confinement in cells; and whether he has any plans to make further investigations.

Mrs. Rumbold: An assessment of how young offenders adjust to a custodial environment was the subject of one of the studies in "Applying Psychology to Imprisonment", published in 1987. A further research study was completed this year, which compares regimes in young offender institutions and local authority community homes for juveniles sentenced under section 53(2) of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 for serious offences.

Research has also recently been undertaken by Dr. Alison Liebling of the Cambridge university institute of criminology, into self-injury among young offenders. The need for further research in this area is kept under regular review.

Visas

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average length of time now being taken between the receipt of interview notes from the United Kingdom high commission in New Delhi by his Department concerning an application for leave to enter by the fiancé of a British citizen and the calling of the fiancé for interview here.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The current average response time for all interview cases referred from India is 75 days; the period is from the receipt of the papers in this country until the dispatch of a report to the post. Separate information on particular categories of cases is not available centrally.

Gambling

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effect the evening opening of betting shops will have on the level of gambling in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No such assessment has yet been made. The effect of evening opening of licensed betting offices on levels of gambling is one of the matters on which the recent Home Office consultation document invited views from interested parties. Evidence received about the effect on levels of gambling will be one of the factors taken into account in the Government's further consideration of whether to allow evening opening.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy on gambling as it relates to horse racing and greyhound racing.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is Government policy on gambling, including betting on horseracing and greyhound racing, that it should be subject to statutory control to ensure that it is conducted honestly and fairly, and that gambling should not be positively encouraged.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Home Office began its review of section 19 of the Betting, Gaming and Lotteries Act 1963; and how long he expects the review to take.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The review has not yet begun. It will be undertaken as quickly as possible, but the issues are complex and it is not clear at this stage how long it will take to complete.

Football (Policing)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce a pricing policy for the policing of football matches based upon club attendance levels and past records of incidents.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Charges made by police authorities for the policing of football matches under section 15 of the Police Act 1964 reflect the number of officers deployed.

Home Office circular 36/1991 encouraged chief officers to discuss deployment with football clubs, taking account of all relevant factors, but ultimately it must be for the chief officer to decide how many officers need to be deployed on each occasion.

Small Shops

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any proposals to remove the threat of prosecution from small local shops which have traditionally opened late in the evening and on Sundays to sell their full product range; and what representations he has had from the Greek Cypriot and other ethnic minority communities on this subject.

Mrs. Rumbold: The institution of proceedings for breaches of the Shops Act 1950 is a matter for local authorities. Proposals for extended evening shop trading hours, and for small local shops to trade fully on Sundays, are among those which have been put to me in my discussions with numerous interest groups about reform of the Act. Records of our correspondents on these proposals are not classified by ethnic community.

Urban Crime

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he intends to take to deal with urban crime.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I am launching today a new initiative: the urban crime fund. This will provide targeted additional funds to selected forces on an experimental basis. Merseyside, Northumbria and West Yorkshire will each be eligible for additional funding in 1992-93 of up to some £3·6 million.

The additional funding—made available direct to police authorities through the Government's urban programme—will be targeted on the inner cities, including city challenge areas. This demonstrates the Government's commitment to a co-ordinated attack on inner city problems in partnership with local authorities, the private sector and local communities.

The three police authorities will be invited to put proposals to me on how they would use the extra resources. I will be looking particularly for effective and innovative measures, including the mobilisation of local communities, in the fight against urban crime.

Racial Hatred

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his evaluation of the effectiveness of the law making it a criminal offence to incite racial hatred.

Mrs. Rumbold [holding answer 21 November 1991]: The Government deplore any act likely or intended to stir up racial hatred. We believe that part III of the Public Order Act 1986 has played an important part in deterring such acts. We shall continue to keep the legislation and its operation under review.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Off-Balance Sheet Financing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any plans to introduce legislation under which banks will be prevented from selling off-balance sheet financing schemes.

Mr. Maples: I have no such plans.

British Telecom

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if any institution which provided a presentation for becoming a retail outlet in the BT share sale was rejected.

Mr. Maude: The Government selected eight organisations to act as share shops in the sale of shares in BT plc from among the various proposals received.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those institutions which made presentations with regard to the second BT share offer, in response to his invitation.

Mr. Maude: It is for the organisations concerned to disclose whether they made a submission in response to the Chancellor's invitation in his Budget speech for proposals from private sector organisations for a high street share dealing network.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what criteria were used to evaluate the eight retail institutions' ability to undertake at relatively short notice the sale of BT shares, referred to in his answer of 22 October 1991, Official Report, column 505.

Mr. Maude: The Government's objective was a network of share shops which, together, could respond to the high volumes of a public share sale while giving the public a choice of institutions. This was achieved with the selection of the eight firms who are participating in the BT share sale. The Government intend to build on these arrangements in future public share sales.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those institutions which wrote to his Department stating an interest with regard to the second BT share offer but did not make a presentation.

Mr. Maude: The proposals received from organisations in response to the Government's share shops initiative ranged widely in the extent of detail in which they were made.

Life Assurance and Pension Payments

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of expenditure of total disposable household income was accounted for by life assurance and pension fund payments in 1990; and what is the estimated percentage level for the current year.

Mr. Maples: Household disposable income, and hence expenditure of that income, excludes amounts paid as pension contributions, whether to the state scheme or to occupational schemes. Contributions to the latter type of scheme, together with life assurance premiums paid by individuals, are estimated to have amounted in 1990 to 7·6 per cent. of households' current expenditure. The latter aggregate has been adjusted to include the occupational scheme contributions. There is no official estimate of this percentage in 1991.

Contributions to the state scheme are intended to fund social security benefits of all types and no estimate is made of the proportion which notionally finances state pensions.

EC Membership

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish the effect of EC membership to date on the United Kingdom balance of payments in terms of 1990 prices and on the United Kingdom rate of economic growth forecast by Her Majesty's Treasury in Cmnd. 4289 together with (a) the actual average per capita rate of growth from 1973 to 1990 and comparable data for the decade ending in 1973 and (b) the average non-oil balance of payments surplus or deficit with the EEC Six and with other countries in each period in terms of 1990 prices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maples: It is not possible to produce reliable estimates of the effects of EC membership on the United Kingdom balance of payments or on the rate of economic growth. Data requested on the growth of GDP per capita can be derived from statistics published by the Central Statistical Office in "Economic Trends Annual Supplement", 1990 edition, and on trade balances with the EC Six and other countries from the CSO's "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics Annual Supplement 1991".

Town and Country Building Society

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make a statement on the affairs of the Town and Country building society.

Mr. Maples: The Woolwich building society issued a press release on 19 November stating that the board of the Town and Country building society had agreed to recommend to its members a transfer of the society's engagements to the Woolwich building society and that arrangements for the transfer, subject to audit and to regulatory and other relevant requirements, were accordingly proceeding.

TESSAs

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take steps to remind banks and building societies of the specification of section 4 of S.I. 2361/1990 that tax-exempt special savings accounts must be transferable from one society or institution to another society or institution.

Mr. Maude: There is no need, since there is no evidence to suggest that institutions are not allowing savers to transfer their TESSAs elsewhere.

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Gloucester, 13 November, Official Report, column 526, if he will review the extent to which TESSA issuers are departing from the aims of TESSAs, as stated in the 1990 Budget, by levying penalties for withdrawing interest.

Mr. Maude: The TESSA rules specify the maximum amount of interest which may be withdrawn without loss of tax exemption. Within those limits, the terms under which withdrawals may be made are a matter for agreement between investors and operators.

EC (Government Debt)

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will list the unfunded maintenance backlog liability on public sector capital assets by member state of the EC and the effect such unfunding has on the calculation of each member state's Government debt as set out in the draft treaty on economic and monetary union;

(2) if he will list the unfunded nuclear reactor decommissioning liability by member state of the EC and the effect such unfunding has on the calculation of each member state's Government debt as set out in the draft treaty on economic and monetary union;

(3) if he will list the notionally funded and unfunded public sector employees pensions liability by member states of the EC and the effect such unfunding has on the calculation of each member state's Government debt as set out in the draft treaty on economic and monetary union.

Mr. Maude: Standard definitions of Government debt measure the cumulative liability incurred on past borrowing, which accords with the common usage of the term "debt". They do not include any measure of unfunded liabilities. The requested data on unfunded liabilities are not readily available.

Single Currency

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state the present and future implications for the United Kingdom Budget of proposals for a single currency in the draft treaty on economic and monetary union as a result of different methods of accounting for liabilities in each member state's national accounts.

Mr. Maude: National accounting conventions in other EC member states have no obvious implications, either now or in the future, for United Kingdom budgetary policy.

Company Cars

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a further statement on the Government's policy regarding the taxation of company cars and on the increase in the taxation of company cars which has taken place since 1979.

Mr. Maude: The Government's policy is that, so far as possible, there should be broad neutrality in the tax treatment of remuneration paid in cash and in kind. In keeping with that policy, the aim has been to ensure that, as regards cars provided to employees by employers, the statutory income tax scale charges realistically reflect the value of the benefit of a car's availability for private use. That has involved substantial increases in the level of the scales since 1979.

The scale charges and the total tax burden on the car industry are of course kept under close review.

Friendly Societies Bill

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he intends to introduce a new Friendly Societies Bill.

Mr. Maples: The Government remain firmly committed to this legislation and we will introduce the Bill at the earliest opportunity.

Departmental Telephone Calls

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information is available on the number of calls made to directory inquiries from his Department.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Call-logging information for the three buildings in which my right hon. Friend's department is the major occupier shows that 620 calls were made to directory inquiries in October 1991.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

India

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what present aid projects exist in India; and if he will list them.

Mrs. Chalker: Projects in India receiving British bilateral aid at present are as follows:

A. Bilateral country programme financing
Visakhapatnam slum improvement
Hyderabad slum improvement
Indore slum improvement
Calcutta slum improvement
Vijayawada slum improvement
Training and study tours in Aslum improvement
Indo-British Fertiliser Education

This list of joint funding scheme—JFS—projects in India is incomplete. Agencies which receive block grants from the joint funding scheme have yet to notify us of all the projects which they are implementing, this year. For example, OXFAM which used joint funding scheme resources for about 200 projects in India has yet to notify us of its allocations for 1991-92. Other agencies are also likely to add to their list of projects financed from JFS resources.

D. Commonwealth Development Corporation—Projects include:

Project	Activity
Andhra Petrochemicals Ltd	Oxo-alcohols production
Apollo Tyres Ltd	Tyre production
Asian Coffee Ltd	Soluble-coffee factory
Biax Packaging Ltd	Polypropylene film

Project	Activity
Consolidated Fibres and Chemicals Ltd	Acrylic fibre production

Ethiopia

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what aid is being given to, or is under consideration for, Ethiopia in (a) getting relief aid to those in need, (b) stimulating food production and (c) respect for human rights.

Mrs. Chalker: Including our share of EC assistance we have committed £53 million emergency aid to Ethiopia since September 1990. Our aid includes £6·2 million for road transport, airlifts and other infrastructure essential for getting relief to the needy.

We are financing the following projects aimed at stimulating food production.

Project/Programme	Description/Aims
Teff Research	Collaborative research to improve varieties of Teff.
Rainfall Monitoring	Rainfall and crop development estimation and monitoring systems.
Sidamo Rangelands	Improved food security for ten local communities in South Sidamo; managed by CARE.
Koisha Rural Development	Increase food production and strengthen rural economy in Koisha region of Sidamo; managed by SOS-Sahel.
Land Use—Western Hararghe	Introduce sustainable system of land use for 17,000 families in Western Hararghe; managed by CARE.
Dairy Goat Project	Increase rural incomes by improving the productivity of dairy goats managed by women; managed by FARM Africa.
Projects funded under the Joint Funding Scheme
Action Aid (Small Scale Seed Production)	Develop economically viable and sustainable small scale seed enterprises.
Catholic Fund for Overseas Development (Rural Development)	To increase productive capacity of land.
OXFAM (Delanta Agriculture)	To promote post drought agricultural rehabilitation and prevent environmental degradation of the land.
OXFAM (Hararghe Agricultural)	Construct a new seed store and to replace seed stocks lost in the drought.
Projects funded under emergency relief aid
Christian Aid	Agricultural tools for Ethiopia.

We have made clear to the Ethiopians the importance we attach to respect for human rights. We are considering what help we might give for this and other aspects of good government.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current level of aid to Ethiopia; what was the level in each of the last 10 years at current prices; and what plans he has to increase the level of aid before 1993.

Mrs. Chalker: In 1991 we have committed over £26 million bilateral emergency assistance to Ethiopia including 79,000 tonnes of food. We expect to continue to respond generously to meet emergency needs. Our development programme for 1991 is worth about £3·5 million.

Between 1981 and 1990 the United Kingdom provided bilateral aid—development and emergency assistance—to Ethiopia as follows:

Year	Total (£,000)	Total at constant 1990 prices (£,000)
1981	563	941
1982	5,645	8,769
1983	3,433	5,068
1984	7,004	9,884
1985	28,058	37,446
1986	9,627	12,409
1987	8,552	11,399
1988	18,544	21,324
1989	11,691	12,570
1990	20,042	20,042

As to future levels of development aid, I refer to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins) on 25 November, at column 388.

UNICEF

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what financial pledge was made by the United Kingdom in support of the United Nations children's fund at the New York pledging conference on 5-6 November; what proportion of the total funds available to UNICEF for 1992 will be provided by the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement on the future of UNICEF in the light of its funding base.

Mrs. Chalker: In common with most other major donors we have not yet announced our pledge for UNICEF's 1992 programme. I expect to do so early next year.

Over recent years UNICEF has acquired a very strong funding base and the current pattern seems likely to continue, but, for the reasons I have given, the total amounts available in 1992 are not yet known.

WALES

Surgical Procedures

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the impact of new health technology on surgical procedures and treatments in Welsh hospitals.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The NHS in Wales continually assesses the costs and benefits of new health technology.

As part of this process, in 1990 the Welsh health planning forum commissioned an expert report on the possible impact of emerging and future technologies on the delivery of health care. It was circulated widely and prompted a useful debate between scientists, clinicians and managers in NHS Wales.

Building on this, the planning forum, in partnership with the World Health Organisation and the King's Fund college, held a conference in Cardiff in October this year focusing on the potential for shifting care from the hospital to the home. It brought together international experts and raised awareness of technology's potential for creating a more people-centred and community-based health care service.

The conference pointed up the opportunities for de-institutionalising health care in an environment where before too long perhaps up to 60 per cent. of surgery will be performed on a day basis with over 80 per cent. being bloodless.

The use of endoscopy is transforming clinical practice in the fields of gynaecology, orthopaedic and general surgery. Endoscopes are flexible tubes used to examine, photograph and take biopsies from the body's cavities and organs without the trauma of surgery, and often while the patient is conscious.

Similarly, lasers have superseded some more traditional surgical approaches to treating skin, eye and gynaecological disorders and a wide range of other conditions.

In addition, new techniques commonly referred to as key-hole surgery are becoming widely used. Laparoscopic cholycystectomies—lap-cholies—are replacing open abdomen gall stone operations. In the field of orthopaedic surgery, a damaged knee cartilage can be removed without opening the knee joint. Recovering from these operations is much quicker than the earlier kind and people do not need to stay in hospital so long. Some coronary artery bypass surgery can be avoided by using balloon angiography. This technique passes a balloon into the artery in a catheter. The balloon is then inflated to enlarge the artery, remove blockages and allow the blood to flow freely.

These and similar developments are having a profound effect on the size and nature of our hospitals. What counts is not hospital bed numbers but providing people with the right services in the right settings.

Sports Council

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the amounts of grant he has given the Sports Council for Wales, in real terms, for each of the years 1980 to 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The grant in aid allocations to the Sports Council for Wales for the years 1980-81 to 1991-92 adjusted by the gross domestic product—market prices—deflator at 1990-91 prices, are as follows:

	£ million
1980-81	4·176
1981-82	4·297
1982-83	4·482
1983-84	4·143
1984-85	4·058
1985-86	4·529
1986-87	4·852
1987-88	4·726
1988-89	4·788
1989-90	4·769
1990-91	4·782
1991-92	4·860

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of farms currently covered by environmentally sensitive area agreements in Wales are subject to whole farm agreements.

Mr. David Hunt: Farmers who choose to join the Lleyn peninsula environmentally sensitive area scheme must enter all their land into the scheme; all farms in the scheme are therefore covered by whole farm agreements. In the Cambrian mountains ESA, it is only that area of the farm which is classed as semi-natural rough grazing which has to be entered and, optionally, woodland and hay meadows. In consequence, none of the ESA agreements in the Cambrian mountains scheme cover the whole farm.

Ministers (Travel)

Mr. Grist: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many miles he and his Ministers have travelled on British Rail during the course of their official duties during the last year.

Mr. David Hunt: In excess of 50,000 miles.

Regional Selective Assistance

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those companies in the Wrexham area which have qualified for regional selective assistance in the last five years.

Mr. David Hunt: Details of offers of regional selective assistance are confidential to the company and the Welsh Office. The following information relates to accepted offers of assistance by companies for projects in the Wrexham travel-to-work-area over the last five years which have received publicity.

Local Government

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received regarding the proposed changes to the structure of local government in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: My right hon. Friend has received responses to his consultation paper from both Welsh local authority associations; from each Welsh county council and district council; from individual community councils, and their representative bodies; from a number of professional bodies and societies; and from many individuals, including several Members of Parliament. The vast majority of these responses express support for the establishment of a system of unitary authorities in Wales.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the present level of unemployment in the Clwyd, South-West constituency.

Mr. David Hunt: On 10 October 1991 there were 2,314 unemployed claimants in the Clwyd, South-West parliamentary constituency.

Valleys Loan Scheme

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many loans under the valleys loan scheme have been made to date; what is the total value of such loans; how many jobs they have created or safeguarded; and how many of the recipient firms are still in business.

Mr. David Hunt: Since 1 April 1988, a total of 178 loans have been placed by the Welsh Development Agency to companies in the valleys programme area. The total value of these loans was just over £1·5 million with an expectation that 799 new jobs would be created. One hundred and twenty-seven—71 per cent.—are in place, with a projection of creating over 550 new jobs and a value of £1·2 million. These figures include loans made under the valleys small loan scheme, the valleys enterprise loan scheme and the rural small loan scheme.

Valleys Programme

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a breakdown of expenditure, by local authority district and by category of expenditure, under the valleys programme from 1988 to date.

Mr. David Hunt: Provision for the programme for the valleys area over the five years of the programme is £800 million. A breakdown of outturn for 1988-89 to 1990-91 and estimated outturn for 1991-92 by category of expenditure is shown in the table. It is not possible to provide a breakdown by local authority district except at disproportionate cost.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total sum spent in regional aid in the valleys programme area, by year and by category of expenditure, (a) in the two years before regional development grants were abolished and (b) since regional development grants were abolished.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is as follows:

Scheme	Value of grant paid by year (£ million)

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the annual changes in unemployment by local authority districts in the valleys programme area, and the comparable information for Wales and the United Kingdom as a whole from 1988 to date.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested is given in the table.

Departmental Telephone Calls

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information is available on the number of calls made to directory inquiries from his Department since 1 April 1991.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department undertakes exercises at six-monthly intervals to assess usage of this service. The last monitoring exercise showed an average of 50 calls per week from the main offices in Cardiff.

Revenue Support Grant

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales at what level he proposes to set the total of revenue support grant to Welsh local authorities in 1992-93.

Mr. David Hunt: I announced on 23 July that I proposed to set the total of aggregate external finance—AEF—the level of central Government support for local authority revenue spending, at £2·383 million, an increase of 6·7 per cent. over the equivalent amount for 1991-92; but that this figure would be adjusted to reflect the transfer out of local authority control of the six major higher education institutions in Wales, including the Polytechnic of Wales, from 1 April 1992. I have concluded that this adjustment should be confirmed at £34·6 million, the provisional sum I identified in July. I now propose that the level of AEF for 1992-93 should be £2,348·4 million.

A comparable adjustment will be made to the level of total standard spending of £2,639 million that I announced in July.

AEF support has three components: the distributable amount of non-domestic rates, the total of relevant specific and supplementary grants, and revenue support grant.

As I announced to the House on 6 November, I intend to specify that the distributable amount from the non-domestic rating account be £536 million on the basis that the Welsh national non-domestic rating multiplier for 1992-93 will be 42·5.

I propose that relevant specific and supplementary grants towards local authority revenue expenditure should total £195·3 million.

I further propose that the total of revenue support grant should be £1,617·1 million of which £1,616·0 million should be paid to Welsh county and district councils and £1·1 million to certain specified bodies.

My officials are today writing to Welsh local authorities setting out my proposals for the component amounts of AEF and inviting their views. I am placing a copy of that consultation letter, which details the relevant specific and supplementary grants and the amounts to be paid to specified bodies, in the Library of the House.

I will also provide an additional £5·985 million, outside AEF, for the payment of a special grant in 1992-93 to meet the estimated revenue cost to Welsh district authorities of council tax implementation. The special grant arrangements will be the subject of a separate consultation letter to be issued shortly.

Early in December I will be notifying Welsh local authorities of my proposals for the distribution and population reports setting out the basis on which I propose to distribute revenue support grant among county and district councils, and the rules for calculating the relevant population of the areas of county and district councils for the purpose of the distribution of non-domestic rate income. I shall lay these reports before the House in due course.

Charge Capping

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has proposals for community charge capping of Welsh local authorities in 1992-93.

Mr. David Hunt: I have today written to the leader and the chief executive of each Welsh local authority informing them that I do not intend to announce charge-capping criteria in advance of next year's annual budgetary round. This is a continuation of the arrangements that have applied in Wales for 1990-91 and 1991-92.

In my letter I have warned that I will subject to very careful scrutiny the expenditure proposals of Welsh local authorities for 1992-93 and will not hesitate to exercise my charge-capping powers in respect of any authority whose budget proposals I consider to be unacceptable.

PRIME MINISTER

Natural History Museum

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Prime Minister whether he will publish the names of the trustees of the natural history museum and their respective remaining terms in office.

The Prime Minister: The names of the trustees of the natural history museum and their respective remaining terms in office are:

	Date
Sir Walter Bodmer FRS FRCPath (Chairman)	31 December 1993
Sir Owen Green	31 December 1995
Raymond John Carter	31 December 1995
Gerald M. Ronson	31 December 1991
Dr. Euan N. K. Clarkson FRSE	31 December 1992
Mrs. Jennifer d'Abo	31 December 1993
Professor Brian Follett	31 December 1993
Denys Henderson	31 December 1993
Professor Robert McCredie	31 December 1993
Professor John Harper	16 February 1996
Sir Anthony Laughton	7 February 1995

Forensic Evidence

Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Prime Minister if he will take steps to ensure that the methods and thoroughness of forensic evidence gathering employed following incidents in Northern Ireland are of the same standards as those employed at the recent incident in St. Albans.

The Prime Minister: All explosions in Northern Ireland which, like the incident at St. Albans, cause fatalities are subject to a level of forensic scientific examination which is commensurate with their particular nature and appropriate having regard to the circumstances in which they occur and to whatever security considerations may apply at the time.

Departmental Telephone Calls

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Prime Minister what information is available on the number of calls made to directory inquiries from his office since 1 April 1991.

The Prime Minister: No record is kept of the number of calls made to directory inquiries from my office.

RECHAR

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what bilateral discussions he is having on RECHAR and additionality and with whom.

The Prime Minister: None, but Ministers and officials of the Departments concerned have discussed the subject fully with the European Commission and with interested parties in the United Kingdom.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Mrs. Maureen Paleschi

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made to repatriate Mrs. Maureen Paleschi from prison in Cairo.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We continue to take every suitable opportunity to seek the early release of Mrs. Paleschi on humanitarian grounds. I have no progress to report at present.

EC Economic and Social Committee

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the British members of the economic and social committee of the European Community, indicating in each case which interests they are intended to represent.

Mr. Garel-Jones: British members of the economic and social committee are as follows:

Group I (Representing employers)	Group II (Representing workers)	Group III (Representing various interest groups)
Neville Beale	Campbell Christie	Wilfred Aspinall
Michael Bell	Peter Dawson	Jocelyn Barrow
John Little	Tom Jenkins	William Black
Kenneth Gardner	John Lyons	Angela Guillaume
Felix Kafka	Ada Maddocks	Robert Moreland
Michael Mobbs	William Morris	Sue Slipman
Ann Robinson	Roy Sanderson	Michael Strauss
John Whitworth	Alexander Smith	Andrew Tyrie

Departmental Telephone Calls

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information is available on the number of calls made to directory inquiries from his Department since 1 April 1991.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. All Foreign and Commonwealth Office staff are encouraged to make economic use of the telephone.

Gibraltar (Human Rights)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he takes to ensure that residents of Gibraltar have their human rights protected under the European convention on human rights.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The European convention on human rights applies in full to Gibraltar and provides Gibraltarians with the right of individual petition in relation to the rights covered by the convention. Furthermore, Gibraltar's constitution contains a chapter setting out the fundamental rights and freedoms of Gibraltarians and provides for their enforcement through the courts.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from Mrs. Pamela Dix of UK Families Flight 103 concerning the Lockerbie disaster; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Ms. Pamela Dix has written three times to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State concerning the Lockerbie disaster. Ms. Dix wrote most recently on 4 November 1991 enclosing a copy of a status report by UK Families Flight 103. My right hon. Friend replied to Ms. Dix on 19 November.

Cambodia

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, further to his answer of 20 November, Official Report, columns 198-99, what information he has regarding the current whereabouts and fate of the leadership of the site 8 camp.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We understand that all but two of the members of the former site 8 leadership have returned to refugee camps on the Thai/Cambodia border, 10 of them to site 8. The exact whereabouts of the others is uncertain, but we understand that the two who remain inside Cambodia are safe.

Iraq

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Fulham (Mr. Carrington), of 18 November, Official Report, columns 52-56, he will place in the Library copies of the reports of each of the UNSCOM visits to Iraq listed in his reply; if he will list by name and expertise each of the United Kingdom inspectors or technical experts involved in each UNSCOM visit; and if he will set out the new information provided to Her Majesty's Government by the UNSCOM inspection visits, subsequent to knowledge of the Iraqi nuclear programme as at 19 April 1990.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 25 November 1991]: Reports of the IAEA nuclear inspections are already available in the House of Commons Library in the form of Security Council documents as follows: UNSCOM 1 and 4 in S/22788 of 15 July; UNSCOM 5 in S/22837 of 25 July; UNSCOM 6 in S/22986 of 28 August; UNSCOM 14 in S/23112 of 4 October and UNSCOM 16 in S/23122 of 8 October. We expect the report of UNSCOM 19 to be issued shortly. Reports of other inspections have not yet been made public.

United Kingdom nationals serving on the inspection teams have skills and expertise requested by the UN special commission and appropriate to the nature of the inspection for which they are provided. For reasons of personal security, I am not prepared to reveal their identities.

New information on Iraq's WMD programme is set out in the above documents and in the report submitted to the Security Council by the executive chairman of the special commission which is being made available in the House of Commons Library—document S/23165 of 25 October.

Algerian Nuclear Facilities

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he intends to make to the International Atomic Energy Agency to improve its surveillance of Algerian nuclear facilities.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 25 November 1991]: The Algerian research reactor operating at Draria is already under safeguards and the Algerian Government have given a public guarantee that the nuclear reactor under construction at Ain Oussera will be subject to IAEA inspection. We welcome this assurance, and look to the Algerian Government to invite the IAEA to inspect Ain Oussera as soon as possible.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Corporate Governance

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the cost to his Department of seconding staff to the Cadbury committee on corporate governance.

Mr. Leigh: There is no cost to the Department for the secondment of a member of its staff to the committee on the financial aspects of corporate governance.

Company Investigations

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on how many occasions he has secured repayments of the costs of any investigations carried out by DTI inspectors, under section 439 of the Companies Act 1985.

Mr. Redwood: The Government are seeking recovery under section 439(4) of the costs of the Animal Defence Society Limited.

Inspectors Reports

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his Department's policy (a) on the timing of the release of one of its inspector's reports where the subject of the report is also the subject of a current trial and (b) on the relative timing of the release of an inspector's report to those mentioned in the report and to Parliament.

Mr. Lilley: My Department would not expect to publish a report where the subject of the report was also the subject of a current criminal trial. A copy of the report could, however, be made available to those affected by its contents in accordance with the provisions of the Companies Act and against suitable undertakings of confidentiality from the recipients. The timing of such release would depend upon the reasons for the request for the report.

Reports are made available to Parliament on publication. It has been the practice of my Department to allow persons whose interests may be affected by the report, on request and on payment of the prescribed fee in accordance with the provisions of the Companies Act 1985, to have copies, against undertakings, shortly before the proposed date of publication.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list those countries covered by Export Credits Guarantee Department provision.

Mr. Sainsbury: Some export credit insurance cover is currently available from the Export Credits Guarantee Department, including from the Insurance Services Group which is shortly to be privatised, for all but three countries —Iraq, Libya and Zambia.

BBC External Services

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will outline the arrangements made to co-ordinate the duties of the BBC external services and of the Export Credits Guarantee Department with respect to promotion of United Kingdom commercial interests.

Mr. Sainsbury: The BBC World Service and the Export Credits Guarantee Department are two separate organisation with separate aims and objectives. However, ECGD does keep the BBC World Service informed about its activities. There are no plans to co-ordinate more closely their respective roles.

Cumbria Action Team

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the proportion of the budget of the Cumbria action team allocated for (a) administration, (b) new work space in Copeland and (c) new factories in Copeland.

Mr. Leigh: On 13 June the Secretary of State announced a package of special measures for Barrow and West Cumbria. These included:

(i) The establishment of the Cumbria action team, with a special fund of up to £1 million to support local initiatives in the area. No money from this special budget has been allocated for administration.

(ii) A £15 million programme under which English Estates will provide new sites, factories and work space in Copeland and Furness. There is no formal allocation for Copeland, but we expect the programme to be roughly equal between the two areas.

RECHAR

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects the European Commission to release the RECHAR programme for implementation in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 21 November 1991]: This is a question for the Commission. I can make no prediction, but I hope that it will be released very soon.

ECGD Insurance Services Group

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) further to his answer of 18 November, Official Report, column 37, what is his most up-to-date estimate of the number of current Export Credit Guarantee Department staff who will be given additional paid leave after 1 December, pending transfer to other duties;

(2) how many existing Export Credits Guarantee Department staff will be retained after 1 December, on full pay with no duties pending early retirement with full civil service entitlement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 21 November 1991]: Management are still considering the most effective deployment of staff following the privatisation of the Insurance Services Group.

Cumbria

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures he proposes for the improvements to communications recommended by his Department's consultants in their report, "Cumbria's Economy, Strategic Needs and Opportunities in the 1990s."

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 22 November 1991]: Following my right hon. Friend's announcement of measures for West Cumbria and Furness on 13 June, the Cumbria action team was promptly established in the area with bases at Barrow and Cockermouth. The team has established close and regular links with business leaders, key local agencies and others concerned with the economic development of the area.

A steering group involving the regional directors of Government Departments has also been established to ensure effective liaison at senior level between Departments on issues concerning West Cumbria and Barrow. In addition to regular meetings between Departments, this group has held other meetings with representatives of key agencies in the area with a follow-up arranged for mid-December. I plan to be in Whitehaven on that occasion and to attend the meeting.

Cars (Recycling)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has to date on corporate projects to dismantle and recycle cars in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the remainder of European Economic Community countries.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 25 November 1991]: I am aware of a number of initiatives being taken with regard to the dismantling and recycling of motor cars. In the United Kingdom, for example, BMW (GB) Ltd. has announced a pilot recycling and disassembly scheme and the Rover Group has announced plans to undertake a programme of research with the Bird Group—one of the leading United Kingdom and European materials reclamation and recycling organisations—which aims to establish the optimum level of disassembly as well as standards covering a wide range of marques. I am also aware of the proposal for an industry steering group whose initial function would be to initiate action and to co-ordinate information on the range of projects being undertaken.

Elsewhere in Europe, we are aware that BMW—who are co-operating closely with other manufacturers—have a pilot disassembly plant at Landshut and have opened an operational recycling centre in Munich. Also in Germany, GM Europe—Opel Vauxhall—has initiated a programme with RED Darmstadt and Ford have started a vehicle dismantling plant at Cologne. In France, the PSA Group —Peugeot/Citroen—has established a joint project, near Lyon, with a scrap metal processor and a cement maker to remove pollutants, to recover metals, and to produce fuel pellets from the residues. The results from all of these projects will be applied in the United Kingdom.

Additionally on the European front, the European Commission —DGXI—has designated end-of-life vehicles as a priority waste stream and discussions will start next month on identifying the scale of the problem and ways in which it can be tackled.

Recycling is not new to the motor industry. About 75 per cent. of the material in the average car is already recovered and there is a long commercial tradition in the United Kingdom of recycling car batteries, of reconditioning engines, gear boxes and radiators and a variety of other used parts.

Regional Government

Mr. Cabom: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the Council of Ministers meeting on the regions on 18 and 19 November.

Mr. Leigh: I attended on these dates the informal meeting in the Hague of EC Ministers responsible for regional policy and physical planning. The meeting considered two subjects: the Community structural funds, and the Commission's reference document "Europe 2000, Outlook for the Development of the Community's Territory". As it was an informal meeting, not a Council, no formal conclusions were reached.

Ministers had a broad exchange of views on the implementation of the structural funds to date and on certain aspects of their future. The importance of proper evaluation of the effectiveness of the funds was recognised and several ideas for improving the efficiency of their administration were discussed. The principle of subsidiarity and its relevance to the operation of the funds was acknowledged; I and some others expressed our Governments' wish to be more fully responsible for determining the eligible areas for and the detailed uses of the funds. Both Ministers and the Commission felt that there should in future be fewer "Community initiatives", a type of grant scheme exemplified by RECHAR.

The reference document "Europe 2000" was generally welcomed, although I and others emphasised that it should not lead to any Community "spatial plan" contrary to the principle of subsidiarity. The Commission intends to carry out further studies. The intention of establishing a committee or working group, to facilitate exchange of information and experience on matters relevant to the Community dimension of "spatial development" in the member states, will be considered in detail at official level.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Channel 4 Commission on Education

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether his Department supplied the Channel 4 commission on education with statistical information or comments on the performance of education in England and Wales.

Mr. Eggar: My Department did not supply the Channel 4 commission on education with statistical information or comments on the performance of education in England and Wales. It was, however, in contact with the makers of an accompanying television programme.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he received a copy of the report of the Channel 4 commission on education; and what response he has made to the views expressed.

Mr. Eggar: A copy of the report of the Channel 4 commission on education was received by the Department on 22 October. I responded to the views expressed in a television debate on Channel 4 transmitted on 23 October.

Disabled Students

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to extend the system of mandatory and discretionary awards to students on courses of further or higher education whose disabilities or medical conditions oblige them to study on a part-time basis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The Education Act 1962 gives local education authorities the power to make discretionary awards to part-time students on courses of further or higher education, but restricts mandatory awards generally to designated full-time and sandwich higher education courses. The student support arrangements are kept under review. We have, however, no present plans for primary legislation to extend mandatory awards to part-time courses.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make special provision for people to have access to education or retraining if they become disabled after the age of 19 years through accident or illness.

Mr. Eggar: Existing education and training arrangements already provide for those who become disabled in adult life. Local education authorities' responsibilities towards disabled adults will be carried forward into the new further education structures under the Further and Higher Education Bill. Department of Employment schemes give priority access to people with disabilities.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to ensure suitable transport to and from college for disabled students in further education who do not have access to public or private transport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Under the Further and Higher Education Bill currently before Parliament, the provision of transport for disabled and other students in further education will continue to be the responsibility of local education authorities.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to ensure that students with special educational needs wishing to pursue further education receive a full and appropriate assessment of their needs; and if he will specify the methods by which their academic achievements will be acknowledged.

Mr. Eggar: Under the Further and Higher Education Bill currently before Parliament the assessment of further education students' needs will continue to be a matter for the colleges. It would be inappropriate for the Government to specify the methods by which examining and awarding bodies assess the academic achievements of students with special educational needs. The Government expect those bodies to ensure that their assessment arrangements take account of the needs of students with special educational needs.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will extend the statutory age limit for entitlement to further education for students with special needs who need extra time to develop independence skills and to catch up academically with their able-bodied peers.

Mr. Eggar: There is no such statutory age limit. The duty to secure provision of further education applies to 16 to 18-year-olds and to adults of all ages. The Further and Higher Education Bill currently before Parliament carries that duty over into the proposed new further education structures.

Official Journeys

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the number of official journeys to Bradford made by the hon. Member for Enfield, North (Mr. Eggar) during 1990 and the current year to the most recent practicable date and the total cost of rail fares for himself and civil servants together with the associated costs of meals and any other expenses.

Mr. Eggar: The Government have a strong commitment to promoting inner city regeneration. As Minister with special responsibility for Bradford and Leeds, it is invaluable for me to maintain personal contact with those involved in this vital process—including both Bradford city council and important private sector and partnership bodies such as the Bradford chamber of commerce, the Bradford and District training and enterprise council, the Bradford Breakthrough and the Keighley business forum, not to mention the many voluntary sector and community groups which are contributing to the development of new initiative and new partnerships in the district.

My many and frequent contacts with local people are also invaluable in steering the work of the Bradford and Leeds city action team and the Bradford task force which between them invest over £1·5 million a year in the city —and which seek to co-ordinate the impact of central Government programmes especially in the fields of environment, employment, training and enterprise. There is no substitute for seeing things personally and learning at first hand.

Since July 1990, when I became Minister of State, I have made 11 official visits to Bradford, nine by train. From the records currently available the total cost for myself and civil servants is as follows:

a) Rail fares	1,692·58
b) Associated costs	285·85

Departmental Telephone Calls

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information is available on the number of calls made to directory inquiries from his Department since 1 April 1991.

Mr. Eggar: It is not possible to give complete statistics of all directory inquiry calls made by departmental personnel. While telephone logging equipment is now installed at the Department's main offices in London and Darlington, it is not available at small outstations or the divisional and local offices of Her Majesty's inspectorate.

Data collected during October suggest that approximately 80 calls are made daily to directory inquiries from the Department's two principal sites.

Schools (Health and Safety)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy on local education authority inspections of schools for health and safety.

Mr. Atkins: It falls to local education authorities to ensure that their inspection arrangements are appropriate for the discharge of both their statutory duties and wider responsibilities with regard to health and safety.

ENVIRONMENT

Council Rents

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his Department's guidelines for rents of council homes in Lambeth in 1992 and 1993.

Mr. Yeo: Guideline rents are the assumptions about each local housing authority's rental income used in the calculation of entitlement to housing revenue account subsidy. They are calculated by each authority in accordance with a formula determined annually by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. For 1992-93 my right hon. Friend has proposed that guideline rents should be increased by between £1·20 in low value areas to £4·50 in high value areas. If the proposals are confirmed, the Department estimates that Lambeth's guideline rent for 1992-93 is likely to be £30·39 a week. No decisions have been made about guideline rents for 1993-94.

Red Telephone Boxes

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria changes have taken place which has resulted in English Heritage listing an old-style red telephone box outside the London inn in Ivybridge, Devon, in 1988, but removing it from the list in 1991; and how many red public telephone boxes will remain in Ivybridge.

Mr. Yeo: The criteria for assessing traditional red telephone kiosks for listing have not changed since June 1987. The kiosk outside the London inn, Ivybridge, was rejected for listing on 24 June 1991, because it is not considered to fulfil the listing criteria. It had not previously been assessed for listing.

It is for British Telecom to decide how many red telephone kiosks are to remain in Ivybridge.

Council House Sales

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing for each year since 1981 which local authorities are spending their receipts from right-to-buy sales at the maximum permitted rate; what are the amounts; which local authorities are spending their receipts at less than the maximum permitted rate; what are the amounts they spend; and what are the amounts they could spend.

Mr. Yeo: Data on the spending of receipts from right-to-buy sales has not been collected from local authorities.

Liverpool Obstetric and Gynaecology Unit

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what grant aid has been sought through the Merseyside task force towards the cost of the proposed obstetric and gynaecology unit in Liverpool;

(2) what grants are being made through the Merseyside task force towards the costs of the proposed obstetric and gynaecology unit in Liverpool.

Mr. Key: None, but the Liverpool city action team has given grant support to the development team of Project Rosemary, of which the proposed new hospital would form a part. This support includes payment of the salary of a community development officer. The main costs of the new unit will be met by the district health authority under its usual allocations, details of which are a matter for the chairman of Mersey regional health authority, Sir Donald Wilson.

City Challenge

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of grant the Government will be contributing to city challenge schemes; and what proportion local authorities will have to raise themselves.

Mr. Portillo: The proportion of grants contributed by local authorities and the Government in city challenge are as follows:

Urban Programme

For revenue projects grant will be available at 90 per cent. rather than 75 per cent.; the local authority will be expected to contribute 10 per cent. of approved costs.

For capital projects, grant will be available at 75 per cent. and supplementary credit approvals (SCAs) at 25 per cent.

Estate Action

For estate action projects there will be 100 per cent. SCA support.

Local Authority Derelict Land Grant

In respect of local authority derelict land grant projects, all city challenge areas will receive 100 per cent. support, in the form of 50 per cent. grant and 50 per cent. SCAs in Lewisham and Tower Hamlets and 100 per cent. grant elsewhere.

Non Local Authority Derelict Land Grant

Grant on approved expenditure on non local authority derelict land grant projects will be given at a rate of 50 per cent. in Lewisham and Tower Hamlets and 80 per cent. in other areas.

Private Sector Housing Renewal

City challenge support is available under section 132 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 and for environmental works in renewal areas under section 96 of that Act. Grant will be paid on 90 per cent. of a local authority's eligible expenditure for group repair schemes and on 90 per cent. of the eligible expenditure incurred in carrying out environmental works in renewal areas; the local authority will be required to contribute the remaining 10 per cent.

City Grant

For city grant, grant will continue to be paid directly to developers and assessed on the deficit between project costs and project value.

Housing Corporation

For schemes funded by the Housing Corporation grant will be paid on mixed funded schemes and public funded schemes in 1992-93 at the appropriate rates for the area in accordance with Housing Corporation circular 33-91.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the funds for city challenge have been top-sliced from existing inner-city programmes.

Mr. Portillo: Yes; £82·5 million for 1992-93 has been top-sliced from the following programmes:

- Estate Action
- Urban Programme
- City Action Teams
- City Grant
- Derelict Land Grant
- Private Sector Housing Renewal
- Housing Corporation

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department will provide continuing revenue support to the city challenge schemes after the five year cut-off point.

Mr. Portillo: Revenue support for city challenge schemes will be provided for the period agreed in their action plans.

Police Authorities (Finance)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions a police authority has become insolvent in that its current expenditure in the current financial year exceeds its income; and what powers he has to deal with such an eventuality.

Mr. Key: No single-service police authority has reported to us that it has ended any year with a deficit. The management of its financial affairs, including dealing with any deficit, is a matter for each individual authority.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions he or his predecessors have advised police authorities to run revenue deficits on the assurance of income in future years; and what powers he has to offer such assurances.

Mr. Key: None. We have no such power.

House Repossessions

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many houses were repossessed by building societies in the first three quarters of 1991.

Mr. Yeo: The latest available information is the number of properties taken into possession during the first half of 1991 by building societies and other members of the Council of Mortgage Lenders. This, with the corresponding information for earlier periods, appears in table 11 of the November 1991 edition of "Housing Finance", which is in the Library.

Council Tax

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide examples for council flats or two-bedroom terraced properties for the same areas as he provided in his press release of 19 November for a 1960s built three-bedroom semi-detached house.

Mr. Key: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing his estimate of the council tax bill payable and the community charge bill payable in 1991-92 for a couple living in (a) a 1960s built three-bedroom semi-detached house and (b) a 1960s built four-bedroom detached house for each English council.

Mr. Heseltine: I have today placed in the Library tables providing the information requested.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the addresses for each of the 1960s built three bedroom semi-detached houses used to illustrate comparison between the last rates bill, current poll tax bill and the future council tax bill published in a press release from his Department on 19 November 1991.

Mr. Key: The figures published on 19 November were based on estimates of value provided by the Valuation Office. These estimates relate to typical properties rather than actual addresses.

Nitrate Pollution

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the 28 zones which are the subject of an action by the EC against the Government for failure to meet EC nitrate levels.

Mr. Baldry: The 28 zones covered by the European Commission's 1989 case against the United Kingdom, which is to be heard in the European Court on 27 November, are shown in the table, together with the date by which each will comply with the nitrate standard in the EC drinking water directive.

Mobile Homes

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will agree to meet representatives of mobile home dwellers in Dorset; and if he will make a statement on his Department's current discussions on their circumstances.

Mr. Yeo: Consultants appointed by the Department carried out a research study into physical and social conditions on residential mobile home sites over the summer. We shall be publishing their report in the near future. We also intend to publish a consultation paper on future mobile homes policy, although no major changes to the Mobile Homes Act 1983 are contemplated. We shall be initiating discussions with representatives of mobile home residents and site owners at the appropriate time.

Homelessness

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what investigations and surveys he has undertaken in the past two years into the size and extent of the problem of people sleeping rough in snow or extreme cold outside London; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what inquiry he has made into the number of people who slept rough in snow or extreme cold in Leicester last winter.

Mr. Yeo: My Department has not undertaken any research into the number of people outside London sleeping rough during the last two winters. The most reliable estimate of the numbers sleeping rough outside London is in the 1991 OPCS census supplementary monitor on people sleeping rough, which was placed in the Library on 9 July. This reported that 33 people were sleeping rough on the streets of Leicester on the night of 21-22 April.

MINIS-12 Report

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what inquiries have been received by his Department since the start of October concerning (a) the content and (b) the availability of the MINIS-12 report for 1991.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 25 November 1991]: My Department has received only a handful of inquiries since the beginning of October about MINIS 12 returns. The returns were published in July and their content is a matter of public record. Copies were placed in the Library of the House and are available for purchase from my Department. Inquirers are referred to these sources as appropriate.

Incinerators

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the levels of pollution from each incinerator operating in England; and to what extent they comply with EC legislation.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 25 November 1991]: Information on levels of pollution from individual plant is not available. The European Community has set limits on emissions to air from municipal waste incinerators with which incinerators built since 1 December 1990 must comply now. Municipal waste incinerators with a capacity of 6 tonnes/hour or more in existence on that date have until 1 December 1996 to be brought up to the European standards.

SCOTLAND

Nuclear Power Plant, Torness

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether spent nuclear fuel allocated to the dry storage facility planned for the Scottish nuclear power plant at Torness will be subject to the EC proposal for a Council directive (COM(90)328 final) amending EC directive 80/836/EURATOM.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The draft of EC directive COM(90)328, which is still being discussed by the Council of Ministers, relates to the control of shipments of nuclear material. The effect of any directive on any dry storage of spent fuel is therefore speculative. No formal application to construct spent fuel storage facilities at Torness is before the Secretary of State.

Children (Special Needs)

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy on the education of children with disabilities or special needs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Primary responsibility for the education of children with special educational needs lies with education authorities. It is their duty to make available for all children in their area adequate and efficient school education which must include provision for children with special educational needs. Additionally, for children and young people with pronounced, specific or complex special educational needs requiring continuing review, authorities have a duty to open a record of needs and to ensure that the provision they make provides fully for the needs described in that record.

Financial provision to enable authorities to carry out these duties is included in the aggregate external finance settlement.

Traffic Accidents (A1)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many deaths and how many injuries have occurred as a result of road traffic accidents on the A1 road between Musselburgh and the English border in each of the last 10 years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The following table provides the information requested on road traffic accidents on the A1 road between the Dolphingstone interchange east of Musselburgh, and the English border. Information for 1991 is available centrally only up to June and is provisional.

Number of casualties on the A1 between Dolphingstone interchange and the English border by severity 1981-90, and to June 1991

	Fatal	Serious	Slight	Total
1981	7	36	77	120
1982	4	54	51	109
1983	8	35	46	89

1990	10	47	95	152
[1]1991	1	11	39	51

[1] January to June 1991 (provisional).

Road Crossings

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to provide local authorities with responsibility for roads with additional finance for the specific purpose of providing accessible and safe road crossings for people with mobility or visual impairments; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is for local authorities to include projects for the provision of accessible and safe road crossings for people with mobility or visual impairments in their transport policies and programme documents and financial plans. These will then be taken fully into account in determining capital allocations. Local authorities have been given detailed guidance about the provision of facilities at pedestrian crossings for disabled and visually impaired people. It is for the authorities themselves to decide what priority should be given to providing these facilities and other road safety measures.

Lyme Disease

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the incidence of Lyme disease in the highlands of Scotland and in each of the other health board areas in each of the last three years; and what steps are being taken to prevent its spread.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Lyme disease has been a notifiable disease in Scotland since January 1990. Information about its incidence in earlier years is not available. The number of notifications, by health board area, for 1990 and 1991, to 8 November, is as follows:

	1990	[1]1991
Ayrshire and Arran	1	2
Grampian	4	11
Greater Glasgow	2	2
Highland	3	2
Tayside	2	—

[1] To 8 November.

Lyme disease is transmitted from animals to man by the bite of the adult female tick. It is not a common condition in Scotland, but the notification requirements which have been introduced will enable careful monitoring of its incidence to be maintained.

RNIB Needs Survey

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, further to his answer of 12 November, Official Report, column 485, whether he has yet received a copy of the RNIB needs survey on blind and partially sighted adults in Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend has now obtained a copy of this comprehensive report. He will consider its contents carefully in relation to planning and delivery of the wide range of services for blind and partially sighted people for which he is responsible.

Labour Statistics

Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the current unemployment figures for the Kilmarnock and Loudoun district.

Mr. Allan Stewart: In October 1991, the latest month for which figures are available, there were 4,295 people unemployed in Kilmarnock and Loudoun district. This figure is given on the unadjusted basis.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the latest unemployment figures for Dundee and Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: In October 1991, the latest month for which figures are available, there were 9,641 people unemployed in Dundee travel-to-work area and 220,396 in Scotland. The figures shown are given on the unadjusted basis.

Craigtoun Hospital

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the future of Craigtoun hospital.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend hopes to announce his decision shortly.

Cumbernauld High School

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the reply given to the hon. Member for Cumbernauld and Kilsyth on 11 November, Official Report, column 381, whether Her Majesty's inspectorate of schools have had discussions with Strathclyde regional council concerning the implementation of the recommendations made by the inspectorate in its report on Cumbernauld high school; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 20 November 1991]: The implementation of the recommendations made in the published report following the inspection of Cumbernauld high school were discussed fully with the divisional education officer in May 1991 following the follow-up inspection, and have been the subject of further discussions. Progress was being made on all the issues raised in the published report, although the authority had been unable to respond immediately on those in relation to the replacement of windows and other maintenance, and decoration. That work has been phased. Window replacement is being undertaken in three phases with the second to be completed in 1992 and the remainder undertaken in the course of the financial year 1992-93. Early preparation for redecoration is under way and plans have been made to complete that in 1992-93.

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the reply given to the hon. Member for Cumbernauld and Kilsyth on 11 November, Official Report, column 381, if he will outline those subject departments, or areas of weakness, at Cumbernauld high school which necessitated Her Majesty's inspectorate of schools to undertake a follow-up inspection of the school in January 1991.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 20 November 1991]: In terms of Scottish Office Education Department circular No. 1095 a follow-up visit is paid to all schools inspected to determine the progress made by the authority and the school in responding to the recommendations made in the published report. The report on Cumbernauld high school made recommendations for action by both school management and the education authority. In relation to the former, action was suggested to be necessary to provide clearer statements of school policies and to ensure effective monitoring of the implementation of these, to provide more differentiation of demand within courses to match the range of ability of pupils, and in relation to aspects of provision in history, technical education, home economics, music and computing. On the evidence of the follow-up visit, substantial progress was being made, with the support of the education authority's advisory service, to bring about improvements in all these areas.

M80

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to announce the line of route of the M80 to Haggs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether a decision has yet been reached on the line of route for the M80 from Haggs to Stepps; and when the work is likely to commence.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 25 November 1991]: Over the past six months the road project team in the Scottish Office roads directorate managing the M80 Stepps-Haggs scheme has been heavily committed in a major review of the strategic trunk road network in north Lanarkshire. This review, together with essential preparatory work for the forthcoming M8 Newbridge to Edinburgh public inquiry, has regrettably delayed the consideration necessary to enable a decision to be made on the line of the M80 between Stepps and Haggs. It is hoped that formal presentations can be made to regional and district councils early in the new year and a decision taken thereafter. The date of a start of the works will depend on the satisfactory completion of the statutory procedures and the availability of funds.

Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to declare a moratorium on new management agreements under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, pending a review of the system.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 25 November 1991]: No.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations (a) the Scottish Office and (b) the Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland have received from Lord Kimball on the need for management agreements in north-west Sutherland under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 25 November 1991]: Lord Kimball has served notices of intent under section 28 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 to undertake agricultural, forestry and other operations. These proposals are being assessed by the Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland which will decide whether management agreements should be offered under section 15 of the Countryside Act 1968.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the impact of management agreements, currently being negotiated, on the proposed budget of Scottish Natural Heritage.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 25 November 1991]: All matters affecting the funding requirements of Scottish Natural Heritage will be taken into account by my right hon. Friend in deciding the amount of the grant in aid which will be allocated.

DEFENCE

RAF Machrihanish

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on the future role of RAF Machrihanish;

(2) if he will make a statement on the use of facilities at RAF Machrihanish by United States armed forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: RAF Machrihanish is primarily established as a wartime forward operating base for NATO, including United States, maritime patrol aircraft. United States navy aircraft occasionally use the station for exercises. Additionally, the station accommodates a United States navy mobile mine assembly group and special warfare unit. There are no current plans to change this role.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contracts have been awarded for construction work at RAF Machrihanish during 1990-91; and what is their individual cost.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Contracts awarded in 1990-91 for construction work at RAF Machrihanish cover airfield paving, aviation fuel storage installations, an operational and administrative building, a range of accommodation buildings, a civil aviation terminal and a public road. These exclude minor works and have a cumulative value of £28 million—of which some £15 million falls to United States and NATO funds. It is not possible to give the costs of individual contracts for reasons of commercial confidentiality.

Departmental Properties

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many residential properties owned by his Ministry are in Scotland; and what is the current percentage rate of occupation.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As at 30 September 1991, the latest date for which figures are available, MOD owned 6,361 houses and flats in Scotland, of which 5,107 were occupied representing 80 per cent. of the total stock. Many of the unoccupied properties were either undergoing or awaiting major maintenance work or modernisation, some were already allotted to service families who were due to move in shortly, and others were being considered for disposal. In addition, 372 properties were in the process of being sold.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many residential properties owned by his Ministry are in Fife; and what is the current percentage rate of occupation.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As at 30 September 1991, the latest date for which figures are available, the Ministry of Defence owned 1,436 houses and flats in Fife, of which 1,222 were occupied, representing 85 per cent. of the total stock. Many of the unoccupied properties were either undergoing major maintenance work or modernisation, some were already allotted to service families who were due to move in shortly and others were being considered for disposal. In addition, 108 properties were in the process of being sold.

Thurleigh Airfield

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what consultations have taken place since the announcement of the closure of the airfield at Thurleigh, Bedfordshire between his Department and agencies and the local authorities in the county; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make it his policy to discuss the terms of the proposals covering Thurleigh airfield with the local authorities involved before completing negotiations with United Parcel Services;

(3) if he will make it his policy to ensure that North Bedfordshire borough council is requested for planning permission for a change in use for Thurleigh airfield from military to civilian flying;

(4) how many applicants have approached his Department for authority to use the airfield at Thurleigh for (a) flying and purposes connected therewith, (b) commercial users, other than as an airport, (c) recreational purposes and (d) housing; and whether any negotiations have been completed;

(5) what account he takes in considering the future of Thurleigh airfield in Bedfordshire of (a) noise, (b) planning blight, (c) environmental despoliation and (d) loss of amenity.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Since my announcement on 9 May of our intention to dispose of Thurleigh (Bedford) airfield on relocation of research and experimental flying to Boscombe Down, consultants acting on our behalf have held several discussions with Bedfordshire county and North Bedfordshire borough councils in the course of stage II of their study into disposal and marketing strategy. We anticipate a continuing, more detailed, dialogue, once the consultants' findings have been evaluated. We are not, in the meantime, in formal negotiation with either United Parcels Service or the 10 other commercial concerns which have discussed their informal interest in alternative use for the airfield site with our consultants.

In considering the disposal of Thurleigh airfield, our objective is to agree a way forward with the local authorities concerned that is consistent both with our duty to maximise the potential return from sale and with legitimate local environmental and infrastructure concerns, which it would be our intention to address in an environmental impact assessment. Any subsequent developments within the context of current planning legislation would be the subject of a formal submission to North Bedfordshire borough council.

Departmental Telephone Calls

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information is available on the number of calls made to directory inquiries from his Department since 1 April 1991.

Mr. Alan Clark: Information on calls to directory inquiries from my Department is not held centrally and the number of such calls could be calculated only at disproportionate cost. Access to this service is restricted.

Staffordshire Regiment

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the record of the Staffordshire Regiment.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Staffordshire Regiment and its predecessors have a long and honourable history. They have served with distinction in campaigns from Guadaloupe in 1759 to the recent conflict in the Gulf. Full details are available in the Army List and regimental histories.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to maintain the Staffordshire regiment in its existing form.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As part of the restructuring of the Army, the Staffordshire Regiment will amalgamate with the Cheshire Regiment in 1993. I am, however, confident that the traditions, identity and loyalties of both the Staffordshire Regiment and the Cheshire Regiment will be successfully carried forward into the new regiment.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what are the Director of Infantry's current guidelines on amalgamation of regiments in respect of the relative priority for amalgamation of those regiments which have already been amalgamated since 1945 and those which have not;

(2) if he will list the order of preference for amalgamation submitted by the Cheshire regiment to the Army board.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The detailed basis on which the Army board came to its decisions about regimental amalgamations is an internal matter. The board took account of all relevant factors.

Service Medals

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration is being given to the striking of a humanitarian medal for service personnel; and when he expects to announce a design.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The possibility of an award for service personnel who take part in operations of a humanitarian nature is under consideration, but no decision has yet been taken.

South African Defence Material

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what oversight his Department maintains over the sale of South African-made defence material by companies based in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sainsbury I have been asked to reply.

Exports of defence equipment are subject to control under the Export of Goods (Control) Order and a licence is required to export such goods to any destination.

HEALTH

West Middlesex University Hospital

Sir Barney Hayhoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what building works costing more than £5 million he expects to be carried out at the West Middlesex University hospital during the next 12 months.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department has not received any approval-in-principle submissions from North West Thames and consequently no funding has yet been identified for any major scheme at West Middlesex. The regional health authority, however, recognises the case for investment there and is currently awaiting submission of the proposals being developed by the district.

South East Thames Regional Health Authority

Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a table showing the funds allocated for the current year per head of population to each health district within the South East Thames regional health area.

Mr. Dorrell: Information about the funds allocated to health districts is not held centrally. My hon. Friend may wish to contact Mr. Peter Barker, the chairman of South East Thames regional health authority, for details.

Residential and Care Homes

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the total number, by region, of inspectors of residential and care homes; what is the minimum number of annual inspections of these; and what further measures will be taken to maintain standards of care in residential and care homes.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information about the numbers of inspectors employed by local authorities is not held centrally. Authorities are required to inspect registered private and voluntary residential care homes at least twice a year.

The regulation of residential care, in which inspection plays a major part, safeguards the welfare of residents and helps uphold high standards. It is for this reason that over the last 12 months the Government have required local authorities to set up inspection units specifically to begin inspecting care homes in the public sector; have instituted arrangements allowing authorities to ask the police to check the antecedents of new proprietors and managers of homes; and, in regulations due to come into effect on 1 December, have introduced a requirement on applicants to provide details of criminal convictions, as well as to provide proof of identity on request.

We are also actively seeking to encourage improvements in the quality of life of residents in care homes. The social services inspectorate is publishing and promoting a series of documents on standards in homes with the generic title "Caring for Quality". Considerable progress has also been made in the caring in homes initiative, an action research programme which the Department is funding at a cost of some £2 million. The initiative is working to promote good practice and enhancing residents' quality of life, drawing on recommendations made in the report "Residential Care: A Positive Choice". The final results will be made widely available next year. Copies of the existing publications are available in the Library.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the salaries, remuneration, pension entitlements and other benefits payable to (a) each chair or shadow chair of each national health service trust or proposed trust in the Northern region from 1 December, (b) members of each national health service trust or proposed trust in the northern region from 1 December and (c) when he proposes next to revise salaries and other remuneration for trust chairs and board members.

Mr. Dorrell: The chairmanship and non-executive directorships of NHS trusts are not salaried posts, although chairmen and non-executive directors receive remuneration for their services. Remuneration, though taxable, is not pensionable. The rates of remuneration from 1 December are given in table 1. Chairmen and directors are also entitled to claim travel and subsistence allowances, the current rates of which are given in table 2. The timing of the next review of remuneration and allowances has yet to be decided.

NHS Hospitals

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his policy for the amalgamation of NHS hospitals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Hospital and community health services at a local level are the responsibility of regional and district health authorities, which should seek local agreement to significant changes in the provision of health services.

AIDS

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department is taking to mark World AIDS Day; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: World AIDS Day is a World Health Organisation initiative held on 1 December each year designed to expand and strengthen the worldwide effort to curb the spread of HIV infection and AIDS. The theme this year is "Sharing the Challenge", calling for a partnership of nations, groups, individuals and organisations from all walks of life to combat the pandemic.

As in previous years, we asked Mrs. Margaret Jay, director of the National AIDS Trust, to form a group to steer the United Kingdom response. The membership of the group has included people from the United Kingdom statutory, voluntary and media sectors. The day is being marked by many events throughout the United Kingdom.

On Friday 22 November I launched the Surrey and East Hampshire AIDSlink as a charity. In the week running up to World AIDS Day I am attending events in Bristol and in London. There will also be a preview of an exhibition of photographs of innovative local initiatives on HIV/AIDS. On 28 November the Chief Medical Officer and I will address the all-party parliamentary group on AIDS. My final World AIDS Day engagement will be to open a nursing conference on changing attitudes to AIDS in Cambridge on 2 December.

On World AIDS Day itself the Chief Medical Officer, the Chief Social Services Inspector and the Deputy Chief Nursing Officer will attend an ecumenical service at Southwark cathedral. They will also visit people with HIV and AIDS and those who care for them, at the London Lighthouse and the Mildmay Mission hospital. These organisations have pioneered the provision of palliative care and support for people with HIV and AIDS. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will also visit London Lighthouse on 4 December.

We hope that the press, radio and television will help focus national attention on action to curb the spread of HIV infection and foster compassion and support for those already affected.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many non-haemophiliacs in England, Wales and Northern Ireland who have contracted HIV infection as a result of contaminated NHS blood-tissue transfers (a) remain alive, (b) have developed AIDS and remain alive and (c) developed AIDS and have since died.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There have been 51 reports in England, Wales and Northern Ireland of HIV infection in people who received blood or tissue transfer in the United Kingdom. The number of infected persons thought to be alive is 26.

The number reported with AIDS is 27, of whom 22 are known to have died. We have no information on the cause of death.

NHS Residential Estate

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the report of the national health service residential estate commissioned from CSL Group Ltd.

Mr. Dorrell: CSL Group Ltd. was commissioned to examine the utilisation of national health service staff accommodation. Its report analyses NHS residential accommodation by type and number of units and recommends target rates for utilisation and availability. This will be incorporated in guidance about to be issued to the NHS. A copy of the report has been placed in the Library.

Home Care Standards

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessments his Department has undertaken of standards of nursing home care provided by national health service hospitals;

(2) what consultations he has had with local health authorities over the standards of home care provided by national health service hospitals.

Mr. Dorrell: Continuous nursing care may be provided in long-stay NHS hospital wards, community units, directly managed nurse-led units or through independent providers. It is for health authorities to decide the appropriate type and level of care and how best to secure it, taking account of local needs and priorities. Independent nursing homes are subject to the registration and inspection procedures laid down in part II of the Registered Homes Act 1984.

Health authorities as purchasers of health care services are expected to ensure that their contracts include appropriate quality standards and to monitor the delivery of care. The Department is in continuous contact with the health service through the NHS management executive.

Nasogastric Feeding Tubes

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 11 November, Official Report, column 409, when he expects to complete his consideration of whether to make nasogastric feeding tubes available on general practitioner prescription.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A decision on whether to make nasogastric feeding tubes available on general practitioner prescribing depends on the resource implications for the family health services and consultations on the transfer of a service that is currently the responsibility of health authorities.

Dental Services

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has plans to introduce a charter for dental patients.

Mr. Dorrell: We have no such plans.

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any plans to review the working of the capitation system for dental treatment for children; and whether he will introduce an item of service payment formula within the capitation framework.

Mr. Dorrell: We keep all aspects of the working of the new dental contract under review. The capitation system includes provision for item of service payments. These are listed under item 41 of the fee scale in the "Statement of Dental Remuneration".

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money has been paid in pre-entry payments for children on a monthly basis in the period since the inception of the new dental contract.

Mr. Dorrell: The information is given in the table.

Month/Year	Payment (£)
October 1990	336,560
November 1990	4,100,607
December 1990	6,928,169
January 1991	6,079,356
February 1991	6,579,365
March 1991	6,709,034
April 1991	6,541,420
May 1991	5,834,846
June 1991	5,301,253
July 1991	5,309,673
August 1991	4,587,857
September 1991	3,349,053
October 1991	4,138,035

Note: The figures refer to payments made under items 42(a) and 42(b) of the fee scale published in the "Statement of Dental Remuneration".

National Health Service News Management

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the cost of establishing the national health service management executive news management unit; and what is its budget.

Mr. Dorrell: The NHS management executive does not have a news management unit.

Secure Accommodation

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce an additional option for accommodating children midway between secure accommodation and open children's homes.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: If a child needs to have his liberty restricted it should be in premises which can hold him safely and securely and in accordance with the statutory safeguards provided by section 25 of the Children Act 1989.

Radiotherapy, Sunderland

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the average waiting time for patients needing radiotherapy treatment in Sunderland district health authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not available centrally. At March 1991 there were no patients waiting for radiotherapy treatment in Sunderland district health authority.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what response he has received from regional health authorities as a result of their being requested by his Department to notify the Department of approaches to regions from the hon. Member for Peckham about patients on waiting lists.

Mr. Dorrell: None.

Mr. D. H. Bullock

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will investigate the case of the constituent of the hon. Member for Liverpool, Garston, Mr. D. H. Bullock, who was admitted to Broadgreen hospital, Liverpool on 25 September 1991, discharged on 9 October 1991, and re-admitted on 13 October 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: We have received a full report on this case, which concerns a patient who contracted legionnaires disease at the cardiothoracic centre, Liverpool. We are satisfied that the hospital took immediate action to both isolate the infection and to take the necessary measures in line with the two codes of practice issued by the Health and Safety Executive and this Department.

Healthy Eating Campaign

Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what guidance he has given the food industry and educators with regard to the healthy eating campaign running alongside the HEA publication "Enjoy Healthy Eating"; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he will issue additional advice to the food industry and educators as to the role they can play in working towards a healthier nation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: When my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State launched the COMA report on dietary reference values in July, he asked the Health Education Authority to take the lead in developing a healthy eating campaign. The booklet "Enjoy Healthy Eating", which was published on 5 November, a copy of which is available in the Library, represents the start of that campaign. Further nutrition education resources for both professionals and the public are being developed.

So far as the food industry is concerned, the Government maintain a constructive dialogue with it on issues such as food labelling and the production and marketing of healthy choices in food supplies.

In the context of the Green Paper "The Health of the Nation", the responses of those representing the food industry have given a positive welcome to the initiative and have signalled their intention to play a full and constructive role.

Departmental Telephone Calls

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information is available on the number of calls made to directory inquiries from his Department since 1 April 1991.

Mr. Dorrell: Only two months' information is kept on telephone calls from the Department. Since 16 September, 3,900 calls have been made to directory inquiries.

Psychiatric Facilities

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the level of provision of medium secure psychiatric facilities in Wessex regional health authority; and whether there are any plans to develop them.

Mr. Dorrell: West Dorset health authority has been invited to co-ordinate the purchasing requirements of all the health authorities in Wessex for the provision of medium secure psychiatric facilities.

A decision will be taken about the nature, location and size of future provision, taking into consideration the recommendations emerging from the current national review of services for mentally disordered offenders and others requiring similar services.

Juveniles (Secure Accommodation)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make assistance available to local authorities to meet revenue expenditure in repect of the provision of secure accommodation for juveniles.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Secure accommodation in community homes forms part of a range of residential facilities provided by local authorities for children they are looking after. The revenue costs of such accommodation fall to the providing local authority, which may recharge other local authorities making placements there. The local authority associations have an opportunity to express views on pressures that might lead to additional expenditure, or savings, on personal social services as part of the discussions leading to the annual local authority settlement.

Grant aid is available from central Government to meet the full capital cost of providing secure accommodation in community homes.

Patients Charter

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will state the cost of production and distribution of (a) the patients charter and (b) the summary of the patients charter.

Mr. Dorrell: The costs of the production and distribution of the patients charter and the summary of the patients charter were £200,000 and £1,400,000 respectively.

EMPLOYMENT

Training Credits

14. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects to report on the training credit pilot schemes.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. and learned Friend was delighted to be able to announce yesterday the names of the training and enterprise councils and local enterprise companies that will be developing a second round of training credits schemes, to come into operation in April 1993. This second round of credit schemes will build on the experience of the existing training credit pilots and we hope to publish evaluation results from the first nine months of operating the pilots in the spring of 1992.

Unfair Dismissal

15. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to protect employees against unfair dismissal when they are trying to enforce a statutory right.

Mr. Forth: Employees who qualify can complain of unfair dismissal to an industrial tribunal. My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to amend the existing legislation.

17. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will amend the qualifying conditions for unfair dismissal for employees trying to enforce section 8 of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978.

22. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to amend the qualifying period for unfair dismissal when employees are dismissed for trying to enforce a statutory right.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to amend the existing legislation.

Unemployment

16. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which are the latest figures for unemployment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: This month's rise in seasonally adjusted unemployment of 15,700 is the smallest since September 1990 and the third successive fall in the rate of increase. In Scotland, Wales and the Northern region seasonally adjusted unemployment fell in October 1991.

18. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were unemployed in the United Kingdom on the latest date for which figures are available; and what was the comparable figure published in November 1979.

Mr. Howard: On the seasonally adjusted, consistent basis, there were 2,472,900 unemployed people in October 1991 compared with 1,052,500 in October 1979.

Wages Councils

19. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make a statement about the operation of the wages councils.

Mr. Forth: The wages councils have no permanent place in the labour market, but so long as they exist, the wages inspectorate will continue to enforce wages orders effectively.

Government Training Schemes

20. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are participating in Government training schemes now relative to 1979.

Mr. Howard: A total of 737,000 people entered Government training programmes in 1990-91 compared with 108,000 in 1978-79—a sevenfold increase.

Training and Enterprise Councils

21. Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on training and enterprise councils.

Mr. Jackson: All 82 training and enterprise councils are now operational and turning their ambitious plans into practical action to improve training and business services in every part of the country. The enthusiasm and commitment shown by the top business people leading the TEC initiative is without parallel and is laying a firm basis for the high-skill, high-productivity economy this country needs.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will give information showing the differences between profiled and actual expenditure by each training and enterprise council/local enterprise company and area office for each of the training and enterprise councils/local enterprise companies five funding blocks in each region and for Great Britain in total in 1990-91 and the latest available period; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what were the differences between profiled targets and actual performance of training and enterprise councils/local enterprise companies and area offices for (a) youth training starts, (b) youth training non-vocational qualifications I and II, (c) youth training non-vocational qualifications III and IV, (d) employment training starts, (e) employment training positive outcomes and (f) enterprise allowance scheme starts, in each region and for Great Britain in total in 1990-91 and the latest available period; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: It is not possible to provide the information requested. Profiles are produced for internal management information purposes only.

The part of the question that relates to local enterprise companies is for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland to answer.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many directors of training and enterprise councils are (i) men, (ii) women, (iii) from ethnic minority backgrounds and (iv) from the private sector; what information he has about from which industrial sectors directors with a private sector background come; and, of those non-private sector directors, how many are from (a) local authorities, (b) local education authorities, (c) other educational organisations, (d) trade unions, (e) voluntary organisations, (f) ethnic minority organisations, (g) employers' associations and (h) others.

Mr. Jackson: The information available is shown in the table. Information on the industrial sector background of directors from the private sector is not held centrally.

Category	Number of directors
(i) Men	1,014
(ii) Women	122
(iii) Ethnic minority background[1]	40
(iv) Private sector	805
(v) Non-private sector directors local authorities	231

Category	Number of directors
of which;
(a) Local authority	97
(b) Local Education Authority (not included in (a))	48
(c) Other educational organisation	27
(d) Trade Union	58
(e) Voluntary organisations	42
(f) Ethnic minority organisations	4
(g) Employer Association	11
(h) Others	44

[1]Based on information collected in June/July 1991: 12 Directors preferred not to state their ethnic origin.

Unemployment (North Tyneside)

23. Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will announce his proposals to reduce young male unemployment in north Tyneside.

Mr. Jackson: The Employment Service and Tyneside training and enterprise council deliver a wide range of employment, enterprise and training programmes to help unemployed people in north Tyneside, including young men. In particular, the Employment Service and Tyneside TEC, together with the local authority, other local bodies and residents, are involved in action to help the regeneration of the Meadow Well estate.

Wages Inspectorate

24. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to expand the wages inspectorate.

Mr. Forth: None. The wages inspectorate has adequate resources to enforce wages council orders effectively.

Textile Industry

25. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many jobs have been lost in the textile industry during the latest period for which figures are available; and what steps are being taken to prevent further losses.

Mr. Forth: The number of employees in employment in the textile industry in Great Britain decreased by 2,100 in the month to September 1991. The Government have created and will maintain a climate which encourages enterprise and diversification, so that industry as a whole remains competitive. It would be counter-productive to try to support any individual sector.

Cumbria TEC

26. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he last met the chairman of Cumbria TEC to discuss its budget plans.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. and learned Friend spoke to all TEC chairmen in England including the chairman of Cumbria TEC on Wednesday 6 November immediately following the autumn statement, to inform them of the Department's budgets next year as they affect TECs.

Youth Training

27. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the number of trainees on YT schemes in the Bristol, South constituency.

Mr. Jackson: I understand that Avon training and enterprise council has supplied the hon. Member with the information requested.

The Government have guaranteed that all young people who are under 18 and not in full-time education or a job and are seeking training are offered, and if necessary re-offered, a suitable youth training place. The Government remain committed to ensuring that the YT guarantee is met and has ensured that adequate funding is available to do so.

Wage Rises

28. Mr. Beaumont-Dark: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what research he has funded in his Department into the effect of wage rises on the level of employment.

Mr. Howard: The estimation of the effect of wage rises on employment is best dealt with by using a model which considers the economy as a whole. We therefore use results reported by the Treasury which indicate that a 1 per cent. rise in the average real wage lowers employment by about 110,000 to 220,000 overall.

My Department commissions much research on labour market issues and some projects may also shed light on the wage-employment relationship in particular sectors.

Services (Redundancies)

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has about the participation of people leaving Her Majesty's forces in the full range of training and employment schemes which are made available for the unemployed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The Employment Department group does not collect statistical information about ex-HM forces members entering training schemes or participating in Employment Service programmes.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what provision including the levels of funding he is asking training and enterprise councils/local enterprise councils and the Employment Service to make available in 1991-92 and over the next three years to members of Her Majesty's forces to resettle into employment following "Options for Change"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The Employment Service's full range of programmes and services is available to forces personnel to help them resettle into employment. Additional funding was allocated to the Employment Service in 1991-92 to allow it to introduce new programmes for newly unemployed people. These programmes are particularly suited to the needs of forces personnel and comprise job review workshops, which help with careers advice, and jobsearch seminars to improve job hunting techniques. The Employment Service has a long tradition of helping ex-forces personnel into employment and it is discussing with the Ministry of Defence ways in which this can be built on.

Training and enterprise councils and local enterprise companies will take account of the training and enterprise support needs of members of Her Majesty's forces seeking resettlement, as they will for any particular group. Ex-service personnel may enter employment training through a special eligibility route.

The proportion of training and enterprise budgets used to train ex-service personnel is the responsibility of individual training and enterprise councils and local enterprise companies and is determined by local needs and priorities.

Disablement Resettlement Officers

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have been on the caseloads of disablement resettlement officers in Great Britain and each standard region in each month since September 1990; how many interviews disablement resettlement officers have carried out in each of those months; what information he has on the outcomes of those interviews; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Midwives

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many midwives were employed and registered as unemployed in each of the last four years.

Mr. Jackson: I regret that information is not available on midwives registered as unemployed.

The following information on midwives, including student midwives, employed in English NHS hospitals and community health services has been supplied by the Department of Health:

NHS midwifery staff in post at 30 September each year in England: whole-time equivalents

	Number
1987	23,300
1988	23,300
1989	22,900
1990	23,800

EC Meetings

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the EC ministerial council meetings at which his Department has been or will be represented during November and December.

Mr. Jackson: I attended the Labour and Social Affairs Council in Brussels on 6 November. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State shall be attending the next Labour and Social Affairs Council in Brussels on 3 December.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what change there will be to the employment figures as a result of the redefinition of full-time work from 24 hours to 16 hours for those on income support; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: There will not be a change to the definition of full-time work in the employment series. It will remain at more than 30 hours per week, as it has for the last 45 years.

Departmental Telephone Calls

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information is available on the number of calls made to directory inquiries from his Department since 1 April 1991.

Mr. Jackson: The statistics available show that an average of 56 calls are made each day to directory inquiry services, from Employment Department and Employment Service headquarters buildings in Sheffield. No similar information is collected for other Employment Department group sites.

Employment Service

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress the Employment Service has made towards meeting the targets set out in its annual performance agreement for 1991-92.

Mr. Jackson: We were informed by the chief executive of the Employment Service that in the period April to September 1991, the Employment Service placed a total of 710,000 unemployed people into jobs. Some 16·8 per cent. of these placings were long-term unemployed people, 2·4 per cent. were disabled and 34 per cent. were unemployed people in inner cities, against annual targets of 16, 2·4 and 34 per cent. respectively. To take account of the extra resources we have allocated to the Employment Service to help unemployed people, which my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State announced in June, we have decided to increase the ES target for 1991-92 for placing unemployed people from 1·3 million to 1·335 million.

Over the same period, details of new claims were input into the computer within six days of claim being made in 89·3 per cent. of cases, and the total value of correct payments of unemployment benefit was 96·4 per cent. of the total value of payments, against annual targets of 91 and 95·5 per cent. respectively. In addition, the number of people who withdrew their claim to benefit after contact with ES fraud inspectors was 24,450. In the light of my right hon. and learned Friend's announcement in August to allocate additional resources to this area of work, we have decided to increase the ES annual target of claims withdrawn following fraud investigation from 45,000 to 49,000.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Political Campaign Expenditure

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General if he will meet the Charity Commissioners to discuss the expenditure of the Foundation for Business Responsibilities on political campaigns; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The trustees of the Foundation for Business Responsibilities have been invited by the Charity Commissioners to supply them with information as to the activities of the charity, its expenditure and receipts. I have asked the Charity Commissioners to send me a copy of the findings resulting from their inquiries.

Regina v. Amos

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Attorney-General if he will review the advice on the release of defendants on bail following the decision in Regina v. Amos, at Newport on 8 November.

The Attorney-General: The criteria for the grant of bail is contained in the Bail Act 1976 and its application to individual cases is a matter for judicial determination by the relevant court having heard representations from both prosecution and defence. In the case to which the hon. Member refers the Crown prosecution service made representations that bail should be withheld.

ENVIRONMENT

Departmental Achievements

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement of the achievements of his Department since October 1990.

Mr. Heseltine: The Government introduced legislation to cut all headline community charges for 1991-92 by £140, and made various improvements in the community charge reduction scheme. It used its powers to protect community charge payers from excessive charges by capping 14 authorities and twice extended those powers through primary legislation. Legislation was also enacted to exempt caravan owners from payment of the standard community charge. In April the Government issued a consultation paper "A New Tax for Local Government", proposing the introduction of a council tax to replace the community charge. The Government introduced the Local Government Finance Bill which provides for the new tax to be introduced from 1 April 1993. It is working closely with the local authority associations and others to ensure that the arrangements for the new tax operate efficiently. Contracts for the allocation of all dwellings in England to bands of value are presently being let, and work will begin next month.

The Government continue to promote the efficiency of local authorities through the encouragement of competition in the provision of local services. To this end I have, on a number of occasions, used my powers to restrict local authorities' ability to carry out certain services using their own work forces where it appears that the local authority concerned has acted anti-competitively, or has failed to meet the required financial objective. The Government have published a consultation document "Competing for Quality—Competition in the Provision of Local Services", which sets out proposals for developing compulsory competitive tendering for local authority services. It has introduced the Local Government Bill which contains enabling powers so that the outcome of that consultation can be reflected in secondary legislation.

The Bill also provides for the establishment of a new local government commission to review the structure of local government in England area by area. It will consider the case for moving to a new structure involving unitary authorities outside London and the metropolitan areas. It will be required to have regard to the need to reflect the identities and interest of local communities. It will make recommendations to the Secretary of State who may implement them by order, subject to parliamentary approval. The Government have issued a consultation paper on the internal management of local authorities.

Good progress is being made in regenerating inner city areas under the action for cities initiative. In partnership with the private sector, substantial investment is taking place in new factories, housing, shopping centres, roads and other infrastructure, all aimed at improving the quality of life, and creating new employment and training opportunities. Since October 1990, the Government have announced increased resources for inner city regeneration totalling over £180 million, for the period 1991-92 to 1993-94.

The city challenge competition was launched in May with the aim of targeting priority areas to improve opportunity and the quality of regeneration. It offers local authorities, in partnership with businesses and the voluntary sector, the opportunity to tackle some of their worst economic, social and environmental conditions. The 11 successful city challenge pacemakers, announced on 31 July, will each receive £7·5 million a year for up to five years, from urban and housing programmes, to take forward their winning plans. These resources, together with the contributions by the local authorities and their private, voluntary and community partners, will be directed at achieving the comprehensive and lasting regeneration of the key localities.

The Government are continuing with their housing reforms, including deregulation of new private lettings, new housing association financial arrangements, and tenants choice. A growing number of local authorities are transferring or considering the transfer of housing stock to housing associations, so opening up their management to the disciplines and opportunities which the private sector can provide. More local authority tenants are continuing to exercise their right to buy their own homes, while the Government's three year, £96 million initiative continues to provide accommodation for rough sleepers in central London.

The Government also announced two new initiatives in July—a new approach to local authority housing capital allocations through competitive bidding which should improve the quality of public housing for tenants; and an enhanced estate action programme for which an extra £350 million is to be made available over the next three years. The estate action initiative, together with housing action trusts, will increasingly concentrate resources on the most run-down local authority estates.

Following the publication of the environment White Paper at the end of September 1990, the Government have carried forward its strategy for the environment at home and abroad. A full account of progress over the first year was published in "This Common Inheritance: The First Year Report" Cm 1655 on 25 September 1991. A major achievement has been the creation of new and unique mechanisms within government, including "green Ministers" in each Department; two standing committees of Ministers on the environment; guidance on policy appraisal and on green housekeeping; the Advisory Committee on Business and the Environment—whose first report was published in November 1991; and joint fora with the voluntary sector and local government.

In environmental protection, public access to information has remained a priority. The drinking water inspectorate published its first annual report in July 1991 showing the high quality of much of Britain's water. In April 1991 my Department issued through major food retailers a free popular guide to action the individual can take to protect the environment, "Wake Up to What You can do for the Environment"; 3,500,000 copies have so far been distributed. Air quality information is now widely available on weather forecasts, teletext and helplines and the anniversary report on the White Paper contained proposals to strengthen the system of public registers of information on major industrial emissions by the creation of aggregate registers on types and sources of emission.

In the two public expenditure rounds since the White Paper's publication, the Government have demonstrated their commitment to provide the resources needed to tackle environmental problems. Specific borrowing approvals have been available to local authorities for investment in new recycling plant and to clean up old tips. Staffing levels in the pollution inspectorate have increased by over 25 per cent. to meet the demands of integrated pollution control and my Department is supporting 41 projects under the new fund for the voluntary sector, the environmental grant fund, set up to promote White Paper objectives.

International work continues to be a major Government priority. Following the commitments made in the White Paper, the Government reached EC agreement in March 1991 to earlier dates for the phasing out of ozone depleting substances, bringing forward the date for CFCs to July 1997. Britain is playing a leading part in work towards agreements on climate change and biodiversity and in preparations for the 1992 UN Conference on Environment and Development. In October 1991, on behalf of the Government, I signed the international protocol which provides for protection of Antarctica for the next half century.

The Government are setting new standards in pollution control at home. Europe's first full system of integrated pollution control came into effect from 1 April 1991 under powers provided in the Environmental Protection Act 1990. The Act has also provided for tougher standards for waste disposal, increased fines for all types of pollution offenses and the creation of new expert groups to advise on standards. In October 1991, the Government published their consultation paper with proposals for a new single environment agency, controlling pollution to land, air and water.

The Rural Development Commission has continued its efforts to diversify the rural economy, concentrating on those rural development areas with the greatest needs and the rural coalfields of the east midlands. In October 1990 my Department announced agreement to the Countryside Commission's proposed initiative to create a new national Forest. A director has been appointed and a business plan is being prepared as the basis of considering how the proposal might best be carried forward. My Department also agreed in February this year to proposals by the Countryside Commission to prepare business plans for a further nine community forests near major towns and cities in England. A 39th area of outstanding natural beauty in England and Wales, the Blackdown hills, was established in June.

In June, the countryside stewardship scheme was launched. It seeks to encourage the improvement and extension of habitats which are of wildlife and landscape importance and which contribute to public enjoyment of the countryside. The scheme closed for applications on 31 October, by which time almost 1,200 valid applications had been received, well in excess of the target for the first year of between 600 and 900.

The Government have improved the delivery of nature conservation through the establishment of new country councils in place of the Nature Conservancy Council. English Nature, the successor body in England, will receive over £2 million of new money in the current year and a further increase of almost £4·2 million in 1992-93. In April, the protection given to wild birds under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 was enhanced by the introduction of amended regulations controlling the registration of captive birds of prey and the trade in dead birds. With the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, my Department launched a campaign to stamp out the illegal poisoning of birds of prey and other wildlife. In September an information package was introduced to deter the use of poison baits for predator control and to encourage the public to report instances of suspected abuse.

Following consultation, my Department announced in September additional safeguards for sites of special scientific interest—SSSIs—in England and Wales: they will no longer be able to be used for war games, motor sports and clay pigeon shooting unless the local authority has granted planning permission; local authorities will be required to consult English Nature or the Countryside Council for Wales about planning applications in areas adjacent to SSSIs; there will be a clearer policy on calling-in planning applications for determination by the Secretary of State; and additional advice has been given on when environmental assessment may be required in sites of national and international importance.

As a result of finalising the first quinquennial review of protected British wild animals and plants, three more species of animal have been given protection—the allis shad, the adder and the freshwater pearl mussel—bringing the total number of species of animal and plant given statutory protection to 207. My Department has given support to English Nature's "Recovery" programme which, in its first year, includes reintroduction, translocation, habitat management and research involving six endangered species. The Government took the lead in preparing the text of an agreement to protect European bats under the Bonn convention on migratory species was finalised in Geneva in September 1991.

The Government have made an important contribution to the protection of internationally important habitats including the designation of five wetlands under the Ramsar convention and two special protection areas under the EC birds directive. They have also taken an active role in negotiations on the proposed EC habitats directive and the EC regulation on the importation of certain furs which was formally adopted earlier this month.

The Government have increased to £12 million a year the grant in aid to the National Heritage Memorial Fund, enabling it to build up investment funds in order to preserve historic properties, objects and collections for the nation. Within the past few weeks the fund has purchased Chastleton house in Oxfordshire and presented this 17th century mansion to the National Trust to preserve with its contents. The cathedral repair grant scheme, to be run by English Heritage, was launched in April, with funding of £11·5 million over three years.

The Planning and Compensation Act 1991 made important and widely welcomed reforms to planning law. It reforms the development plan system, requiring the extension of local plans to cover all areas, simplifying the procedures for the preparation and adoption of plans, and emphasising the importance of plans in development control. It makes planning procedures more efficient and effective, and in particular strengthens enforcement provisions. It provides more generous compensation, especially for home owners subject to compulsory purchase. Much of the Act has already been implemented; the rest will follow in the early part of next year.

The Government have continued to produce more accessible planning guidance to local authorities in the form of planning policy guidance notes and circulars on issues including planning and affordable housing, and sport and recreation. A conference on regional planning for the south-east was held in March.

My Department has completed a substantial revision of the building regulations, which includes improvements to the provisions on structural and fire safety, on protection from radon and methane gas and for disabled people; extends the requirements for sound insulation to flat conversions; and introduces a new requirement for safe glazing. I will be laying revised regulations before Parliament next month. The United Kingdom has become one of the first EC member states to implement the provisions of the construction products directive; the regulations come into force on 27 December this year. This will open the way for free trade in construction products throughout the European Community.

Solvents

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how the units of production will be defined to which the exemption limits for (a) degreasing solvent and (b) paint solvent will be applied.

Mr. Baldry: My hon. Friend is perhaps referring to industrial coating and printing processes which have been prescribed for pollution control under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Exemption limits, expressed in terms of specified levels of annual usage of certain substances by processes concerned, are set out in section 6.5 of schedule I to the Environmental Protection (Prescribed Processes and Substances) Regulations 1991. These are to be interpreted in the light of rules set out in schedule 2 to the regulations.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what the community charge would be in the current year in each local government area if local authorities were required to raise 20 per cent. of their costs from community charge payers.

Mr. Key: After taking into account community charge benefit, the community charge reduction scheme, and the income support element relating to community charges, the average community charge actually paid in England for 1991-92 is estimated to be £172. The income from this charge represents 15 per cent. of English local authorities' budgeted gross revenue expenditure.

If the proportion of income from community charges were to rise to 20 per cent., the average community charge for 1991-92 actually paid in England would increase to £229.

Average charges for individual areas are not available on this basis.

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the total administrative costs of the (a) community charge and (b) proposed council tax.

Mr. Key: Local authorities in England have budgeted to spend £489 million on community charge collection in 1991-92. I would expect the council tax to cost no more than half that amount to collect.

Hertfordshire County Council

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out in tabular form the expenditure of Hertfordshire county council in 1978-79 and for the latest available year in (a) cash terms and (b) constant price terms.

Mr. Key: The available information is as follows:

Hertfordshire County Council

	Expenditure[1]
	Outturn 1980-81	Budget estimate 1991-92
	£ million	£ million
Cash terms	266·8	558·1
Constant price terms (1991-92 prices)	524·2	558·1

[1] In 1980-81 expenditure is total expenditure, while in 1991-92 expenditure is net revenue expenditure. These derive from two different systems of local government finance and are therefore not directly comparable. Comparable information is not available for earlier years on an individual authority basis.

Community Charge

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many individuals failed to pay all or some of their community charge in the Chelmsford local authority area in 1990-91; and what percentage this represents of the total number of charge payers in the Chelmsford local authority area;

(2) how many individuals failed to pay all or some of their community charge in the Chelmsford local authority area between (a) 1 April 1990 and 30 September 1990 and (b) 1 April 1991 and 30 September 1991; and what percentage these figures represent of the total number of charge payers in the Chelmsford local authority area;

(3) what was the total percentage amount of community charge paid in the Chelmsford local authority area in 1990-91; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The number of individuals in Chelmsford who failed to make any payment of community charge in 1990-91 was 3,500—3 per cent.of all individuals liable in Chelmsford. Information on individuals making partial payments is not available.

The authority reported the same figure—3,500—for the number of individuals who had failed to make any payment between 1 April 1990 and 30 September 1990. It should be noted that the number not making any payment can increase as well as decrease during the year, as it will include those who have recently become liable by moving into the area or becoming 18.

The figure for the corresponding period in 1991 is 7,188 —6 per cent. of chargepayers.

The authority had received 97 per cent. of its budgeted community charge income for 1990-91 by 30 March 1991.

Wild Birds

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the EC has initiated proceedings against the United Kingdom Government concerning the rate of designation of special protection areas under the EC directive on the conservation of wild birds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Government officials have held meetings with representatives of the European Commission following the issue of a reasoned opinion concerning the rate of designation of special protection areas under the EC birds directive. The United Kingdom provided the commission with details of the protection afforded to SPAs and potential SPAs. The Government have identified a firm forward programme of sit designation, of which the recent designation of Rutland Water and the extension of Skokholm SPA to include the islands of Skomer and Middleholm is a part.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to designate the Humber estuary a special protection area under the EC directive on the conservation of wild birds.

Mr. Baldry: The former Nature Conservancy Council's proposal for the designation of the Humber estuary as a special protection area for birds is under consideration within government.

Water Pollution

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to protect the water environment from pollution by dangerous substances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Controls on discharges of dangerous substances to the water environment are exercised by the National Rivers Authority under the Water Act 1989 and by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution under the Environmental Protection Act 1990. Discharges must enable receiving waters to meet relevant environmental quality standards—EQSs. EQSs have already been set for 10 red list substances: proposals for EQSs for the remaining red list substances are set out in a consultation paper to be issued shortly, and copies of which I have placed in the Library today.

Local Government Commission

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Government will announce the chairman or chairwoman of the proposed new local government commission.

Mr. Heseltine: I am delighted to announce that Mr. John Banham, currently the director general of the CBI, is to be the chairman of the new local government commission when, subject to Parliament, it is set up next year.

Council House Sales

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many dwellings each local authority has sold under the right-to-buy legislation, or voluntarily, since 1979; and what percentage of the total local authority stock they represent.

Mr. Yeo: I have placed in the Library two tables giving available information on local authority sales up to June 1991. Table 1 shows year by year information for each local authority during the years 1979-80 to 1986-87. Table 2 shows year by year information for each local authority since 1886-87 together with cumulative figures since April 1979 and the proportion of their stock sold since April 1979.

Homelessness

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what plans he has to extend to areas outside London the emergency measures for people sleeping rough in snow and extreme cold;

(2) what extra measures he intends to take this winter to provide help for homeless people sleeping rough in Leicester in snow or extreme cold.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 26 November 1991]: In 1991-92, the Government are providing just under £6 million in grants to voluntary organisations outside central London for 122 practical projects to prevent and relieve homelessness. Among those being funded is the Leicester night shelter project which last winter provided additional facilities and medical care during the worst of the cold weather. I understand that it plans to provide the same services this winter.

British Waterways

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library a copy of the auction catalogue for the sale of property held by British Waterways on 21 November, together with a list of prices realised for any property sold.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 26 November 1991]: My Department does not have a copy of this catalogue. Nor will we receive details of the prices received until the board's annual accounts are submitted.

Mortgage Arrears

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will bring forward proposals for a scheme to give owner-occupiers the option of converting from mortgage to rent to avoid home repossessions;

(2) if he will make it his policy to introduce a scheme for owner-occupiers who fall behind on mortgage payments to enable them to transfer their mortgages to shared ownership with local authorities.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 26 November 1991]: Local authorities may already acquire property from a defaulting borrower where they are themselves the lender and, if they choose, leave the former owner in place as a tenant. Authorities may also acquire property with a view to disposal including disposal of a shared ownership lease. Authorities may further provide resources to housing associations to enable them to purchase property so that the previous owner remains on shared ownership terms or as a tenant. Details of these arrangements and procedures are currently set out in schedule 3 to the Housing Revenue Account Subsidy Determination 1990.

Departmental Telephone Calls

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information is available on the number of calls made to directory inquiries from his Department since 1 April 1991.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 26 November 1991]: It is estimated that at present, around 2,000 calls a month are made to directory inquiries from DoE offices throughout the country.

Home Repossessions

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations he has had with the Council of Mortgage Lenders over the number of repossessed houses.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 26 November 1991]: My hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning has been in frequent consultation with the Council of Mortgage Lenders. As a result of those continuing discussions, the CML has published statements of practice on the treatment of arrears, new arrangements have been announced on the payment of mortgage interest for borrowers eligible for income support and lenders, insurance companies and housing associations are arranging for empty property to be made available for families in need.

NATIONAL FINANCE

EC (Visits)

Mr. Forman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for himself, and for each of the Ministers at his Department, details of (i) the number of visits made during the past month to destinations outside the United Kingdom but within the European Community on official business related to the European Community, (ii) the number of visits made to Brussels within the past month on official business related to the European Community and (iii) the number of nights spent over the past month away from the United Kingdom on official European Community business.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The information requested is as follows:

	(i)	(ii)	(iii)
Chancellor	2	2	2
Chief Secretary	0	0	0
Financial Secretary	1	1	0

Magazines (VAT)

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Cunninghame, North (Mr. Wilson) of 5 November, Official Report, column 33, whether the zero-rating of magazines, in addition to books, is safeguarded until at least December 1996.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Yes.

North Sea Oil and Gas

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any plans further to encourage investment in North sea oil and gas projects.

Mr. Maples: Some future North sea projects may involve the landing of gas outside the United Kingdom, or its initial treatment or storage outside the United Kingdom or the United Kingdom continental shelf. At present, the petroleum revenue tax—PRT—and "ring fence" corporation tax—CT—rules do not cater for these situations. To ensure that these tax rules do not distort the economics of such investments, we propose bringing forward legislation in the next Finance Bill to take account of new developments of this kind. In particular PRT relief, and CT relief within the "ring fence", will be given for the cost of transporting oil or gas to the nearest reasonable place of delivery outside the United Kingdom; and relief for initial treatment and storage costs will similarly be extended to costs incurred outside the United Kingdom or the United Kingdom continental shelf. Relevant expenditure already incurred will qualify for this new relief.

A double charge to both PRT and gas levy could arise if gas were sold, under a new contract, from a reservoir which was previously exploited under a contract which pre-dated PRT and so was subject to gas levy instead. Although production under the new contract would be within the scope of PRT, gas levy would under the present law still be payable. To remove this unintended double charge, the proposed legislation will cancel gas levy when a PRT exempt gas contract which already contains a single fixed termination date comes to an end at that date, and gas from the reservoir begins to be sold under a new contract which is not exempt from PRT.

These changes should encourage companies to proceed with worthwhile and substantial North sea investments.

Public Services Survey

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 18 November, Official Report, column 26, when he intends to commission an opinion poll to investigate public attitudes towards public services; and if he will indicate (a) how much he envisages the survey will cost, (b) how many members of the public are expected to be involved in the survey, (c) when he expects the questionnaire to be finalised, (d) when he expects the sampling and questioning to begin, (e) when he expects the survey to be completed and (f) when he expects the results to be published.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 26 November 1991]: I intend to commission an opinion survey before long. The details have not yet been finalised.

TRANSPORT

Registrar-General of Shipping

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many staff have been engaged at the Registrar General of Shipping's office in Cardiff to operate the sea fishing register.

Mr. McLoughlin: In the year to date 12 staff have been engaged in the operation of the British fishing vessel register.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much expenditure has been incurred in centralising the register of fishing vessels at the Registrar General of Shipping's office in Cardiff.

Mr. McLoughlin: The expenditure incurred in centralising the register of fishing vessels at the Registrar General of Shipping's office in Cardiff was £325,000.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the annual running costs of operating the sea fishing register at the Cardiff office of the Registrar General of Shipping.

Mr. McLoughlin: The annual running costs of operating the British fishing vessel register at the Cardiff office of the Registrar General of Shipping in the year 1990-91 was £315,000.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the existing capacity on channel tunnel rail routes; and what estimates he has made of total domestic passenger traffic by the year 2005.

Mr. Freeman: I refer my hon. Friend to British Rail's route comparison report, a copy of which is in the Library. Section 6.2.4 of the report presents details of capacity on existing lines between the channel tunnel and London. The report also describes BR's approach to forecasting domestic passenger demand and the conclusions it draws.

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if it is still his intention that the whole easterly channel tunnel rail link route will be brought up to the same stage of detail and development as the southerly route by July 1992.

Mr. Freeman: No deadline has been set for developing the easterly route to the stage at which it can be published for public consultation and safeguarding. However, I confirm that British Rail still expects the work to take about nine months once the framework and the mapping base for it have been established.

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in full the details of the Ove Arup and Rail Europe channel tunnel high-speed rail route proposals.

Mr. Freeman: Details of the Ove Arup and Rail Europe proposals are included in the reports published by British Rail on the comparative appraisal of the route options; copies have been placed in the Library. British Rail does not intend publishing other material since this is based on commercially confidential information.

Parking Control

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidance his Department has issued on the number of types of parking control that may apply in London boroughs.

Mr. Chope: A wide range of parking control systems is available to local authorities under the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984. The main systems and methods of payment are set out in a discussion document "Paying for Parking" issued by the Department last year and circulated to all local authorities in England.

Guidance is also available in "Roads and Traffic in Urban Areas"—1987—and "Highways and Traffic Management in London"—1985—both of which are available from HMSO.

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many separate types of parking control he has authorised in the London boroughs of (a) Camden and (b) Wandsworth; and what information he has on the types of parking control in operation in each of those boroughs.

Mr. Chope: London boroughs have direct responsibility for the parking schemes they introduce. There is no systematic collection of data by the Department on controls operating in the boroughs. In the last three years, special approvals of parking equipment have been given in connection with schemes in Camden and Wandsworth as follows:

22 October 1990
Special approval for electronic parking meters in London borough of Camden.
22 November 1991
Special approval for Hampstead parking vouchers (London borough of Camden)
2 March 1990
Special approval for electronic parking meter in London borough of Wandsworth.

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what requests his Department has received from the London borough of Camden for approval of parking control schemes since January 1990; and what response his Department has made.

Mr. Chope: Generally, the Department's approval of parking control schemes is only required in respect of special approval for parking equipment, including vouchers, and any related special authorisation of non-prescribed traffic signs.

The only special approvals for parking equipment issued to Camden in the last three years have been those referred to today in my previous answer to my hon. Friend.

Motorway Service Areas

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all motorway service areas located within primarily residential areas, those located within a radius of half a mile from residential areas and those within a radius of one mile.

Mr. Chope: This information is not readily available in the form requested. I will write to my hon. Friend.

East Coast Line Electrification

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the faults that have occurred with the system since the introduction of the east coast main line electrification, the reason for each fault and the safety implications.

Mr. Freeman: Public services on the whole of the newly electrified east coast main line commenced on 8 July 1991. Since then, BR has formally reported one failure of the electrification equipment. This occurred at Portobello on 29 August, when a return conductor on the overhead line equipment—OLE—expanded in the heat, causing a short circuit. There was no danger to the public or to railway staff.

There was another failure on 18 November, between Stevenage and Hitchin. I understand from the Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate that a part of the OLE broke, and the wire carrying the traction current was struck by a diesel train. Half a mile of the OLE was pulled down. The current was automatically cut off and again, there was no danger.

Trust Ports

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out the timetables for each of the trust ports seeking privatisation; whether he expects the timetables to be adhered to; what obstacles to privatisation remain; and if he will set them out in a deposited paper in the Library.

Mr. McLoughlin: The proposed timetables for each of those trust port authorities at present seeking privatisation under the Ports Act 1991 are as follows:

(i) Tees and Hartlepool Port Authority:

28 November 1991—closing date for final bids.

(ii) Medway Ports Authority:

20 December 1991—closing date for indicative bids.
3 January 1992—shortlisting of final bidders.
14 February 1992—closing date for final bids.

(iii) Clyde Ports Authority:

13 December 1991—closing date for representations on transfer scheme under section 9(6) of the Act.
10 January 1992—closing date for indicative bids.
17 January 1992—shortlisting of final bidders.
14 February 1992—closing date for final bids.

(iv) Port of London Authority (for Port of Tilbury):

6 January 1992—closing date for indicative bids.
13 January 1992—shortlisting of final bidders.
17 February 1992—closing date for final bids.

Except where the timing is shown as being dependent on section 9(6) of the Act, the above dates represent in each case the best estimate by the port authority concerned of the main stages in their privatisation process and may be subject to change due to unforeseen events.

When each sale is finalised will depend on how quickly each port authority is able to make its recommendation to the Secretary of State as to the successful bidder and how quickly the Secretary of State is able to reach a decision on that recommendation.

It will be necessary for an order approved by a resolution of the House providing for a levy on disposals of land under section 17(8) of the Act to become effective before an individual privatisation, other than that of the port of Tilbury, can be completed. A draft of this order will be laid before the House very shortly.

Road Improvements (Southampton)

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans there are to update the eastern dual carriageway to full motorway standards between the M27 and Eastern docks, Southampton; and what is the timescale.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 25 November 1991]: The approach roads from the M27 and M271 to the Eastern docks are roads for which Hampshire county council is the highway authority. I understand that the county council is planning some improvements but that these do not involve any upgrading to motorway standards.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Action for Community Employment

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the most recent information he has on the destination of people who leave Action for Community Employment and the job training programme; how many leavers (a) got jobs (b) became unemployed or (c) went on to further training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The most recent survey of the destinations of participants leaving the Action for Community Employment—ACE—programme was carried out for the year 1990. The survey was based upon a sample of 1,000 ACE leavers and revealed that: 31·4 per cent. of participants found work; 63·7 per cent. of participants became unemployed; and 4·9 per cent. of participants took up further training or entered further education.

The most recent information available on the destination of participants leaving the job training programme is for the period 1 April 1990 to 31 March 1991 and is as follows:

Destinations	Number of People
Found Work	1,542
Unemployed	1,432
Further Education	54
Further Training	140
Not Known	574

Restart

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many unemployed people have been referred to restart courses since January 1991; how many of them were unemployed for over two years; how many attended and completed the course; what were the outcomes of the participants; and how many had benefit penalties imposed for not attending or failing to complete their attendance at the restart course; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Restart courses were discontinued in Northern Ireland in March 1989.

Job Clubs

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) men and (b) women in 1990-91 and since April 1991 have joined job clubs; how many have left; how many leavers got jobs; and how many entered another positive outcome.

Mr. Needham: In 1990-91 a total of 3,674 people joined job clubs; 3,033 have left, 1,640 got jobs and there were 848 other positive outcomes. In the period April to October 1991 a total of 2,346 people joined job clubs; 1,914 have left, 1,034 got jobs and there were 563 other positive outcomes. Separate figures for men and women are not available.

Housing Executive

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions in the financial year 1990-91 grant applications to the Northern Ireland Housing Executive were refused on the ground that the contractor proposed to carry out the work was not on the Executive's approved list of contractors; in how many cases the applicant was informed that an alternative contractor could qualify; and what was the average delay in processing claims using the new contractor.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but the chairman has advised me that information about such cases is not collected and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Since the introduction of the warranted builders scheme in August 1987 the number of refusals arising from proposed use of a non-warranted builder have been few. During the past year approximately 12 cases received exceptional approval for the use of non-warranted builders.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many applications for grant aid to the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, which are still under consideration, were submitted to each office of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive prior to (a) 1 January 1991, (b) 1 October 1990, (c) 1 July 1991, (d) 1 April 1990 and (e) 1 January 1990, respectively;

(2) how many grant applications were referred for an occupational therapist's report by each office of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, in each month since 1988.

Mr. Needham: These questions are for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but the chairman has advised me that the information sought is not recorded in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the average time lapse between the referral of a grant application, by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, to an occupational therapist, and the receipt by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive of recommendations of the occupational therapist.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but the chairman has advised me that the average response time varies by region as follows:

Belfast—11 months (although east and south Belfast average only 2 months)
North East—2-3 months
West—11 months (Derry substantially longer than Omagh and Enniskillen)
South—4-5 months
South East—3 months

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the average time lapse between receipt of an application for grant aid by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and the initial house inspection by a grants officer.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but the chairman has advised me that the average time lapse between receipt of an application and initial inspection is currently nine weeks.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applications for (a) intermediate grant, (b) conversion grant, (c) repair grant and (d) improvement grant, respectively, were (i) received and (ii) approved by each office of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, in each month since 1988.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive but the chairman has advised me that in relation to the numbers of applications received this information is not available in the form requested and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Details of the numbers of applications approved have been placed in the Library.

Water Pollution

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he has taken to protect the water environment from pollution by dangerous substances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Controls on discharge of dangerous substances to the water environment are exercised by the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland under the Water Act (Northern Ireland) 1972. Discharges must enable receiving waters to meet relevant environmental quality standards—EQSs. Environmental quality standards for a number of red list substances are already in use in Northern Ireland: proposals for environmental quality standards for the remaining red list substances are set out in a consultation paper to be issued shortly, copies of which will be placed in the Library.

Emergency Provisions Act

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what arrangements he has made to review the operation of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1991.

Mr. Brooke: Viscount Colville of Culross, who has carried out an annual review of emergency legislation in previous years, has accepted my invitation to prepare a report on the operation of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1991. As with the former reviews, the intention is that the report should enable both Houses of Parliament to discharge effectively their responsibility to scrutinise the operation of the Act on the occasion of the annual debates on the continuance orders, and to determine whether any of the Act's temporary provisions could be allowed to lapse.

As the temporary provisions of the Act will lapse on 15 June 1992 unless continued in force by order, I have asked Viscount Colville to submit his report by the beginning of April next year.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the allocation to individual programmes in Northern Ireland of the public expenditure totals announced on 6 November.

Mr. Brooke: In his autumn statement on 6 November, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced total public expenditure planning figures for the Northern Ireland programme. I have now decided on the allocations to individual programmes shown in the following table: copies of a more detailed statement have been placed in the Library. These allocations reflect my assessment of how best to distribute the Northern Ireland public expenditure totals in response to local needs and circumstances.

Programme	1992-93	1993-94	1994-95
Northern Ireland Office:
Law, Order, Protective and Miscellaneous Services	832	880	920
Northern Ireland Departments:
Northern Ireland Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry Services and Support	119	120	130
Industry Trade and Employment	445	440	440
Energy	5	0	10
Transport	173	180	190
Housing	249	260	270
Environmental and Miscellaneous Services	199	230	240
Law, Order and Protective Services (Fire Service)	37	40	40
Education	1,211	1,270	1,330
Health and Personal Social Services	1,242	1,290	1,340
Social Security Administration	150	150	150
Other Public Services	90	90	100
Total Northern Ireland Block (excluding Social Security Benefits)	4,754	4,970	5,150
Social Security Benefits	2,177	2,350	2,490
Total Northern Ireland Block	6,931	7,320	7,650
National Agriculture and Fishery Support	94	90	90
Total Northern Ireland Programme	7,025	7,410	7,740

Notes:

(1) Figures are rounded to nearest £1 million for 1992-93 and to the nearest £10 million for 1993-94 and 1994-95 (thus "£0 million" means "less than £5 million"). Figures may not sum to totals due to roundings.

(2) The PE plans for 1992-93 onwards have been adjusted to reflect Government's intention that NIE should be privatised early in 1992.

(3) The planning figures for 1992-93 form the basis for preparation by Northern Ireland Departments and the Northern Ireland Office of Main Estimates for the coming year. These will be presented to Parliament in due course.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

EC Regional Committee

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has made any estimate of the number of places Scotland will be allocated from the United Kingdom share of 24 seats on the proposed regional committee as part of the political union draft treaty terms.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The arrangements for selecting members of the proposed new committee of the regions will be for member states to decide. The distribution of United Kingdom places will be considered when the final outcome of the negotiations is known.

Military Equipment Sales (Russia)

Mr. Temple-Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next meets the President of the Russian Republic, if he will discuss the proposals to authorise individual defence equipment factories located within the Republic to sell weapons and other military equipment on the open market; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no plans to meet President Yeltsin in the immediate future. The Russian republic has the right to export weapons. We should expect it to abide by the Soviet Union's international obligations and guidelines on conventional arms exports agreed by the permanent members of the Security Council at their meeting in London on 17-18 October. These guidelines include observance of restraint and assessment of recipient countries' needs for legitimate self-defence.

European Community Meetings

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the EC ministerial council meetings at which his Department has or will be represented during November and December.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Foreign and Commonwealth Office Ministers have attended, or will be attending the following Council meetings:

Foreign Affairs Councils on 4 November, 2 and 16 December; and European Council on 9 and 10 December.

They are also attending the following additional ministerial meetings:

Intergovernmental Conference on Political Union on 4 and 12 and 13 November; and 2 and 3 December;
Ad hoc European political co-operation meeting on 8 November; and Inter-institutional meeting with the European Parliament on political union on 5 November.

I make a written statement on the first working day of each month, forecasting all European Community Council meetings for that month and listing the items to be discussed. A copy of this statement is placed in the Library of the House.

Baltic States

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he is having with the German Government on the establishment of joint embassies to Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are not having discussions with the German Government on the establishment of joint embassies in the Baltic states. The possibility of co-locating premises with the Germans or other diplomatic missions will be examined on the basis of practical factors. Following the re-establishment of diplomatic relations with the Baltic states on 6 September, we established an embasssy in each Baltic state in early October. Germany has established its own embassies. Our embassies keep in touch with their EC counterparts and other diplomatic missions on administrative matters and have been co-operating closely.

There are differing circumstances in each country. In Estonia, our embassy is currently renting temporary office space from the German embassy while both look for permanent premises. In Latvia there are former British and German embassy premises to which both countries may return. In Lithuania, the British and German embassies are co-operating with each other and other missions in the difficult search for suitable accommodation.

CSCE

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the recent CSCE seminar in Oslo; and if he will place a copy of the concluding document in the Library.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The CSCE seminar of experts on democratic institutions, held in Oslo from 4 to 15 November, provided a useful opportunity to experts in this field to make contacts and to exchange views. The concluding document, a copy of which is being placed in the Library, contains suggestions made by the experts which will be considered at the Helsinki follow-up meeting. It also recognises the important role which has been played, and will continue to be played, by the Council of Europe in the provision of expertise on democratic institutions.

British Citizens, Abu Dhabi

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the number of British citizens in Abu Dhabi who have had their passports confiscated in connection with BCCI; and if he will list their names.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Her Majesty's embassy at Abu Dhabi has been assured by the court receiver, most recently on 25 November 1991, that passports of all but a few British mationals have now been released and can be collected by their holders. The embassy has asked the court receiver for a list of names of those whose passports are not to be released.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations he has received from British citizens in Abu Dhabi.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have received no representations from British citizens in Abu Dhabi.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the British ambassador in the United Arab Emirates was first informed of the situation of the British citizens in Abu Dhabi whose passports are being withheld from them by the BCCI court receivers; what information was received; and what action was then taken.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: A small number of former BCCI employees approached Her Majesty's embassy in Abu Dhabi as early as September 1991. A few individuals asked in late October and November for advice on how to recover their passports. The embassy undertook to find out why the passports could not be released. On 18 November 1991 the court receiver gave instructions that passports should be released in all but a small number of cases. These relate to individuals who have major liabilities to the bank and whose situation is being studied on a case-by-case basis.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what protest has been made by the Foreign Office to the Abu Dhabi Government about British citizens detained in connection with BCCI; and what has been the response.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The matter of consular access was raised with the United Arab Emirates by Her Majesty's embassy in Abu Dhabi on 9 September 1991, and various times thereafter. My hon. Friend, the Minister of State, raised the question of consular access to the detainees with the United Arab Emirates deputy Prime Minister on 28 October 1991. Consular access was granted on 31 October 1991.

The embassy in Abu Dhabi has been seeking ways of overcoming administrative obstacles facing those who are not in detention but have not been able to leave. Passports and air tickets have now been made available to the majority of those who wish to leave, and arrangements made for the shipping of their personal effects.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what occasions the British ambassador and his staff have visited those detained in Abu Dhabi; what representations were made by them; and what action is being taken to secure their release.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Following representations by Her Majesty's ambassador at Abu Dhabi and his staff, Her Majesty's consul was permitted to see the detainees on 31 October 1991. Their release will depend on the due process and practice of Abu Dhabi law.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what explanation has been given by the Abu Dhabi authorities as to why the passports of the British citizens detained in Abu Dhabi were taken from them.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: It is common practice in many countries for employers to hold passports. In the case of BCCI employees, the authorities kept employees' passports while they investigated their financial position. Instructions have now been given for all but a small number to be released.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Japanese Investment

18. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make a statement about the United Kingdom's share of Japanese investment into the European Community.

35. Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make a statement about the United Kingdom's share of Japanese investment into the European Community.

Mr. Leigh: According to information published by the Japanese Ministry of Finance, the United Kingdom has 39 per cent. of the stock of Japanese investment in the European Community.

RECHAR Grants

19. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make a statement on the European Commission's refusal to provide funds for RECHAR grants in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Leigh: The Commission's objection is an involved one about the "additionality" of the United Kingdom expenditure to match the RECHAR grants. Although under no obligation to do so, the United Kingdom has made provision for additional public expenditure. The Commission is misrepresenting the position.

Government-Industry Contacts

20. Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will meet regularly with business men, to enable his Department to maintain a two-way channel of communication between Government and industry.

Mr. Lilley: I have regular meetings with business people and will continue to do so.

Social Charter

21. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from industrialists in support of the social charter.

Mr. Lilley: I have received none.

Film Industry

23. Sir Anthony Durant: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he intends to propose any new initiatives to boost investment in the film industry.

Mr. Leigh: We are waiting for the report of the working party which is looking at ways of increasing private sector investment in film production.

Business Taxation

24. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from industrialists about the level of taxation on business.

Mr. Lilley: I receive a wide range of representations from industrialists about business taxation. Industry welcomed the 2 per cent. cut in the main rate of corporation tax announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor in his Budget statement. And it welcomes the fact that we have the lowest rate of corporation tax in both the EC and the G7.

Telecommunications

25. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the operation of public purchasing directives in the telecommunications sector.

Mr. Redwood: The directives on public purchasing are part of the Community's single market programme. The supplies directive requires Government Departments, local authorities and certain other public bodies to award contracts above a certain threshold in value terms—currently £132,000 for regional and local government and £88,500 for central Government—in accordance with procedures designed to secure the non-discriminatory treatment of suppliers, including those supplying telecommunications equipment.

The utilities directive will apply from 1 January 1993 similar procedures to the procurement practices of entities, including those in the private sector, operating in the telecommunications, water, energy and transport sectors.

26. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received on the citizens charter as it relates to telecommunications customers.

Mr. Redwood: I have received a number of representations warmly welcoming the Government's policy, as set out in the citizens charter, for enabling new standards of service to be set for the benefit of telecommunications customers.

Manufacturing Industry

27. Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next expects to meet the president of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss manufacturing industry.

Mr. Lilley: I meet the president and other representatives of the CBI regularly to discuss manufacturing industry and other issues of mutual interest.

28. Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to increase Government support to manufacturing industry.

Mr. Leigh: The Government support manufacturing industry by pursuing policies aimed at fostering a competitive environment, encouraging innovation, restoring incentives and, above all, defeating inflation.

Securities and Investments Board

29. Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next expects to meet the chairman of the Securities and Investments Board to discuss its work and remit.

Mr. Redwood: I meet the chairman of the Securities and Investments Board from time to time to discuss a range of issues.

Industrial Policy

30. Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will next meet representatives of the east midlands regional Confederation of British Industry to discuss industrial policy.

Mr. Lilley: Ministers and officials of my Department keep in touch with the CBI on a wide range of business matters. I last met regional CBI representatives when I attended the CBI's national conference on 4 November 1991 and the Minister for Corporate Affairs met the vice-chairman of the east midlands regional CBI in Nottingham on Friday 22 November.

34. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next plans to meet representatives of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss industrial policy.

Mr. Lilley: Ministers and officials of my Department keep in touch with the CBI on a wide range of business matters.

Manufacturing Investment

31. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has recently received about manufacturing investment.

Mr. Lilley: I receive a great deal of correspondence relating to manufacturing investment. The latest figures show that the fall in manufacturing investment has halted. In the third quarter of 1991, manufacturing investment was 2 per cent. higher than in the previous quarter, and over one third higher than 10 years earlier.

Liquidations

32. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many United Kingdom firms have gone into liquidation during the past 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The numbers of company liquidations due to insolvency in the United Kingdom in the 12 months to June 1991 were:

	Number
England and Wales	19,337
Scotland	574
Northern Ireland	211

I will write to the hon. Gentleman to provide further information when the official insolvency statistics for the third quarter are published on 29 November.

Trade Statistics

33. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the latest figures for trade between (a) Germany and the United Kingdom and (b) Japan and the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Information on United Kingdom visible trade is regularly published in "Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom", which is available in the Library of the House.

Eastern Europe

36. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on development of British trading links with eastern Europe.

Mr. Sainsbury: British trading links with eastern Europe have developed in a number of welcome ways. At Government level we took the lead in bringing about last week's initialling of association agreements between the EC and Czechoslovakia, Hungary and Poland; we have also opened three new diplomatic posts in the Baltic republics and are establishing consulates-general in Kiev and St. Petersburg.

EC Competition Policy

37. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next plans to meet Commissioner Sir Leon Brittan to discuss European competition policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: My right hon. Friend and I meet Sir Leon Brittan regularly, to discuss a wide range of issues.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his plans for the future of the Export Credits Guarantee Department.

Mr. Sainsbury: Following the privatisation of its insurance services business, the ECGD will continue to provide credit insurance support and export finance facilities for project exporters.

Auditor Monitoring

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will propose legislation under which the public would have access to the results of auditor monitoring as carried out in accordance with the requirements of the Companies Act 1989.

Mr. Redwood: No. The recognised supervisory bodies are considering the publication of an annual report giving details of their monitoring of auditors. The bodies propose in any case to announce decisions to withdraw registration from a firm, whether resulting from monitoring activities or otherwise.

Company Investigations

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will propose legislation under which the auditing firms criticised in his Department's inspectors' report would be required to meet a portion of the cost of the investigation.

Mr. Redwood: My right hon. Friend has no plans to introduce such legislation.

Ernst and Young

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether, since his Department's inspectors' criticisms of Ernst and Young in reports relating to Sound Diffusion, Milbury and Rotaprint, he has received any assurance that the firm has raised its standards.

Mr. Redwood: Copies of the reports to which the hon. Member refers have been forwarded to the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales as the relevant professional body. The institute has referred one of the reports to the joint disciplinary scheme as giving rise to a question of public concern. All the reports are still under consideration.

Rotaprint

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any plans to ask Ernst and Young to bear part of the costs of the inspectors' inquiry into Rotaprint.

Mr. Redwood: No. My right hon. Friend has no powers to do so.

Auditors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry further to his answer of 19 November, Official Report, column 115, on how many occasions the firm has been criticised in reports by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors.

Mr. Redwood: Five reports of Companies Act inspectors published since 1 January 1988 contain criticisms of the firms which now form Ernst and Young.

Consumer Credit

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to review the licence fees for consumer credit and ancillary businesses.

Mr. Leigh: No. The licence fees for consumer credit and ancillary credit business are kept under review by the Director General of Fair Trading.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy to increase the upper limit for loans that fall within the scope of the Consumer Credit Act to £25,000.

Mr. Leigh: It is intended that the monetary limits in the Consumer Credit Act should be reviewed next year and it would not be appropriate to prejudge the outcome of that review.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy to amend the Consumer Credit Act 1974 in order to place a duty on lenders to make a credit reference search for all loans or revolving credit limits of £500 or more.

Mr. Leigh: No. Lenders should be allowed to choose the method or methods of checking the creditworthiness of prospective borrowers.

Competition and Services (Utilities) Bill

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received regarding the Competition and Services (Utilities) Bill.

Mr. Redwood: A number of representations have been received about the Competition and Services (Utilities) Bill, from organisations and individuals, and I am pleased by the interest, generally positive and constructive, which has been shown.

Estate Agents

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list all the statutes and regulations which regulate the entitlement to the use of the description estate agent; and when they came into effect.

Mr. Leigh: There is no legislation regulating the use of the description estate agent. However, under the Estate Agents Act 1979 the Director General of Fair Trading can prohibit a person from doing estate agency work if that person appears unfit for such work and has engaged in certain types of misconduct.

Economy

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment his Department has made of the decline in the economy of north Staffordshire.

Mr. Leigh: The economy of north Staffordshire will, like other parts of the country, benefit from the Government's success in reducing inflation and the ensuing resumption of economic growth. The latest CBI regional survey shows a sharp resurgence in business confidence in the west midlands region as a whole.

EC Industry Council

Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the discussions which took place in the EC Industry Council on 18 November.

Mr. Lilley: The Industry Council meeting on 18 November adopted a resolution concerning electronics, information and communication technologies, and agreed to extend the steel aids code for five years. The Council considered Commission communications on biotechnology, textiles and maritime industries, and the Commission's 20th annual report on competition policy; and it discussed the financial arrangements for the European Coal and Steel Community, the position of the automobile industry, and industrial co-operation with eastern Europe.

Operational Programmes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects the European Commission to approve funding for the operational programmes to cover the years 1992 and 1993.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 21 November 1991]: A number of United Kingdom operational programmes for "Objective 2" grants from the European Community structural funds in 1992 and 1993 are due for approval by the Commission at the end of this year.

EC Structural Funds

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the implementation of article 9 of EC regulation 4253/88 about an additional economic impact within regions of the United Kingdom eligible to receive EC structural fund grants.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 21 November 1991]: Article 9 of Council Regulation (EEC) 4253/88 requires that "the increase in the appropriations for the Funds provided for in Article 12(2) of Regulation (EEC) No. 2052/88" should have

"a genuine additional economic impact in the regions concerned" and result in

"at least an equivalent increase in the total volume of official or similar (Community and national) structural aid in the Member State concerned".

The increase in appropriations referred to relates to the doubling of the funds between 1987 and 1993. However United Kingdom receipts from the funds are not expected to increase in real terms over this period. In these circumstances, article 9 will not have any practical impact in the United Kingdom. The estimates available to me suggest that the United Kingdom is the only member state in this position.

ECGD Insurance Services Group

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his reply of 18 November, Official Report, column 37, when he expects the final price for the sale of the Export Credits Guarantee Department Insurance Services Group to NCM will be settled.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 21 November 1991]: The detailed terms of the sale are in the final stages of negotiation. As is normal practice, the sale price will be disclosed when the sale has been concluded.

Raleigh Industries

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to reply to the letter from H. J. W. Knight, managing director of Raleigh Industries, regarding imports of mainland Chinese bicycles at GSP zero rating; and if he will make a statement on this problem.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 26 November 1991]: I replied to Mr. Knight's letter on 7 November. The Government's position remains as set out in my letter.

Departmental Telephone Calls

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information is available on the number of calls made to directory inquiries from his Department since 1 April 1991.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 26 November 1991]: Accurate information is not currently available on the total number of calls made to directory inquiries by my Department. The Department uses CCTA logging equipment on our central Government telecommunications network but the data provided are not sufficient to give comprehensive information. Charging was introduced by BT for directory inquiries in April 1991 and the Department is currently in the process of advising staff of the most economic way of finding external telephone numbers.

PRIME MINISTER

European Summit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what progress has been made in implementing the recommendations in annex 7 of the Presidency report of the current year's European summit.

The Prime Minister: Following the Government's initiative at the Luxembourg European Council in April, the Twelve have tabled a resolution at the UN General Assembly aimed at the early establishment of a register of conventional arms transfers under UN auspices. The resolution was approved by a large majority in the first committee of the General Assembly on 15 November. We expect that the General Assembly as a whole will soon agree the establishment of such a register.

The Twelve continue to discuss the application of the common criteria identified by the European Council as guidelines for their national policies on conventional arms exports. Similar guidelines were agreed by the five permanent members of the UN Security Council, at a meeting in London on 17-18 October. United Kingdom arms exports are wholly consistent with these guidelines.

Debt Relief

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister how much will be written off the outstanding debts owed by the poorest and most indebted countries under the plan announced by him at the Commonwealth Heads of Government summit.

The Prime Minister: Debt relief of around two thirds will be granted to the poorest and most heavily indebted countries, subject to satisfactory performance under an IMF programme.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister what progress he has made in persuading other creditor nations to offer debt relief under the plans announced at the Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting.

The Prime Minister: Discussions continue in the Paris Club on the implementation of the Trinidad terms proposals for providing greater debt relief to the poorest and most heavily indebted countries. Our objective remains to secure maximum participation in a multilateral agreement to provide greater debt relief. However, as I made clear at the Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting, the United Kingdom, acting in concert with as many creditors as possible, will implement Trinidad terms in the very near future if the Paris Club is unable to reach agreement.

Environmental Assessments

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister when Her Majesty's Government first received notification from the EC Environment Commissioner of the dissatisfaction of the European Commission with the implementation by the United Kingdom, following transposition into United Kingdom law, of the 1985 EEC directive on environmental assessment of major projects; what responses have been made to the Commission by Her Majesty's Government to date; and if he will place copies of correspondence on the matter in the Library.

The Prime Minister: The Commission's article 169 letter of 22 March 1990 alleged infraction of directive 85/337/EEC in connection with a proposed waste disposal installation at Outlands Head quarry, Derbyshire. Following the United Kingdom's reply of 21 May 1990, the Commission sent a reasoned opinion about that case on 28 February 1991, to which the United Kingdom replied on 30 April 1991.

The only other formal complaint by the Commission about our application of this directive has been Commissioner Ripa di Meana's well-publicised article 169 letter of 17 October 1991. The Commission has asked for a reply by 17 December.

Correspondence between the Commission and member states about alleged infractions of European law is generally conducted in confidence.

Civil Service

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Prime Minister what are the conventions whereby civil service departments take steps to consult the opposition about their policies towards the end of a Parliament; and when such steps are planned to be taken before the end of the current Parliament.

The Prime Minister: The convention is that, by authority of the Prime Minister, in the last six months of a Parliament of when a general election has been called, Opposition parties may arrange, with the authority of their party leaders and through the head of the civil service, contacts with senior civil servants. These arrangements are designed to allow briefing on factual questions on departmental organisational changes which Opposition parties have in mind or which may result from Opposition party policies. Any exchanges would be confidential. I will be prepared to authorise such arrangements from the end of this year.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a further statement on the action he intends to take following the ruling of the European Court of Justice in relation to benefit payments to people with disabilities who move to other EC member states.

Mr. Scott: The European Court of Justice has ruled that, for European Community nationals who have been subject to United Kingdom legislation as employed or self-employed persons, mobility allowance is an invalidity benefit and may be exported when a beneficiary moves to another European Community country. The independent adjudicating authorities have interpreted the ruling as applying equally to attendance allowance, and are now giving effect to it.

Social Security Appeals

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will give for each year since the Social Security Act 1975 came into effect the total number of inquiries held under section 93(3); if he will break down each year's total to give figures for each type of question listed in section 93(1); and if he will give for each year the number of inquiries where the Secretary of State accepted the recommendations in the report and the number where he did not;

(2) what guidelines have been issued to persons appointed to hold inquiries under section 93(3) of the Social Security Act 1975; and if he will place the guidelines in the Library;

(3) if he will list for each year since the Social Security Act 1975 came into effect the names and positions of the persons appointed to hold inquiries under section 93(3).

Mr. Jack [holding answer 18 November 1991]: The function of an inquirer appointed under section 93(3) of the Social Security Act 1975 is to hear evidence, elicit the facts, and report to the Secretary of State who then gives his decision on the basis of the facts of the case and the law which applies to those facts.

Inquirers are appointed from a pool of qualified lawyers with relevant experience who receive initial training, which includes attendance at inquiries as an observer.

The appointment to hold an inquiry is limited to a particular case and a list of all those who have undertaken these appointments could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

I am placing in the Library a copy of form CF 100 "Notes regarding Inquiries held under the Social Security Acts" which is sent to all parties appearing at an inquiry.

The total number of inquiries held and the breakdown into the types of question listed in section 93(1) for each year since that Act came into effect are as follows:

Financial year	Total	Categorisation of employment and liability for contributions	Inquiries related to claims for contributory benefit	Unclassified

HOME DEPARTMENT

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether asylum applications from those fleeing persecution because they are lesbian or gay are considered on the same basis as those from asylum seekers who have fled persecution for belonging to other social groups.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: All applications for asylum are considered in accordance with the criteria laid down in the 1951 United Nations convention on refugees.

Armed Robbery

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many armed robberies have been committed in each of the Metropolitan police divisions for each of the last three years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have received from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis the following information. The number of offences of robbery where a firearm was involved recorded in each of the divisions in 1988, 1989 and 1990 is as follows:

Robbery offences involving a firearm: Metropolitan Police Districts 1988 to 1990

Belmarsh Prison

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women prison officers are employed at Belmarsh prison; and what rank they hold.

Mrs. Rumbold: Fifty seven, of whom one is a principal officer and three are senior officers.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the present prison officer staffing at Belmarsh prison as of 7 November; how many of these officers are newly recruited to the prison service; and how many have joined Belmarsh by prison transfer from other prisons.

Mrs. Rumbold: There are 464 officers in the ranks from prison officer to principal officer employed at Belmarsh, of whom 133 are newly recruited and 327 have transferred from other prisons.

Begging

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were (a) charged just with begging and (b) convicted of just begging under the Operation Burlington and its successor, Operation Taurus.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that under Operations Burlington and Taurus, 718 people were charged only with begging and 534 people were convicted only of begging.

Murder

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give figures for the convictions of suspects indicted for murder for each year from 1982 to 1989 for (a) men and (b) women broken down by category of conviction.

Mr. John Patten: The information in the table relates to homicides recorded in England and Wales from 1982 to 1989 inclusive. The convictions of suspects indicted for murder are given separately for men and women.

Life Sentence

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of the number of (a) discretionary life-sentenced prisoners and (b) mandatory life-sentenced prisoners, excluding terrorist cases, who have been refused release on licence on the specific instructions of Home Office Ministers for each year since 1979.

Mrs. Rumbold: Information in the form requested could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Animals Procedures Committee

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the names of the members of the Animals Procedures Committee with their qualifications for membership.

Mrs. Rumbold: Section 19 of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 requires that, of the members of the Animal Procedures Committee other than the chairman, at least two thirds shall be persons who hold full registration as medical practitioners, registration as veterinary surgeons or qualifications or experience in a biological subject approved by the Secretary of State as relevant to the work of the committee. The committee is also required to have one member who is a barrister, solicitor or advocate, and in making appointments to the committee my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary is required to have regard to the desirability of ensuring that the interests of animal welfare are adequately represented. The Act also requires that at least half the members of the committee are persons who neither hold, nor within the previous six years have held, any licence under the 1986 Act or under the Cruelty to Animals Act 1876. Current members of the Animal Procedures Committee have been appointed in line with these requirements.

The membership of the Animal Procedures Committee as at 22 November 1991 is as follows:

Lord Nathan, MA Hon LLD (Chairman)
Professor Michael Balls, MA DPhil, University of Nottingham, Chairman of the Trustees of the Fund for the Replacement of Animals in Medical Experiments (FRAME).

Animal Experiments

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the figure for the number of experiments on live animals conducted in the last year for which these are available; what was the figure for 10 years ago; and what was the percentage change.

Mrs. Rumbold: The figures for experiments on living animals in 1980 and scientific procedures on living animals in 1990 are given in table 18 of "Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals, Great Britain 1990" (Cm 1574), a copy of which is in the Library.

The 1990 figure is 30 per cent. lower than that recorded for 1980, but the underlying fall is greater than this. During this period the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 was introduced which extended the controls on the use of living animals in research to some research work not previously controlled. As a result the 1990 figure includes procedures which would not have been counted as experiments in 1980.

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about the possible closure of magistrates courts as a consequence of the new funding system: and if he will make it his policy to announce his support for the present structure and network of local courts.

Mr. John Patten: We have received a number of representations expressing concern about possible closure of magistrates' courthouses. We are committed to the principle of local summary justice and hence to the maintenance of a network of local courthouses. At the same time it is necessary for magistrates' courts committees, in consultation with their paying authorities, to keep under review the number and location of courthouses in the light of all relevant circumstances, including for example the volume of proceedings heard there; the resources available to support and run them; the physical condition of the accommodation and the work required to achieve good standards of safety, security and facilities for court users; and the effect of closure in terms of cost and convenience for the community concerned and other criminal justice services. The balance between operational efficiency and other considerations has to be judged case by case by courts committees and, in the event of an appeal under section 56 of the Justices of the Peace Act 1979, by the Home Secretary.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Teacher Qualifications

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will set out the best available estimate of the cost to public funds of a teacher obtaining a teacher qualification through (a) the BEd-BA—qualified teacher status—(b) the post-graduate Certificate of Education—ordinary—and (c) the articled teachers scheme—PGCE—respectively.

Mr. Fallon: The estimated average cost at 1991-92 prices of training a teacher in a higher education institution outside London through a four-year undergraduate course is about £25,000; through a one-year PGCE about £6,000; and through the two-year articled teacher scheme about £19,500. Costs for training teachers in London institutions are higher, as are costs of training teachers in shortage secondary subjects, due to the special bursaries they receive.

Modern Languages

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science which institutions in the PCFC sector have received from Her Majesty's inspectorate the highest rating for the quality of teaching and learning in modern languages.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council award quality ratings, based on advice from Her Majesty's Inspectorate and others, to institutions in nine programme areas. Courses where modern foreign languages form the major element are in programme area 7. The following institutions have been judged as having outstanding quality in 50 per cent. or more of provision—full and part-time—in programme area 7.

EC Meetings

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the European Community ministerial council meetings at which his Department has, or will be, represented during November and December.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. and learned Friend attended the meeting of the Council and the Ministers for Education meeting within the Council on Monday 25 November.

EC (Visits)

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the number of visits made by officials in his Department during the past month to destinations outside the United Kingdom but within the European Community on official business related to the European Community, the number of visits made by officials in his Department to Brussels within the past month on official business related to the European Community and the number of nights spent by officials in his Department over the past month away from the United Kingdom on official European Community business.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Officials from this Department have made in total 14 visits to EC member states, of which 10 were visits to Brussels, and spent 23 nights away from the United Kingdom during the period from 1 November 1991 to the present time.

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list for himself, and for each of the ministers at his Department, details of (a) the number of visits made in the past month to destinations outside the United Kingdom but within the European Community on official business related to the European Community, (b) the number of visits made to Brussels within the past month on official business related to the European Community and (c) the number of nights spent over the past month away from the United Kingdom on official European Community business.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has made one visit to Brussels in the past month, on official business related to the European Community. He spent one night away from the United Kingdom on this occasion. None of his ministerial colleagues have made any visits relating to European Community business in the past month.

Further and Higher Education Bill

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received regarding the Further and Higher Education Bill [Lords].

Mr. Eggar: Representations have been received from a small number of organisations on various aspects of the further education clauses and from the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals and other interested organisations on various aspects of the higher education clauses.

Education (Schools) Bill

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received regarding the Education (Schools) Bill.

Mr. Eggar: The Education (Schools) Bill gives effect to proposals outlined in the parents charter. Taking both documents together, we have to date received 806 items of correspondence concerning them: 105 through Members of Parliament, 128 from educational bodies and associations, and 573 from individuals. We have also held three meetings with interested bodies, at which these proposals were discussed.

Children's Assessment

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what research his department has funded by (a) Her Majesty's inspectorate, (b) the National Fund for Educational Research and (c) other bodies, into the validity of assessing children's IQ or other measurements of potential ability.

Mr. Eggar: The Department has not funded research into this question in recent years.

HEALTH

Dental Practitioners

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish for each family health service authority area in England (a) its population, (b) the number of people registered with a general dental practitioner, (c) the ratio of general dental practitioners to the number of people registered, (d) (b) as a percentage of (a) and (e) the percentage of children under the age of 18 years registered with a general dental practitioner.

Mr. Dorrell: The information is shown in the table. The new dental contract introduced in October last year provides for the first time, all-round continuing care. More than 21 million people in England have registered with a dentist under the new contract, a faster take-up than we or the dental profession expected.

Note: Population estimates for 1991 are not yet available. Population estimates as at June 1989 have been used to be consistent with the patient registration data published by the Dental Practice Board.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish for each family health service authority area in England, and for each year since 1970, the percentage of children over the age of five years in maintained schools inspected by the community dental service.

Mr. Dorrell: The information is not held in the form requested.

Nurses, Medway

Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total number of nursing staff currently employed by the Medway district health authority, relative to 1979.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information is given in the table.

NHS Staff Statistics

Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total number of general practitioners, nurses and midwives currently employed in the national health service relative to 1979.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is given in the table.

Perinatal Mortality

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will have regard to the perinatal mortality figures for Staffordshire when determining his Department's priorities.

Mr. Dorrell: Executive letter, EL(91)103, "Priorities and planning guidance for the NHS for 1992/93" issued by the NHS management executive in July 1991, a copy of which is available in the Library, included guidance on NHS priorities. This specified that stillbirths and infant deaths are to be tackled as a priority by the NHS in 1992-93. This applies to Staffordshire as to all other health authorities.

Anabolic Steroids

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much his Department is contributing, and over what period, to the research project on anabolic steroids misuse being carried out by the centre for research on drugs and health behaviour.

Mr. Dorrell: This is a one-year research project with a total estimated cost of £70,000. The Department plans to contribute 90 per cent.—£63,000—of the total cost over that period. The remaining 10 per cent.—£7,000—will be met by the Scottish Office Home and Health Department. Work on the project is expected to start in January 1992.

Contraception

Mrs. Heal: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines have been issued to general practitioners by his Department concerning leaflets for patients relating to the contraceptive services and abortion counselling provided by GP practices.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: GPs are required by their terms of service to compile a practice leaflet which should be made available to patients on their lists. The leaflet must indicate whether the doctor provides contraceptive services. It is left to the discretion of individual doctors as to whether information is included about abortion counselling.

Mrs. Heal: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many centres in England and Wales offer professional training in contraception; how many general practitioners in England and Wales hold the certificate of the joint committee on contraception; and what percentage of the total number of general practitioners this represents.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The latest United Kingdom figures from the joint committee on contraception—JCC—for the number of premises approved for the training of doctors in the two JCC certificates are:

	Number
Community and hospital clinics	1,216
GP premises	89

These are in addition to such training on contraception as takes place during vocational training for general practice.

At 22 November 1991, some 30,636 JCC certificates had been issued to doctors. The percentage of practising GPs holding these certificates is not known.

Mrs. Heal: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the components of the course leading to the joint committee on contraception certificate; and how long the course lasts.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The course for the joint committee on contraception—JCC—general certificate in family planning involves acquisition of acceptable gynaecological experience, and attendance for theoretical training at least at four half-day sessions. This is followed by at least eight sessions involving practical training in barrier methods. Extended training for the JCC's advanced certificate includes IUD insertions. Further details can be obtained direct from the JCC, 27 Sussex place, Regent's Park, London NW1 4RG.

Insulin Injector Pens

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how long he has been considering making needles for insulin injector pens available upon prescription; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Negotiations with manufacturers of insulin injection pen systems, which include needles, are continuing. In the light of these discussions we aim to make these systems available on prescription as soon as resources will allow.

Patient Statistics

Sir Patrick McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will publish figures setting out the number of patients who failed to attend national health service hospitals after being granted firm appointments, as a percentage of all appointments made, for each region for the year to March 1991;

(2) if he will publish figures setting out the number of patients who failed to attend national health service hospitals after being granted firm in-patient appointments for the year to March 1991, expressed as numerical totals and as percentages of all such appointments made for each region.

Mr. Dorrell: Information on numbers of people failing to attend for in-patient admissions is not collected centrally. The available information for out-patient departments is given in the table.

Family Planning

Mrs. Heal: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he received a copy of the South East Thames regional health authority review of family planning and abortion services, August 1991; what action the regional health authority is taking to meet its recommendations; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A copy of the region's report was received on 12 August. I understand the regional health authority considered the report at its meeting in July and agreed that it should be issued and commended to authorities in the region. The region will ensure that purchasing authorities and family health services authorities take the recommendations forward in their purchasing plans. The region is also planning to discuss some aspects of the report with its local education authorities.

WALES

Hypothermia

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing how many people categorised by age died of hypothermia, or illnesses associated with hypothermia, in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The following table gives numbers of deaths, and rates per million population, for which hypothermia was stated as the underlying cause of death in Wales in each year from 1979 to 1990.

Recognising the risk of hypothermia for vulnerable people, especially, but not only, the elderly, the Welsh Office is distributing the "Keep Warm Keep Well" brochure in Welsh and English to all authorities and agencies with the request that they ensure that those who need to see it get a copy. This distribution will be complemented by Welsh Office financial support for advice lines run by voluntary organisations.

Age Statistics

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will state the numbers of persons in Wales aged over (a) 60, (b) 75 and (c) 100 years at the latest available date and in 1979, respectively.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The numbers of people in Wales aged over 60 and over 75 in 1979 and 1990, as estimated by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys, are shown in the following table. These mid-year estimates are not available for centenarians. However, data from a 10 per cent. sample of the Department of Social Security records indicate that there were some 100 centenarians in Wales in November 1979 and 210 in September 1990.

Residents in Wales aged:	Mid year 1979	Mid year 1990
Over 60	548,500	603,100
Over 75	138,700	184,000

The figures are a tribute to the continuing improvements in health and general care and support since 1979.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the cost in the last full year for which figures are available of payments made, under environmentally sensitive area agreements, to farmers in each of the Welsh environmentally sensitive areas.

Mr. David Hunt: The information for 1990-91 is as follows:

Cambrian Mountains ESA (Original Area)	476,882
Cambrian Mountains ESA (Extension)	120,723
Lleyn Peninsula ESA	284,102
Total	881,707

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of farms eligible for entry into each of the Welsh environmentally sensitive areas.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is as follows:

	number
Cambrian Mountains ESA (Original Area)	300
Cambrian Mountains ESA (Extension)	295
Lleyn Peninsula ESA	960
Total	1,555

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estitmate of the savings to the common agriculture policy resulting from reduced output in the designated Welsh environmentally sensitive areas.

Mr. David Hunt: The net budgetary effects of the designated Welsh environmentally sensitive areas form part of the wider socio-economic monitoring studies my Department has commissioned from the University College of Wales, Aberystwyth. The university's interim report "Environmentally Sensitive Areas, Wales—Socio Economic Aspects of Designation—Interim Report—March 1991" was issued in June 1991 and a copy is available in the Library of the House. The final report is due to be submitted to my Department by the end of June A1992.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will state the number of farms below 50 hectares, between 50 and 100 hectares and above 100 hectares which are covered by environmentally sensitive area agreements in each of the Welsh environmentally sensitive areas.

Mr. David Hunt: The number of farms in each size grouping is shown in the table:

	Below 50 hectares	50-100 hectares	Above 100 hectares	Total
Cambrian Mountains ESA (Original and Extended Areas)	57	61	214	332
Lleyn Peninsula ESA	205	91	70	366
Total	262	152	284	698

Some farms in the Cambrian Mountains ESA have more than one agreement, covering separate features.

Hospital Statistics

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the numbers and percentages of treatments and procedures in Welsh hospitals for patients aged over (a) 60, (b) 75 and (c) 100 years at the latest available date and in 1979, respectively.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information given in the table relates to the number of deaths and discharges from all Welsh NHS hospitals, including mental handicap and mental illness hospitals.

	Age of patient: 60 and over	75 and over	100 and over
1979
Deaths and discharges	105,787	41,174	15
Percentage[1]	30·1	11·7	0·0
1989
Deaths and discharges	194,223	89,983	41
Percentage[1]	36·9	17·1	0·0

[1] As percentage of total deaths and discharges.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the numbers of hospitals and hospital beds in Wales in (a) 1974, (b) 1979 and (c) at the latest available date.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information is given in the table:

	[1]1974	[1]1979	[2]Latest
Number of Hospitals:
NHS	189	173	152
Private	n/a	n/a	6
Beds
NHS—staffed beds allocated	24,972	23,512	19,534
Private	n/a	n/a	268

[1] As at 31 December.
[2] As at 31 March 1990 for private hospitals and 31 March 1991 for NHS hospitals.

As my hon. Friend can see, the number of hospitals and beds has reduced over the lifetime of both Conservative and Labour Governments as new hospitals have replaced outdated health buildings and as new medical techniques and treatments including day cases have reduced the demand for beds. While the number of out-patients in the NHS fell by 3 per cent. in the period 1974-79 it has since risen by 29 per cent. under this Government. Similarly the number of in-patients treated rose by 6 per cent. in 1974-79 and 38 per cent. between 1979 and 1990-91. Day cases are up by a record 233 per cent. since 1979.

A483 Accidents

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many fatal accidents have occurred on the stretch of the A483 between Rhostyllen and Johnstown; and what is the national average for comparable stretches of road.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The last fatal road accident reported to the Welsh Office by the North Wales police authority on the stretch of the A483 between Rhostyllen and Johnstown was in June 1986. In August 1987 a new stretch of A483, south of Rhostyllen, was opened and since then there have been no fatal road accidents recorded on this road, between Rhostyllen and the junction with the B5426, near Johnstown.

There have been two fatal road accidents on the old stretch of road between Rhostyllen and Johnstown, now the B5605, since August 1987: in June 1988 and November 1991.

Between 1987 and 1989, the average fatal accident rate, per 100 million vehicle kilometres on Welsh trunk roads was 1·0 for built-up roads and 1·2 for non built-up roads.

Fraud

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases of fraud have been brought to the attention of the police by the Welsh Office in respect of misuse of the business improvement service scheme by region in each of the last five years.

Mr. David Hunt: Nine firms of consultants have been, or are being, investigated in connection with suspected fraud under the now closed business improvement services scheme which operated in steel closure areas. It would not be appropriate to disclose further details pending the outcome of these investigations and any subsequent legal proceedings.

Hearing Impaired Children

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what review has he made of the needs of deaf and hearing impaired children as they pursue the examinations and coursework of the GCSE; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The responsibility for administering the examination process rests with individual examining boards. The Joint Council for the GCSE has issued guidance common to all examining groups to deal with pupils with disabilities such as deafness or a hearing impairment.

Speech Therapy

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much was spent by each local education authority on providing speech therapy during each of the last five years for (a) primary school pupils and (b) secondary school pupils.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is not available centrally.

Heart Specialists

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to increase the number of heart specialists working in national health service hospitals in Pembrokeshire, Cardiganshire and Carmarthenshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Bids for consultants to service new developments or to expand existing health services are made by health authorities to the Welsh medical and dental manpower committee for manpower approval. Currently there are no bids outstanding for heart specialists to work in Pembrokeshire, Cardiganshire and Carmarthenshire.

Cardigan Bay

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he next expects to meet representatives of the Welsh fishing industry to discuss the conservation of fishing stocks in Cardigan bay; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: On 2 December Fisheries Departments will be holding the annual meeting with industry representatives to discuss the latest data on stock levels for fisheries around the United Kingdom coast including the Irish sea, which covers Cardigan bay. The next step will be a meeting of the EC Fisheries Council to determine 1992 fishing quotas.

Defence-related Employment

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the level of defence-related employment in west Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Comprehensive information on the level of defence-related employment in west Wales is not available.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Aid and Trade Provision

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what criteria determine whether money is allocated to United Kingdom companies under the aid and trade provision.

Mrs. Chalker: The criteria for decisions on aid and trade provision cases are set out in the ATP "Guidelines for Applicants" booklet. I have placed copies of the latest edition of the booklet in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if aid and trade provision projects are appraised for their effects on low income groups.

Mrs. Chalker: Aid and trade provision projects are not selected according to their benefits to low income groups, but their appraisal may, if appropriate, cover their impact on particular social groups.

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the future size of the aid and trade programmes.

Mrs. Chalker: The size of the aid and trade provision is under consideration in the light of the resources made available for the aid programme announced in the Chancellor of the Exchequer's autumn statement.

Indonesia

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Broxtowe (Mr. Lester), Official Report, 20 November, column 267, if he will undertake to review bilateral aid to Indonesia.

Mrs. Chalker: The Government, in welcoming the Commission of Inquiry established by the President of Indonesia, have indicated that they wish to see the investigation carried out promptly, fully and fairly. We have urged that those members of the armed forces responsible for the shootings in East Timor earlier this month should be brought on trial. Together with our Community partners, we will consider the position, including that on aid, in the light of the written report of the commission of inquiry.

Trinidad Terms

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those countries which would benefit from the implementation of the Trinidad terms; and for how much debt relief each of these countries would be eligible.

Mrs. Chalker: The poorest, most heavily indebted countries which are following IMF-sponsored programmes of economic reform and which have chronic balance of payment difficulties insoluble through normal rescheduling arrangements will benefit from Trinidad terms. Eligibility will be decided on a case-by-case basis, and exact criteria are still being refined.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much debt relief the poorest and most indebted countries would receive if all the Paris Club creditors fully implemented the Trinidad terms.

Mrs. Chalker: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced at the Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting at Harare in October, the full value of the Trinidad terms which is potentially available if all Paris Club creditors agree to implement them is approximately $17 billion.

Aid

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will estimate the compound rate of growth of United Kingdom net aid to developing countries which would (a) halve the gap by which the United Kingdom falls below the United Nations target in five years and (b) meet the United Nations target in 10 years.

Mrs. Chalker: No. This would involve economic forecasting which is not a matter for me.

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out the criteria for the grant of overseas aid having regard to democracy and the human rights record of the recipient country.

Mrs. Chalker: In allocating aid to individual countries we take into account a number of factors. These include the needs of the country concerned, and the effectiveness with which our aid can be used. We consider whether the country has adopted policies which will help combat poverty and promote economic growth and social progress. The quality of government in the country concerned is an integral part of our assessment. Good government includes sound economic policy, effective and accountable public institutions and respect for human rights and the rule of law.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the new Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development proposals on tied aid; and if he will make a statement on the progress made by his Department on further untying aid.

Mrs. Chalker: A package of reforms covering both export credits and tied aid credits has been accepted ad referendum by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development consensus participants. Her Majesty's Government support the package as a useful step forward in our continuing efforts to introduce greater transparency and discipline into these fields and to reduce trade distortions. We very much hope that the package will be ratified by mid-December. On untying of aid, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 20 November.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of the total amount of aid offered to the developing world by his Department in each year since 1986.

Mrs. Chalker: Gross aid expenditure[1] by calendar year was as follows:

	£ million
1986	1,217
1987	1,189
1988	1,536
1989	1,635
1990	1,578

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what level of priority is afforded to the African continent in determining the Government's policy on aid to the developing worlds.

Mrs. Chalker: African countries have a high priority in the overseas aid programme. In 1990, African countries received 46 per cent.—£389 million—of the United Kingdom's gross bilateral aid which is geographically allocable. For United Kingdom aid channelled through multilateral organisations—£683 million in 1990—we estimate about half went to African countries. We intend to maintain a substantial programme of assistance to those African countries where aid can be used effectively.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take the necessary steps to raise the proportion of gross national product applied to aid for the developing world to the level recommended by the United Nations.

Mrs. Chalker: The Government accept in principle the target set by the United Nations for overseas aid as a proportion of gross national product. However, we are not in a position to set down a timetable for reaching the target. Future levels of aid will depend on our economic circumstances, and on other claims on public expenditure. Our aid programme is planned to grow in real terms, is of high quality and carefully targeted.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recommended targets for the proportion of gross national product to be applied for the developing world have been agreed within the United Nations.

Mrs. Chalker: There are three United Nations targets for resources transfers to the developing countries. These are:

(i) combined private and official flows equal to 1 per cent. of GNP;
(ii) net official development assistance (oda) to all developing countries equal to 0·7 per cent. of GNP; and
(iii) net official development assistance to the least developed countries equal to 0·15 per cent. of GNP, or 0·20 per cent. of GNP for those countries who have already achieved 0·15 per cent.

United Nations Contributions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what financial pledge was made by the United Kingdom in support of the United Nations development programme during the UNDP pledging conference for 1992 held in New York on 5 and 6 November; what was the total pledged to the UNDP; and if he will make a statement on the future of the United Nations development programme in the light of its funding base.

Mrs. Chalker: In common with many other major donors we have not yet announced our pledge for UNDP's 1992 programme. I expect to do so early next year. Over recent years UNDP has maintained its position at the centre of the UN development system and the current pattern seems likely to continue. But for the reasons given above the total amounts available in 1992 are not yet known.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what financial pledge was made by the United Kingdom in support of the United Nations fund for population activities at the New York pledging conference on 5 and 6 November; what proportion of the total funds available to UNFPA for 1992 will be provided by the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement on the future of the United Nations fund for population activities in the light of its funding base.

Mrs. Chalker: We have not yet announced our pledge for the United Nations population fund's 1992 programme. I expect to do so early next year. Our 1991 contribution to UNFPA of £7·5 million represented a 25 per cent. increase on the previous year.

Climate Change

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response has been sent by the Minister for Overseas Development to the letter dated 15 August sent by the co-ordinator of the Save the Forest-Save the Planet campaign regarding the Government's position on climate change; and if he will publish the correspondence.

Mrs. Chalker: I set out my views on this campaign to the co-ordinator in a letter to him on 25 June, which my private secretary confirmed in reply to the letter of 15 August. I am sending the hon. Member copies of both letters.

EMPLOYMENT

Sealink Stena

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will set out in detail the proposals he made to Sealink Stena covering redundancy arrangements following the announcement of impending redundancies.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has made no proposals to Sealink Stena regarding redundancy arrangements. As Member of Parliament for Folkestone and Hythe, my right hon. and learned Friend, in consultation with others in the area, has established the Sealink Stena action group. The group is co-ordinating and providing practical assistance and guidance for employees whose jobs are being lost, with the aim of getting those affected back to work at the earliest possible opportunity. Other participants in the group include the hon. Member for Dover (Mr. Shaw), Kent training and enterprise council, the Employment Service, the Sealink Stena company, other local businesses, local enterprise agencies, and the county and district councils.

Assistance being channelled through the group includes on-site job shops displaying vacancies in the local and surrounding areas; jobsearch workshops providing advice and guidance on such matters as job applications and interviews; advice on training and self-employment; and offers of office and workshop accommodation.

The Employment Service and training and enterprise councils in other areas affected by these redundancies are all taking action within their normal range of responsibilities to alleviate the effect of these job losses.

EC (Visits)

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list for himself, and for each of the Ministers at his Department, details of (i) the number of visits made in the past month to destinations outside the United Kingdom but within the European Community on official business related to the European Community, (ii) the number of visits made to Brussels within the past month on official business related to the European Community and (iii) the number of nights spent over the past month away from the United Kingdom on official European Community business.

Mr. Forth: In the four weeks to 21 November, my right hon. and learned Friend made one visit to Germany, and I made one visit to Brussels to attend a Social Affairs Council. Neither of these visits involved an overnight stay.

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of visits made by officials in his Department during the past month to destinations outside the United Kingdom but within the European Community on official business related to the European Community, the number of visits made by officials in his Department to Brussels within the past month on official business related to the European Community and the number of nights spent by officials in his Department over the past month away from the United Kingdom on official European Community business.

Mr. Forth: Central records are not kept. The following information has been obtained by a telephone survey of the Employment Department group. In the four weeks to 21 November in connection with official EC business:
37 officials visited destinations outside the United Kingdom but within the rest of the European Community;
54 officials visited Brussels;
officials spent 122 nights away from the United Kingdom.

Self-catering Accommodation

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he last met representatives of the self-catering accommodation sector to discuss issues currently affecting the sector.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State and my noble Friend Viscount Ullswater, who is Minister responsible for tourism, frequently meet representatives of all sectors in the tourism industry on engagements around the country.

Radiological Emergencies

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he will bring forward legislation to meet the requirements of European Community directive 89/618/Euratom on informing the general public about health protection measures to be applied and steps to be taken in the event of a radiological emergency.

Mr. Forth: Proposals for regulations to implement European Council directive 89/618/Euratom are contained in a Health and Safety Commission consultative document due to be published on 28 November 1991. I will arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library. The document will form the basis of a three-month period of public consultation. The commission is required to consider whether changes to the proposals are needed in the light of comments received, during the consultation period. Thereafter, under the terms of article 33 of the Euratom treaty, the European Commission must be given a three-month period within which to comment on the final proposals before legislation is brought forward.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Palace of Westminster (Access)

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he has any proposals to improve public access to the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. MacGregor: The Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee keep under regular review arrangements for access, including improvements for speeding up entry for line of route visitors, access for the disabled and for providing them with protection from the weather. Any proposals for further improvements would have to be considered by the new Administration Committee when it is established.

0898 Telephone Calls

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Lord President of the Council what progress has been made in introducing a permanent bar on 0898 calls from parliamentary buildings.

Mr. MacGregor: An interim decision to bar such calls was taken by the Chairman of the Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee of the Services Committee in July 1991 pending the formation of the new Administration Committee; it will now be for this Committee to consider this matter at an early meeting.

Agencies (Replies to Members)

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Lord President of the Council how the Government propose to improve access to the replies given by agency chief executives in response to parliamentary questions.

Mr. MacGregor: In its recent White Paper—Cm 1761—published in response to the seventh report of the Treasury and Civil Service Committee, "The Next Steps Initiative", the Government stated that they were considering how access to the replies given by agency chief executives to parliamentary questions could be improved.

The arrangement whereby chief executives reply direct by letter to written questions on operational matters is intended to recognise their direct responsibility for matters which have been delegated to them by Ministers and to ensure that replies about the carrying out of Government business are full, prompt and as helpful as possible. The arrangement has worked well in those respects. However, it has become apparent that there have been some practical difficulties with the procedure—which my predecessor announced on 31 October 1990—of making the letters public by placing them in the House of Commons Library and its Public Information Office.

The Government have therefore decided to propose to the House authorities that the House should publish all replies from chief executives which are placed in the Library. The Government consider that the replies should be published regularly and frequently, so that the information they contain is current and useful; that the publication should be available to individuals and organisations outside the House on a similar basis to the Official Report; but that the replies should not be published as ministerial written answers in the Official Report. A separate weekly publication for the replies would meet these criteria, although the precise form of publication and the resource implications will be a matter for the appropriate Committee of the House, to which the Government will put their proposal at the earliest opportunity. I very much hope that it will be possible to introduce new arrangements quickly to meet the concern which has been expressed. I shall inform the House as soon as a decision has been reached.

Draft EC Treaties

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Lord President of the Council what study he has made of the likely impact of adoption of the two draft treaties on economic and monetary and political union on the powers, activity, and operations of the House.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 15 November 1991]: The practical implications of the draft treaty provisions on economic and monetary and political union for the work of this House can only be assessed once the negotiations are complete. The Government have emphasised the essential role of national Parliaments in providing proper democratic scrutiny of the Community's activities, and have tabled a draft conference declaration aimed at reinforcing the role of national Parliaments.

Parking Spaces

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he has any plans to add to the number of parking spaces for hon. Members in the Palace of Westminster in the evenings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 25 November 1991]: There are no plans to add to the overall number of car parking spaces available to Members, which are detailed in the Serjeant at Arms' leaflet "Car parking". Any changes in the allocation to Members will be a matter for the new Administration Committee when it is established.

Works of Art

Dr. Godman: To ask the Lord President of the Council what communications he has received from the chairman of the Advisory Committee on Works of Art in the House of Commons regarding the choice of more suitable positions on the Committee floor for the sculpture of Charles Stewart Parnell and the painting, "The men who made Home Rule"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 25 November 1991]: The Advisory Committee on Works of Art, chaired by my hon. Friend the Member for Staffordshire South (Mr. Cormack), reports to Mr. Speaker and the Secretary of State for the Environment. I understand however that, following a previous question about the location of the bust, the advisory committee did not consider it necessary to recommend an alternative location. I understand also that the advisory committee has not been asked to consider a new location for the painting.

Blue Peter Appeal

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will place an aluminium can collection point within the Palace precincts for the "Blue Peter" golden age Christmas appeal.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 26 November 1991]: No. There is a well-established precedent that the House does not allow itself to be used in support of specific charities or organisations.

SCOTLAND

Tranent-Macmerry Bypass

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will erect large yellow-backed signs indicating that the Tranent-Macmerry bypass is a single carriageway road, similar to the signs on the single carriageway sections of the road between Dundee and Aberdeen.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Following the tragic accident on the single carriageway section of the A1 Tranent bypass in July, I asked the A1 steering group to consider ways of increasing driver awareness of the transitions from dual to single carriageways on the A1.

One of the measures proposed by the steering group was to erect large yellow backed signs as part of a package of measures associated with Bankton roundabout. This was approved in September with a works start programmed for February 1992.

Detainees

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland at what point after sentence someone detained during Her Majesty's pleasure can first be given a date on which he or she may be eligible for parole.

Mr. Lang: Persons sentenced under section 205 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1975 (the 1975 Act) to detention without limit of time (formerly during Her Majesty's pleasure) are eligible for release on life licence under section 26 of the Prisons (Scotland) Act 1989. I have complete discretion as to the setting of a date for first formal review in such cases.

Where, exceptionally, detention without limit of time is imposed by a court in exercise of its powers under section 206 of the 1975 Act, I may release the person on licence at any time on the recommendation of the Parole Board.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what was the average period in detention served by those detained during Her Majesty's pleasure and released in the last 10 years;

(2) how many persons detained during Her Majesty's pleasure following conviction for murder were released in under five years, under eight years, under 10 years, under 12 years, under 15 years and over 15 years respectively in the last 10 years.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is given in the table.

Under 5	number
5 to under 8	4
8 to under 10	13
10 to under 12	22
12 to under 15	8
over 15	2
Total persons released	49
Average period in years	10½

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many persons under 16 years were convicted of murder in Scotland and sentenced to detention during Her Majesty's pleasure in each of the last 10 years;

(2) if he will list the ages of those under 16 years detained during Her Majesty's pleasure following conviction for murder during the last 10 years; and if he will indicate how many of the total number so convicted were male and how many female.

Mr. Lang: Under the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 1980 the sentence of detention during Her Majesty's pleasure was replaced by detention without limit of time. Four persons under 16 have been so sentenced since 1981, one each year in 1986, 1987, 1990 and 1991, to date. All were males aged 15, except the persons in 1991 who was a female aged 15.

District Courts

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the statutory provisions relating to the requirement for local authorities to provide suitable and sufficient premises and facilities for the purposes of a district court.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Section 8 of the District Courts (Scotland) Act 1975 requires local authorities to provide suitable and sufficient premises and facilities for the purposes of the district court.

Mentally Handicapped People

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) when he received the National Medical Advisory Committee report on mentally handicapped people in Scottish hospitals from his advisory committee;

(2) when he expects to publish the National Medical Advisory Committee report on mentally handicapped people in Scottish hospitals from his advisory committee;

(3) if he will implement without delay the recommendations outlined in the National Medical Advisory Committee report on mentally handicapped people in Scottish hospitals from his advisory committee.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The report "Everybody Out?", produced by a working group of the National Medical Advisory Committee, was passed to the Scottish Office Home and Health Department by the Health Service Advisory Council in July 1990. The valuable work done by the working group has contributed significantly to the development within the Scottish Office of policy and guidance for care in the community for people with a mental handicap.

Scottish Homes

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether Scottish Homes has sought statutory powers for the compulsory purchase of its former properties in the constituency of Leith; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Under section 2(2)(g) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1988, Scottish Homes have the power to acquire land compulsorily but that power may be exercised only in accordance with arrangements made between the agency and the Secretary of State. My right hon. Friend has not been asked by Scottish Homes to consider arrangements for the compulsory purchase of properties in the hon. Member's constituency.

Health Statistics

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of whole-time equivalent nurses, total and hospital figure for table 9.11 in "Scottish Health Statistics" updated for 1990-91.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is given in the table.

Nursing staff in Scotland: whole-time equivalent

	30 September 1990
All nursing staff	63,687·2
Hospital nursing staff	56,180·7

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of whole-time equivalent doctors, total and hospital figure for table 9.4 in "Scottish Health Statistics" updated for 1990-91.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is given in the table.

Medical staff in Scotland: whole-time equivalent

	30 September 1990
All medical staff	9,909·0
Hospital medical staff	5,746·2

Health Boards

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each health board the name of each nurse who is an executive member of that board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is as follows:

Executive member	Health Board
Mrs. M. Durie	Ayrshire and Arran
Miss E. Hastings OBE	Lanarkshire
Mrs. M. S. Henderson OBE	Shetland

Water Pollution

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken to protect the water environment from pollution by dangerous substances; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In Scotland, controls on discharges of dangerous substances to the water environment are exercised by the river purification authorities under the Control of Pollution Act 1974.

Discharges must enable receiving waters to meet relevant environmental quality standards—EQSs. EQSs have already been set for 10 red list substances: proposals for EQSs for the remaining red list substances are set out in a consultation paper to be issued shortly, and copies of which I have placed in the Library today.

Caves

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he is taking to help the preservation of the Wemyss and other ancient caves, their carvings and paintings in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government have contributed to the cost of a study commissioned by Fife region and Kirkcaldy district to examine the structural engineering problems in the environs of Wemyss caves, grant aided a design study on coastal protection measures and contributed to the cost of a comprehensive programme of casting the Pictish and other stone carvings within the caves. We have also undertaken to look sympathetically at an application for assistance, under the scheme of grants to owners of ancient monuments, towards the cost of protection works should any such application be made.

The preservation of historically important caves in Scotland is ensured by taking them into the Secretary of State's guardianship, as is the case with St. Cormac's and St. Ninian's, or by scheduling them, as is the case with Wemyss caves. In one instance, Covesea cave, we have funded the excavation of threatened archaeological deposits.

Environmentally Sensitive areas

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what study he is making of United Kingdom international obligations in relation to the establishment of environmentally sensitive areas to protect species, such as the corncrake.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government keep international obligations such as the EC wild birds directive and the Ramsar convention on wetlands of international importance under regular review. Potential special protection areas, which are designated under the wild birds directive, have been identified among the machair lands in the Western Isles which is the favoured habitat of the corncrake. Environmentally sensitive areas are designated by my right hon. Friend under the Agriculture Act 1986 and under the EC regulations on improving the efficiency of agricultural structures to encourage farmers and crofters to protect and enhance the conservation value of their land. The machair of the Uists, Benbecula, Barra and Vatersay was designated as an environmentally sensitive area in 1988.

Anabolic Steroids

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much his Department is contributing, and over what period, to the research project on anabolic steroids misuse being carried out by the centre for research on drugs and health behaviour.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Scottish Office Home and Health Department will contribute 10 per cent. of the overall cost of this research project which is expected to start in January 1992 and last for 12 months.

Natural Heritage

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will now announce the membership of Scottish Natural Heritage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: On 15 January 1990 my predecessor, my right hon. and learned Friend, the Secretary of State for Transport, announced his intention to appoint Magnus Magnusson KBE as chairman of Scottish Natural Heritage. To serve as members with Magnus Magnusson I have appointed the following:

Professor Christopher Smout (Deputy Chairman)
Mr. Alan Blackshaw
Mrs. Nan Burnett
Mr. Bruce Cowe
The Earl of Dalkeith
Mr. Roy Dennis
Professor George Dunnet
Mr. David Laird
Sir John Lister-Kaye
Mr. Duncan McPherson
Dr. Bill Mutch

Scottish Natural Heritage will provide for the first time an integrated approach to the protection of our natural heritage. These appointments represent a wide variety of interests. Experience of day-to-day land management, of the use and enjoyment of the natural heritage and scientific expertise of international repute are combined with the breadth of experience and diversity of expertise of the voluntary movement. I am certain the team they represent will help SNH to achieve a productive and progressive relationship with those who manage the natural resources of our land.

A commencement order has been made which brings Scottish Natural Heritage into formal existence as a corporate body from today. SNH will assume its full powers and responsibilities from 1 April 1992. The interim period will allow SNH to undertake forward planning and to fulfil requirements in the Natural Heritage (Scotland) Act 1991 in relation to the employment of staff.

Higher Education

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what use his Department makes of information about parental higher education experience and social class in predicting demand for higher education.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 15 November 1991]: Our reforms in education are geared to extending opportunity for all pupils and widening access to higher and further education. We have increased the proportion of young Scots going into higher education from one fifth to one quarter over the last 10 years, and we project that the proportion will rise to over 40 per cent. by the end of the decade.

The model for projecting staying on rates takes account of parental education factors but the recent staying-on rate has been rising faster than can be explained by changes in parental education and this is allowed for in the projections.

Inquiries

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set up an inquiry to investigate the composition, funding witnesses, duration and publication of findings of inquiries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 26 November 1991]: Following recent discussions about the costs of legal representation at the Orkney inquiry, we shall be considering future arrangements for investigating social work matters.

Departmental Telephone Calls

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information is available on the number of calls made to directory inquiries from his Department since 1 April 1991.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 26 November 1991]: Between 1 April and 22 November, 6,081 calls to directory inquiries were made from the main Scottish Office buildings in Edinburgh, Glasgow and London which have in total some 5,000 telephone users. Information on the use of the service by users in the Department's small offices in other parts of the country is not available.

DEFENCE

Defence Estate

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide details of all land scheduled for release from the defence estate that is currently in the hands of agents pending its sale.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The list of sites currently with private sector agents for disposal is as follows:

Defence Contracts

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements have been made by his Department for the review or audit of commissions payable to purchasing agents in connection with Al-Yamamah defence contracts.

Mr. Alan Clark: My Department has not employed business agents in connection with Al-Yamamah contracts.

Accudyne Inc.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date his Department became aware that Accudyne Inc., a subsidiary of Astra Holdings plc., was alleged to have been implicated in the supply of ammunition components to Iraq via South Africa.

Mr. Alan Clark: My Department has no knowledge of this allegation.

Storage Depots

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether arrangements have been made for environmental clean-up at (a) the Royal Navy stores depot at Lathalmond before its closure and (b) the Ministry of Defence fuel storage depot at Portishead;

(2) what arrangements have been made for the sale of the Ministry of Defence fuel storage depot at Portishead.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Simulators

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to place increased emphasis on the use of simulators in military training.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. and learned Gentleman to the short essay entitled "The Use of Simulation Methods in Training" on page 43 of the 1991 "Statement on the Defence Estimates".

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects that the air defence training simulator at the RAF school of fighter control at RAF Bulmer will be fully operational.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: By mid-1992.

Short Brothers

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the considerations which prompted him to authorise Short Brothers to offer to supply the Starburst missile to South Korea.

Mr. Alan Clark: It is not our normal practice to comment on matters relating to the overseas promotion or sale of particular items of defence equipment.

Communications System

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the study of the communications system of the Royal Navy landing platform dock replacement to be completed.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The invitation to tender for the project definition of an integrated communications system for the landing platform dock replacement was issued in July 1991. Tenders are currently being assessed, and we hope to place a contract shortly.

Defence Systems

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards the United States global protection against limited strikes system.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In January of this year, President Bush announced the refocussing of the SDI programme towards global protection against limited strikes. The United Kingdom's approach to anti-ballistic missile defence research and associated matters remains based on the agreements reached between the then Prime Minister and President Reagan at Camp David in 1984 and 1986. These are set out in paragraph 208 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1988".

Military Custody

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many soldiers serving in Northern Ireland were taken into military custody in Northern Ireland since January 1991.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Three soldiers have been bailed on condition that they were held in military custody for alleged civil offences committed whilst serving in Northern Ireland.

The statistics for the number of soldiers placed in military custody for military offences is not held centrally and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 28 November 1991

HOME DEPARTMENT

Animal Procedures Inspectorate

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total cost of the work of his Department's animal procedures inspectorate in 1990; and if he will break this total cost down into salaries for inspectors, salaries for support staff, administrative costs and other specified costs, respectively.

Mrs. Rumbold: The total cost of the Home Office animals (scientific procedures) inspectorate for 1990-91 was over £1·5 million. Salary costs for inspectors and support staff were some £842,000 and £295,000 respectively. Travelling and subsistence costs for inspectors amounted to some £100,000 and accommodation and other costs including computing were some £309,000.

European Community Meetings

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the EC Ministerial Council meetings at which his Department has or will be represented during November and December.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Home Office was represented at the meeting of the Justice Council on 13 November in Brussels, and will be represented at the Trevi/immigration ministerial meeting at The Hague on 2 and 3 December.

European Community (Visits)

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list (i) the number of visits made by officials in his Department during the past month to destinations outside the United Kingdom but within the European Community on official business related to the European Community, (ii) the number of visits made by officials in his Department to Brussels within the past month on official business related to the European Community and (iii) the number of nights spent by officials in his Department over the past month away from the United Kingdom on official European Community business.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The information for the month of October 1991 is as follows:

(i) 51 visits were made by officials to destinations outside the United Kingdom but within the European Community;
(ii) 29 visits were made by officials to Brussels;
(iii) 76 nights were spent by officials away from the United Kingdom.

Magistrates Courts (Grant)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the level of grant paid for magistrates courts in the London borough of Barnet in each of the last four years; and what level of grant he intends to pay in 1992-93.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Magistrates courts expenditure is supported by grant at the rate of 80 per cent. The grant paid in 1988-89 to 1990-91, and expected to be paid in 1991-92, in respect of expenditure by the Barnet magistrates courts committee is as follows:

[1]1988-89	892,200
[1]1989-90	978,190
[2]1990-91	2,057,506
[2]1991-92	[3]1,850,338

[1] Grant paid on revenue expenditure, revenue contributions to capital, and capital financing costs.
[2] Grant paid on revenue and approved capital expenditure, and on loan charges relating to pre-1990-91 capital expenditure.
[3] Estimated outturn.

We will shortly be notifying magistrates courts committees of the cash limit on grant payable in respect of their 1992-93 revenue expenditure. I shall then write to the hon. Member. The allocation of approved capital expenditure which will attract 80 per cent. grant will be notified subsequently.

Crossbows

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to provide for a licensing scheme to enable persons aged 17 years or more to purchase and use crossbows under safe conditions to prevent so far as reasonably practicable injury to persons and animals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government have no plans to do so. There is no firm evidence to suggest that the level of crossbow misuse is widespread and increasing, or that existing legislation is not adequate to deal with the misuse which does take place. A system of licensing crossbows would be expensive to administer and would divert police resources away from other operational tasks. The Government are not persuaded, therefore, that licensing crossbows—which are used by many responsible people for legitimate sporting and recreational purposes—could be justified.

Young Offenders

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how often the suicide risk of young people held in young offenders institutions is reviewed; and whether it is reassessed after major events such as the death of a relative.

Mrs. Rumbold: Every prisoner is assessed for suicide risk upon reception into a young offender institution. The doctor decides at that time the appropriate immediate action and whether the prisoner should be recalled for further assessment, or for regular review. If at any time during the period in custody, a prisoner shows signs of possible suicide risk, he or she will be referred by staff to a medical officer for reassessment.

Where events likely to cause distress to a prisoner come to the attention of staff, the prisoner's behaviour and general demeanour will be monitored particularly carefully and, where necessary, additional care and support will be provided. If there is any concern about a possible suicide attempt, the prisoner will be referred to a doctor for further assessment.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether any classification is made by staff at young offender institutions between suicide threats they consider genuine and those they consider have another motive.

Mrs. Rumbold: There is no formal system of classifying threats of suicide by prisoners. It is difficult in practice to distinguish the level of intent in a prisoner's mind. All threats, therefore, must be and are taken seriously by prison staff. Not all prisoners who threaten suicide or who commit an act of self harm will necessarily be determined to kill themselves. But such behaviour, even where not suicidal, will normally be the expression of emotional problems which need to be addressed as soon as possible lest they develop into a more serious crisis.

Staff are encouraged to assess where problems may exist and to provide help and support to enable the prisoner to resolve them if at all possible.

Private Visits

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total estimated cost of private visits undertaken by him, other Ministers, and officials and specialist advisers, in an official capacity during the current financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I regret that information in the form requested is not held centrally.

EC Directives

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy not to support the provisions of the data protection directive affecting political canvassers' powers to ask members of the public about their voting intentions.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government are seeking to remove or mitigate the effects of the requirements in the draft directive which go beyond United Kingdom law and might hamper canvassing of voting intentions.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy not to support the provisions of the data protection directive which prevent direct mailing.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government are aware of concerns among various organisations about the likely effects of the draft directive on direct mailing. In discussion with other member states, it is seeking to ensure that the notification and consent provisions are modified in such a way as to avoid unreasonable restrictions.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy not to support the provisions of the data protection directive which would prevent airline tickets being issued across the boundaries of member states of the European Community.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government are seeking modification of provisions of the draft data protection directive which might inhibit the normal and legitimate ticketing of airline travel from a member state across the external frontier of the Community.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his policy in respect of negotiations on proposed EC directives with respect to (a) protection of the freedom of the individual and (b) protection of freedom of the press.

Mrs. Rumbold: In negotiations on EC directives, the Government seek to ensure a proper balance between the interests of the individual and of society at large.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy not to support those elements of the data protection directive which involve controls over the use of personal data such as names and addresses.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government are seeking to remove or mitigate the effects of provisions in the draft data protection directive which go beyond the controls which United Kingdom law already imposes on the use of computerised personal data, including names and addresses.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy not to support controls on the use of credit cards outside the European Community under the data protection directive.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government are seeking modification of provisions in the draft data protection directive which might inhibit the normal and legitimate use of credit cards by European Community nationals in third countries.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make its policy not to support the provisions in the data protection directive involving preparation of opinion polls.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government are seeking to remove or mitigate the effects of the requirements in the draft directive which go beyond United Kingdom law and might hamper the activities of public opinion pollsters.

Police Establishment

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will announce his decision on increases in police establishments for 1992-93.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: On 9 October I announced that there would be up to 1,000 additional police posts for 1992-93. I have today approved allocations for 937 police posts. In addition, 63 police posts will be freed for operational duties as a result of the contracting out of prisoner escorts next year. I have allocated 807 additional posts to provincial forces; the allocation is shown in the following table. The increases are effective from 1 April 1992, subject to confirmation by police authorities that they are willing to fund their share of the cost of these posts, where this has not already been given.

I have also set aside 30 posts for allocation to regional crime squads. Of these, 22 have been allocated to the No. 9 regional crime squad which covers the Metropolitan police district. I shall await the advice of Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary before I decide on allocations to the provincial regional crime squads.

I can also approve up to 100 posts where I am satisfied that the full cost would be reimbursed by a third party, as in the case of some airports.

Applications from police authorities for increases in establishments have exceeded the number of posts available for allocation and I have therefore had to set priorities taking into account advice from Her Majesty's chief inspector of constabulary. Because I have had to target the increases on the forces which I judge to be in the greatest need, some forces have not had their applications for increases in establishment approved.

Over 80 per cent. of the posts will be deployed on operational duties identified by chief constables, mainly at constable level.

I have also allocated 30 extra posts to provincial police forces for 1991-92. These posts have been reallocated from provisions originally made for regional crime squads. Details of these allocations are also given in the table. These increases will have immediate effect.

In addition to police costs, provision has been made for more than 1,100 additional civilian staff posts to help forces release more police officers for operational duties through civilianisation. Provincial police authorities identified scope in their applications for 1992-93 for the release of some 400 additional police officers to operational duties through civilianisation. In addition the Metropolitan police plans to increase operational strength by 200 through civilianisation.

The full effect of the additional posts together with civilianisation could therefore be to increase operational strength by over 1,500 in 1992-93.

TRANSPORT

Ministers (Travel)

Mr. Grist: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many miles he and his Ministers have travelled on British Rail during the course of their official duties during the last year.

Mr. Freeman: Over the last year, the Secretary of State for Transport and his ministerial colleagues have made about 150 journeys by British Rail while on official business.

HGV Taxation

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the situation as regards the enforcement of heavy goods vehicle taxation under the Goods Vehicles (Plating and Testing) Regulations 1988 concerning those operators involved in drain cleansing, the standards required for drivers and the recent court judgment in Swansea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The licensing and regulation of large goods vehicles (LGVs) is governed by the Vehicle (Excise) Act 1971. Classification depends upon the construction of the vehicle and its use on the public road. The taxation requirements for LGVs are vigorously enforced.

The classification of vehicles in the drain/sewer cleansing industry is complex. The issue is complicated by the requirement for some vehicles to meet the Plating and Testing Regulations 1988.

A recent court judgment has cast doubt on the Department's interpretation of the law in respect of the plating and testing regulations applicable to drain/sewer cleansing vehicles. The Department is considering whether to lodge an appeal.

Community Transport

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what grants are available for the development of community transport projects.

Mr. Freeman: Local authorities have powers to assist with the development of community transport projects. In addition, the Department of Transport grant-aids such projects in rural areas through the rural transport development fund administered by the Rural Development Commission.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, further to his answer of 18 November, Official Report, column 80, what is his definition of "temporarily imported" for vehicles registered in other EC states, in so far as such vehicles qualify for exemption from United Kingdom vehicle excise duty; and what steps are being taken to check that avoidance of due taxation is not taking place by coaches registered in the Republic of Ireland but operating full time in Britain.

Mr. Chope: A coach is held to be temporarily imported for these purposes if it is exported from the United Kingdom on completion of its journey, or otherwise, normally within three months of its entering the United Kingdom. Vehicle excise duty on a typical 50-seater coach is £207 in Ireland and £300 in the United Kingdom. I shall be pleased to consider any evidence which my hon. Friend has that existing regulations are being abused.

Red Routes

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of the amount of funding available for (a) traffic calming and (b) entry treatments along the length of the red route.

Mr. Chope: Because the red route pilot scheme is being used as a demonstration project the Department has agreed to meet the full cost of associated measures on local roads. We expect to pay about £0·6 million for traffic calming and £1·2 million for entry treatment.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many representations he has received regarding the red route through Islington; how many were in favour; and how many against.

Mr. Chope: I have received several representations about the red route pilot scheme. Some have been supportive, others less so. Many have concentrated on specific aspects of the scheme and have resulted in modifications being made.

Air Traffic

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met representatives from the Chartered Institute of Transport to discuss the growth in air traffic.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. and learned Friend attended the Confederation of British Industry's transport council in July this year, though not specifically to discuss the growth in air traffic.

Rolling Stock

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what representations he has received from the West Yorkshire passenger transport authority regarding the need to make a decision on the contract for rolling stock for the Leeds-Bradford electrification; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement on the financing of the rolling stock for use on the electrified railway between Bradford and Leeds and the Aire Valley railway.

Mr. Freeman: The West Yorkshire passenger transport authority and executive have pressed for an early decision on this project. I expect to make an announcement shortly.

Network SouthEast

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to approve the investment bid for British Rail plans to improve Network SouthEast rolling stock, track availability and services on the London-Brighton, London-Lewes and London-Newhaven-Seaford lines.

Mr. Freeman: I will be happy to consider any proposal although I note that the majority of investment schemes do not require ministerial approval.

Camera Surveillance

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will undertake to examine the feasibility of installing camera surveillance equipment at accident-prone junctions.

Mr. Chope: A number of automatic cameras are already in use in various parts of the country to detect violations of red traffic lights at junctions. Section 23 of the Road Traffic Act 1991 will allow information recorded by such devices, if type approved, to be used as evidence in court proceedings. It also makes similar provision for speed-detector cameras.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will meet representatives of local authorities to promote the use of surveillance cameras at traffic light-controlled junctions.

Mr. Chope: The Department has been consulting the local authority associations on the issue of guidance on the deployment of automatic cameras at traffic light-controlled junctions, and also for the detection of speeding offences.

Passenger Statistics

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment his Department has undertaken of passenger numbers on bus services following deregulation in (a) Greater London and (b) Metropolitan districts outside London.

Mr. Freeman: Between 1985-86 and 1990-91 bus patronage in London increased by some 4 per cent. reflecting a general increase in demand for all forms of public transport in the conurbation.

Outside London, over the five-year period bus patronage declined at an average rate of 4 per cent. per year (19 per cent. in total) broadly in line with long-term trends since the 1960s. In the Metropolitan areas the overall decline was some 26 per cent., the bulk of which occurred in 1986-87 reflecting the changes in the subsidy regime from the previous low fare/high subsidy policies and the substantial reorganisation of services which occurred around the time of deregulation.

Rail Investment

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of gross national product is accounted for by public investment in railways.

Mr. Freeman: In 1990-91 capital investment by British Rail (£834 million) and by London Underground (£442 million) totalled £1,276 million. This represented some 0·23 per cent. of gross national product.

Railway Noise

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the Government's conclusions on the report "Railway Noise and the Insulation of Dwellings" by the committee chaired by Dr. Mitchell.

Mr. Freeman: In my reply to the hon. Member for Sevenoaks (Mr. Wolfson) on 27 February 1991, Official Report, column 507, I said that before deciding on the committee's recommendations we would like to have the views of railway operators and other interested parties. We have now considered the views received and have come to the following decisions on the committee's main recommendations. Our aim has been as far as possible to achieve equity in the noise insulation standards applying to new roads and new railways. But as was evident from the committee's report, this is a field in which there is room for different opinions.

We accept the committee's view (recommendation 1 in the report) that those responsible for new railway lines should take all reasonably practicable steps to reduce noise in the corridor along the line, provided that they are cost effective.

We accept that there should be a night-time noise insulation standard for noise from new railways as well as a day-time standard (recommendations 2, 3 and 4). We have decided that, in line with the existing noise insultation standard for new roads, day time should be defined as 0600 to midnight, and that the levels should be 68 dBA $_{LAeq\ 18\ hr}$ for day and 63 dBA $_{LAeq\ 6\ hr}$ for night. 68 dBA $_{LAeq\ 18\ hr}$ is a straight conversion from the 24-hour level recommended by the committee. In the case of the night-time standard, both British Rail and the transport and road research laboratory have carried out analyses of more sets of road noise data than were available to the committee. Our decision that the night-time standard noise for railways should be 63 dBA $_{LAeq\ 6\ hr}$ reflects the outcome of those later analyses.

We accept in principle that the detailed operation of the noise insulation standards for new railways should follow as closely as possible the system already provided in the Noise Insulation Regulations 1973 (as amended) in the case of new roads (recommendations 5, 6, 7, 8 and 11).

The committee identified a number of other items that would need to be specified in any regulations (recommendations 9, 10, 12 and 13). We shall consider these recommendations when drawing up regulations to give effect to the noise insulation standards. In drafting the regulations and an associated technical memorandum, the Department will seek the technical assistance of Dr. Mitchell and some of the members of his committee and of representatives of the railway operators. We shall also ask this group to consider further whether it would be appropriate and practicable to include a maximum pass-by noise standard in the regulations (recommendation 15), though it would go beyond strict equity with the current statutory position relating to noise from new roads.

We accept recommendation 14 (that any future change in the noise level for the insulation of houses near new roads should be matched by a corresponding change for houses near new railways). We hope to commission next year a review of the data from road noise surveys to see whether there is any evidence of a shift in social attitudes towards road traffic noise. If such evidence emerges, we will consider the need for a large-scale study to determine whether there is a case for revising the noise insulation standard for new roads. We also accept in principle that when a new railway line is opened the opportunity should be taken to obtain evidence of the response to noise from new railway lines (recommendation 17). In the light of the evidence from the various studies, it may be appropriate in due course to review the relationship between the standard for new roads and those for new railways.

We are considering the implications of bringing some non-domestic buildings within the scope of the road noise insulation regulations; any change will be reflected in the regulations for railways (recommendation 16).

We shall consult on a draft of the regulations before they are made.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Departmental Spending

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will (a) give his Department's actual spend in 1990-91 and planned spend in 1991-92 and 1992-93 on science and technology, (b) break down this total spend by programme and (c) distinguish between capital and revenue expenditures.

Mr. Lilley: The information requested is set out in the following table:

Science and Technology

£m

	1990-91 actual	1991-92 provision	1992-93 provisional plans
Innovation (Industrial R & D)	82·2	103·2	100·0
Innovation (Other)	2·9	1·4	3·7
Aeronautics	26·1	25·5	26·1
Launch Aid	89·9	−7·7	−26·1
Space	88·9	96·1	95·2
Statutory Regulatory and Policy Support	48·1	51·1	55·9
Other (including Business Development, Design and Education and Training	63·3	52·2	47·2
Total	401·5	322·0	302·0
Total (excluding Launch Aid)	311·6	329·7	328·1

It is not possible to distinguish between capital and other expenditure within the totals.

Footwear Imports

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 6 November, Official Report, column 126, if he will state in full the reasons he decided not to ask the European Commission for the suspension of free circulation of imported footwear from China.

Mr. Sainsbury: I am writing to the hon. Member and shall arrange for copies to be placed in the Library of the House.

THE ARTS

Items in Lieu of Tax

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Minister for the Arts if there have been any items accepted in lieu of tax or allocated since his last announcement on 19 November.

Mr. Renton: Since my announcement on 19 November at column 123, I am pleased to inform the House of the acceptance of a Bugatti motor car and two vintage motor cycles in lieu of £153,000 tax. No decision has been taken on the allocation of these vehicles but the allocation of three offers previously accepted in lieu of tax has been decided. A watercolour by Rex Whistler entitled "Britannia visits the London Museum" will be allocated to the Museum of London, a portrait of Lady Ottoline Morrell by Augustus John will go to the National Portrait gallery and a collection of papers by George Bellas Greenough will go to University college London.

London Boroughs Grants Scheme

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Minister for the Arts what plans he has to ensure that there is no repetition of the problems for arts organisations caused by the London boroughs grants scheme this year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The inability of the London boroughs grants scheme to set a budget until well after the start of the current financial year caused havoc for its arts clients. I have listened to the many representations made to me and I am determined that there should be no repetition in future years. I understand that the process of setting a budget for 1992-93 is well in hand. I shall watch developments carefully and I shall remain ready to reconsider if necessary whether the funding arrangements in London are appropriate.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Serious Fraud Office

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Attorney-General how many cases were in court or under investigation by the Serious Fraud Office at (a) 1 April 1990, (b) 1 October 1990, (c) 1 April 1991 and (d) 1 October 1991 respectively; and how many lawyers and investigative staff were employed by the office at each date, distinguishing between those employed permanently and those employed temporarily.

The Attorney-General: The total number of cases under investigation and in court at the dates stipulated were as follows:

	Under investigation	At court
1 April 1990	32	29
1 October 1990	27	40
1 April 1991	19	37
1 October 1991	15	42

Cases under investigation are those where a decision whether or not to institute criminal proceedings has not yet been taken. Cases in court are those in which proceedings have commenced whether or not the proceedings were at the final court of trial. The figure of 50 cases given on Monday, 14 October 1991, in answer to a question from the hon. Member at column 36 is consistent with, but calculated on a different basis from, the figures here reported. The figure of 57 cases for October 1991 counts separate transfers or committals resulting from a common investigation as separate cases, whereas the figure of 50 does not.

The number of permanent staff employed as lawyers and investigative accountants at these dates were as follows:

	Lawyers	Investigative accountants
1 April 1990	18	14
1 October 1990	19	16
1 April 1991	19	16
1 October 1991	19	19

The number of temporary staff in these categories was three lawyers and nine investigative accountants at 1 October 1991 and two lawyers and 10 accountants at 1 April 1991. The figures for 1990 are not available. These figures exclude the use of counsel and staff from private sector accountancy firms engaged to work on individual cases.

Judges and Recorders

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Attorney-General if he will publish the names of all judges and recorders practising in the courts of England and Wales, together with (a) their annual salaries and (b) whether they possess graduate qualifications in a science subject.

The Attorney-General: As at 1 November 1991, in England and Wales there were over 800 judges including district judges, circuit judges, High Court judges and the more senior judiciary. There were also some 780 recorders, a few of whom were also district judges. The names of recorders, circuit judges, High Court judges and the more senior judiciary are published regularly in a number of reference books.

The current annual salaries of judges, and of tribunal posts occupied by serving judges are set out in the table. The salaries are due to increase on 1 December 1991.

The office of recorder is a part-time appointment and fees are paid for each day sat. The current daily rate is £281, but this will increase to £286 on 1 December 1991.

Information about the educational qualifications of post-holders is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Judicial Salaries

	From 1 April 1991 £	From 1 August 1991 £	From 1 December 1991 £
1. Lord Chief Justice	102,950		104,750
2. Lords of Appeal Master of the Rolls	95,150		97,000
3. Lords Justices of Appeal President of the Family Division Vice Chancellor	91,400		93,000

6. Circuit Judges Senior District Judge Family Division		58,800	59,900
7. District Judges PRFD District Judges		48,200	49,100

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Partial Test Ban Treaty

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what reason the United Kingdom voted against the continuing of consultations by the President at the January 1991 partial test ban treaty amendment conference.

Mr. Hogg: We believe that the conference on disarmament provides the best forum for discussion on nuclear testing issues. We were therefore unable to support the idea of resuming the work of the PTBTAC.

Iraqi Assets

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs by what means will Iraqi assets unfrozen on 22 November be allocated to the Iraqi Government.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Iraqi assets will be unfrozen only for direct payment to United Kingdom exporters of goods of British origin covered by a valid licence issued for the export of food, medicine and other humanitarian goods permitted under United Nations Security Council resolutions 661 and 687.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will list details of those items that can be purchased with unfrozen Iraqi assets.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Iraqi assets unfrozen in this country can be used only to purchase from the United Kingdom food, medicine and other humanitarian goods as permitted under United Nations Security Council resolutions 661 and 687.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what restrictions will be imposed on the use of Iraqi unfrozen assets.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Iraqi assets unfrozen in this country may be used only to pay for exports from the United Kingdom of food, medicine and other humanitarian goods as permitted under United Nations Security Council resolutions 661 and 687.

Mr. Robert Serry

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the extradition of Robert Serry from the Turks and Caicos islands to Tampa, Florida, to face trial on charges relating to the trafficking of substantial quantities of cocaine.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The arrest of Robert Serry was the most significant since that of Carlos Lehder in February 1987. It is of immense credit to the forces of law and order in the dependent territory of the Turks and Caicos islands that they apprehended Serry in March 1991, and that the Attorney-General's chambers successfully conducted the case for his extradition to Florida. It is a mark of the close co-operation we and the US authorities maintain in the anti-narcotics campaign in the Caribbean.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Aid

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his estimate of the funds which return to the United Kingdom for every £1 spent on (a) bilateral development aid and (b) multilateral development aid.

Mrs. Chalker: On the basis of the figures for procurement now provided by the multilateral agencies, I estimate that for the period 1982-89 average procurement of British goods and services amounted to £1·40 for every £1 contributed by the United Kingdom to multilateral aid funds. Because the origin of goods and services purchased under the untied element of the bilateral aid programme is not recorded, it is not possible to make a similar estimate for bilateral aid.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the proportion of the bilateral aid budget fully and freely available for worldwide procurement, and untied, between the years 1979 to the present day.

Mrs. Chalker: The proportion of the gross bilateral aid programme which was untied in the years 1979-1990 (the latest year for which figures are available) is as follows:

United Kingdom untied aid as a percentage of total United Kingdom gross bilateral aid 1979-1990

Year	Per cent.
1979	19·6
1980	26·0
1981	28·9
1982	25·1
1983	28·9
1984	34·8
1985	33·4
1986	25·3
1987	26·2
1988	29·7
1989	28·0
1990	28·7

ENERGY

Coal Products Ltd.

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the loan which Coal Products Ltd. has negotiated from the European Coal and Steel Community.

Mr. Wakeham: I can confirm that Coal Products Ltd., a wholly-owned subsidiary of British Coal, has been offered a £10,000,000 loan by the European Coal and Steel Community (ECSC). The loan will attract an interest rate rebate worth about £1·8 million over the five-year life of the loan. The ECSC requires that the loan should be guaranteed. British Coal will act as guarantor and, in keeping with my predecessor's assurance to the House on 18 March 1988, the guarantee is being negotiated on commercial terms on an arm's-length basis.

ENVIRONMENT

Fish Farming

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the control on buildings and structures in connection with inland fish-farming operations, envisaged in annex A to his Department's monthly bulletin for August 1991, will come into effect.

Mr. Yeo: Very early in 1992.

Toxic Waste Plants

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria apply to his consideration of applications for toxic waste plants.

Mr. Baldry: Toxic waste plants require approval by local planning authorities in the light of criteria contained in development plans, waste disposal plans, and statutorily required environmental impact assessments. Waste treatment plants also need disposal licences from local waste disposal authorities and these licences are required to be determined in relation to risks of water pollution and danger to public health.

Those plants involving incineration are also prescribed processes under part 1 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. This requires local authorisations regarding standards of emissions to air in relation to facilities with a capacity of less than 1 tonne per hour and for facilities of greater capacity a full authorisation by HMIP (thereby dispensing with the need for a disposal licence) covering emissions to all media. Guidance on the best available techniques not entailing excessive costs (BATNEEC) for the different types of plant is provided for HMIP and local authority inspectors.

All such decisions are subject to appeal to the Secretary of State and he also has a right to call in planning applications, but he will generally do so only if planning issues of more than local importance are involved. His criteria for deciding such cases must depend upon the specific issues brought before him by the parties involved.

Atmospheric Pollution

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on trends in atmospheric pollution caused by (a) nitrogen dioxide and (b) low-level ozone.

Mr. Baldry: Trends in concentrations of nitrogen dioxide and low-level ozone are described in the second and first reports respectively of the United Kingdom photochemical oxidants review group, copies of which are in the Library of the House. In some rural areas, annual mean concentrations of nitrogen dioxide doubled between 1979 and 1987. Urban areas showed no general trend. Any trends present in the levels of low-level ozone are masked by year to year variability.

European Community (Visits)

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list (i) the number of visits made by officials in his Department during the past month to destinations outside the United Kingdom but within the European Community on offical business related to the European Community; (ii) the number of visits made by officials in his Department to Brussels within the past month on official business related to the European Community and (iii) the number of nights spent by officials in his Department over the past month away from the United Kingdom on official European Community business.

Mr. Heseltine: During the past month only one Minister in my Department has made such a visit. It was not to Brussels and entailed one night away from the United Kingdom.

Local Government Finance (Sheffield)

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received of late from the Sheffield city council regarding the council tax.

Mr. Key: The Department has received two letters, copies of which were placed in the Library of the House on 14 October 1991.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to make an announcement on next year's standard spending assessments; and if he will review the formula for calculating standard spending assessments.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend has now announced his proposals for next year's standard spending assessments. These include changes to some elements of the methodology, following consideration of representations from and discussion with the local authority associations and individual local authorities.

Homelessness

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the grants available for voluntary organisations to help homeless people.

Mr. Yeo: Voluntary organisations concerned with homelessness receive grants under section 73 of the 1985 Housing Act. I have placed in the Library a list of the 99 projects in England which are funded in the current financial year. These are in addition to nearly 70 housing associations and voluntary organisations which are being funded under my Department's rough sleepers initiative.

Water Company Chairmen

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give financial remuneration in terms of (a) salaries and (b) bonuses for the chairmen of each of the water public limited companies in (i) November 1990 and (ii) November 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: This is a matter on which the companies themselves report to their shareholders.

Homosexuality

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many of the representations he has received concerning section 28 of the Local Government Act 1988 have been favourable and how many have criticised the section or the way it has worked.

Mr. Key: Of the 126 representations about section 28 received by my Department since the section came into force, 37 of them were in favour of the section, 75 critical and 14 general queries expressing no preference.

Landfill Gas

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish a revised edition of "Waste Management Paper No. 27" about landfill gas.

Mr. Trippier: The second edition of "Waste Management Paper No. 27" is being published today. This follows public consultation on a draft of the revised paper.

The paper gives guidance on the monitoring and control of landfill gas and its publication follows a Government commitment in the White Paper "This Common Inheritance" to publish detailed guidance on waste disposal techniques. Copies are being sent to the local authorities.

The guidance takes into account developments in the Department's research programme on landfill gas. This research is continuing. Information gained from the research programme and developments in landfilling practices will be assessed for further updating of the paper in the future.

Non-domestic Revaluation

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what will be the valuation date for the 1995 non-domestic revaluation.

Mr. Heseltine: The next non-domestic property revaluation is due to come into force from 1 April 1995.

I propose that the antecedent date, that is the common valuation date, for the 1995 revaluation will be 1 April 1993 and I will be laying the necessary regulations in due course. My decision will provide certainty for businesses and will allow adequate time for the assessment work to be carried out.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Visible Trade Deficit

1. Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the cumulative United Kingdom visible trade deficit since June 1987.

Mr. Mellor: A total of £81 billion.

Taxes and National Insurance

12. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his most recent forecast is for the proportion of non-oil gross domestic product that taxes and national insurance contributions will represent in 1991-92.

Mr. Maude: 37·1 per cent.

15. Dr. Kumar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of non-oil gross domestic product non-oil taxes and national insurance contributions represented in (a) 1978-79 and (b) 1991-92.

Mr. Maude: 34·7 per cent. and 37·1 per cent. respectively.

Income Tax

14. Mr. Jessel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of net tax yield to the Government was drawn from income tax in 1970-71, 1980-81, and 1990-91, respectively.

Mr. Maude: 31 per cent. in 1970-71, 29 per cent. in 1980-81 and 27 per cent. in 1990-91.

22. Mr. Paice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current income tax yield from the top 5 per cent. of earners as a proportion of the total; and what was the equivalent figure in 1979.

Mr. Maude: It is estimated that in 1991-92 the top 5 per cent. of taxpayers will be liable to pay about 32 per cent. of the total yield of income tax. The corresponding figure for 1978-79 was 24 per cent.

Japanese Investment

16. Mr. William Powell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of Japanese investment into the European Community came to the United Kingdom in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Mellor: The latest information published by the Bank of Japan indicates that in 1990 just over half of Japanese direct investment in the European Community came to the United Kingdom.

Corporation Tax

17. Mr. Ward: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the level of corporation tax for small companies; and what was the comparable figure 12 years ago.

Mr. Maude: The small companies rate of corporation tax is 25 per cent. compared with 42 per cent. at the time of the 1979 general election.

Balance of Payments

18. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest forecast for the balance of payments deficit in 1992.

Mr. Mellor: In his autumn statement the Chancellor published a forecast for the current account deficit of £9½ billion in 1992.

Economic Revival

19. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received over measures to revive the economy.

Mr. Mellor: A number. Many of them support the Government's determination to defeat inflation and thereby create the conditions for sustainable economic growth.

Manufacturing Investment

20. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average annual rate of manufacturing investment between 1974 and 1979; and what it has been since 1979.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Barnsley, West and Penistone (Mr. McKay).

Economic and Monetary Union

21. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent discussions he has had with his European Community counterparts on the progress in reaching an agreement on the draft treaty on economic and monetary union.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I attended the latest meeting of the intergovernmental conference on economic and monetary union on Monday 25 November. I shall attend a further meeting during the weekend of 30 November to 2 December.

Unemployment

23. Mr. Bidwell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effects of the Government's economic policies on employment over the last year.

24. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what effects the Government's economic policies have had on the level of unemployment over the last year.

Mr. Mellor: Such effects are not measurable. The Government's economic policies aim to foster sustainable growth of output and employment.

TESSAs

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Gloucester, 13 November, Official Report, column 526, if he will review the operation of the TESSA regulations in the light of evidence that some banks and building societies presently refuse to accept TESSAs transferred from other issuers.

Mr. Maude: The TESSA rules are kept under regular review. The number of institutions unwilling so far to accept inward transfers amounts to a very small minority out of a total of 150 providers—and, of those, one has already changed its mind.

EC Meetings

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the EC Ministerial Council meetings at which his Department has, or will be, represented during November and December.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I attended the meeting of the Council of Economic and Finance Ministers on 11 November and will attend further meetings of that Council on 3 and 16 December. My hon. Friend the Financial Secretary to the Treasury attended the meeting of the Budget Council on 12 November. In addition, I have attended, and will continue to attend, meetings of the intergovernmental conference on economic and monetary union.

EC (Visits)

Mr. Forman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list (i) the number of visits made by officials in his Department during the past month to destinations outside the United Kingdom but within the European Community on official business related to the European Community,

(ii) the number of visits made by officials in his Department to Brussels within the past month on official business related to the European Community and (iii) the number of nights spent by officials in his Department over the past month away from the United Kingdom on official European Community business.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Officials in my Department made 58 visits in the month of October to destinations outside the United Kingdom but within the European Community on official EC business; of these visits 46 were to Brussels. Officials spent 76 nights away from the United Kingdom on official EC business in October.

MIRAS

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated value of MIRAS in Scotland in (a) 1990-91 and (b) 1991-92.

Mr. Maude: Broad estimates based on the regional distribution of mortgage interest relief from an analysis of the family expenditure survey are as follows:

Cost of mortgage interest relief for home owners in Scotland

	£ million
1990-91	530
1991-92	420

The percentages of mortgage interest relief given at source through the MIRAS system are estimated at 87 per cent. for 1990-91 and 94 per cent. for 1991-92.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Investment

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science under what conditions agencies or authorities responsible to his Department have the right to invest funds surplus to their current requirements.

Mr. Eggar: Bodies which receive grant from the Department are generally responsible for their own decisions about the management of any funds they may be holding.

Science Budget

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage increase there will have been in real terms between the United Kingdom science budget of 1978-79 and 1992-93.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Based on actual expenditure and provision, the science budget in 1992-93 will be 31·8 per cent. higher in real terms than it was in 1978-79. However, after making appropriate adjustments for certain transfers of funding responsibilities since 1978-79, including the proposed change in the dual-support arrangements, the increase will be 23·7 per cent.

Capital Spending

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will set out by local education authority (a) the bids for capital spending on further education and (b) the capital allocations for further education for 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91, respectively.

Mr. Fallon: This information could not be provided without disproportionate cost.

Standard Assessment Tests

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will publish information relating to the aggregate results in the standard assessment tests for key stage one for each local authority area, adjusted to take account of socio-economic and other factors in the manner of the DES statistical bulletin 13/84 or other similar appropriate manner;

(2) if he will publish such information as he has available relating to the aggregate results in the standard assessment tests for key stage one by each local authority area, but in such a manner that individual schools may not be identified.

Mr. Eggar: As announced on 7 November at column 206, my right hon. and learned Friend intends to publish shortly the aggregate results of each local education authority in England, together with the national results. Individual schools will not be identified.

Primary Schools

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many primary schools in (a) England and (b) Wales were built before 1900.

Mr. Fallon: The Department does not maintain a record of the age of school buildings but the "Study of School Building" published in 1977, which was based on a sample survey of primary and secondary schools, reported that, of the then 23,000 primary schools in England and Wales, 8,000 were built before 1903.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales is responsible for schools in Wales.

Institut Laue-Langevin

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what conclusions the Science and Engineering Research Council has reached in its review of neutron facilities at the Institut Laue-Langevin in Grenoble and the ISIS source at its Rutherford-Appleton laboratory; how those conclusions relate to the present problems with the ILL reactor; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Following its review of neutron beam requirements earlier this year, the Science and Engineering Research Council concluded that its expenditure in this area of science should be reduced by some £5 million a year from the previously planned level with effect from 1994-95.

The council further concluded that its financial support for the ISIS facility should remain broadly in line with currently planned levels. It is therefore seeking a reduction in the level of the United Kingdom's contribution to the Institut Laue-Lagevin (ILL) beyond 1993.

The council's aim is to reach a satisfactory agreement with our French and German partners in the ILL both on the question of the future level of United Kingdom participation and on the related question of a repair plan for the reactor. To achieve this the United Kingdom is proposing that the present ILL convention should be superseded from 1 January 1994; formal notice to this effect, as required under the convention, will be given before the end of 1991.

The United Kingdom delegation will be making a statement on the United Kingdom's position to the ILL council, now meeting in Grenoble, later today. A copy of that statement is being placed in the Library.

HEALTH

NHS Expenditure

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the expenditure on the national health service in each of the years from 1978-79 to date; what allocations have been made in those years to the Barking, Havering and Brentwood health authority; and what variations respectively these represent in relation to the increases in national expenditure.

Mr. Dorrell: The table shows changes in gross NHS expenditure in England and in expenditure—as far as it can be identified—in the area covered by Barking, Havering and Brentwood health authority. The latter figures include all revenue and capital expenditure by the district health authority; the cost of capital schemes within the district borne by the North East Thames regional health authority; and expenditure on family health services, which is not strictly attributable to particular districts. Revenue expenditure incurred by North East Thames for the region as a whole and expenditure met nationally by the Department of Health and organisations providing central services to the NHS are excluded.

Capital expenditure for particular localities tends to vary year on year, mostly reflecting changes in the pattern of capital investment throughout the country—for example, in the case of Barking, Havering and Brentwood, completion of the redevelopment of Harold Wood hospital in 1987-88, and the construction of a school of nursing and an extension at High Wood hospital in 1988-89.

	NHS expenditure, England		Barking, Havering and Brentwood health authority[1] expenditure

Magnetic Resonance Imaging Assessment

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average waiting list, region by region, for magnetic resonance imaging assessment/treatment.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Waiting list information is not collected centrally by intended diagnostic procedure or treatment.

Patients Charter

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what role he envisages for community health councils in the implementation of the patients charter.

Mr. Dorrell: Community health councils continue to have an important role to play in identifying issues of local concern and in acting as a communication channel between authorities and the people they serve.

Asthma

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the latest information he has on the morbidity associated with asthma in terms of lost schooling and sickness absence.

Mr. Dorrell: There is significant morbidity associated with asthma in terms of lost schooling and sickness absence. More than 5·5 million days of certified sickness absence were recorded in Britain in 1987-88, representing about 7 million actual days lost. Information is not available centrally on absences from school associated with asthma.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will designate the effective treatment and care of asthma as one of the first set of key areas for targeting;

(2) what responses he has received relating to asthma in response to his White Paper "The Health of the Nation" Cm. 1523.

Mr. Dorrell: No decision has yet been made on which key areas will be included in the White Paper. We have received 2,050 responses to the Green Paper. Many of these welcomed the suggestion that asthma should be a priority area for the White Paper.

Abortion

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received about Medway health authority's decision to restrict the abortion service available on the national health service to certain groups; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received one representation on abortion services in Medway district health authority. The level of NHS terminations in the Medway authority were just below the national average —42 per cent.—in 1990 and are likely to be above it at the end of 1991.

"Health of the Nation"

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many responses his Department has received to the "Health of the Nation" Green Paper; and how many of these called for a ban on tobacco advertising.

Mr. Dorrell: Of the 2,050 replies sent to the Department from organisations and individuals, over 75 per cent. have discussed smoking-related issues. Many have called for a ban on the advertising of tobacco.

Homeless People

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will collate and publish information from the national health service, coroners courts and police services on the cost of providing emergency health care to homeless people.

Mr. Dorrell: No.

Health Expenditure

Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a table listing United Kingdom public expenditure on health as a percentage of gross national product together with comparable figures in other European Community countries.

Mr. Dorrell: It is estimated that total United Kingdom spending on the NHS in 1991-92 will amount to 5·6 per cent. of GDP, rising to 5·7 per cent. in 1992-93. This compares with a figure of 4·7 per cent. in 1978-79. We do not have comparable figures for other European Community countries.

Vehicle Disinfection

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to ensure that commercial vehicles used for bulk transport of meat and bonemeal are properly disinfected before subsequently being used for the transport of food for human consumption.

Mr. Dorrell: The Food Hygiene (Market Stalls and Delivery Vehicles) Regulations 1966, as amended, already make it an offence to use insanitary vehicles to transport food. They also require food businesses to keep delivery vehicles clean and in good repair and order.

Information Technology

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance his Department has issued to family health service authorities on the allocation of money for information technology to general practitioner practices.

Mr. Dorrell: This is contained in "Family Health Services Letter (91)57", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Hospitals (European Patients)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his practice to maintain lists of health authorities in England and Wales offering operations and convalescent holidays to patients from European countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: No.

Hospital Wards

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospital wards in each health region have been converted for administrative use during each year since 1979.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not collected centrally.

Project 2000

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects all nursing students to be within the Project 2000 scheme in England.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Implementation of Project 2000 began in 1989. By the end of the current financial year, nearly 60 per cent. of the colleges and schools of nursing in England will have received approval to run Project 2000 and £109 million will have been made available centrally towards the cost of implementation. Our aim is to complete implementation as soon as possible; the precise completion date will depend on the funding which can be made available given other competing priorities.

Counterfeit Medicines

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessments his Department has undertaken of the sales and production of counterfeit medicines in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Virgina Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman) on 18 November, Official Report, column 40.

NHS Statistics (Sunderland)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will call for a report from the chairman of the Northern regional health authority regarding (a) the number of administrative jobs and (b) the cost of administration in the Sunderland district for each of the last three years and the projected figures for 1992.

Mr. Dorrell: Responsibility for administrative costs in local health services rests with the local district health authority. The hon. Member may wish to write to Mr. Frank Cronin, the chairman of Sunderland health authority, for details.

Traffic Casualties

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list for each year since 1979 the amount of money collected by the national health service in respect of payment for ambulance services to traffic casualties;

(2) if he will list for each year since 1979 the amount of money collected by the national health service in respect of payment for hospital treatment of traffic casualties.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 25 November 1991]: There is no charge for the NHS emergency ambulance service. When patients are treated by medical practitioners following a road traffic accident, two separate charges may be payable. An emergency treatment fee may be claimed at a flat rate, currently £19·30, when any qualified medical practitioner provides immediate medical treatment following a road traffic accident. Health authorities and NHS trusts may collect this fee if the initial treatment is provided at an NHS hospital. The fee is payable by vehicle users and must be covered by motor insurance policies.

In addition, hospitals can collect charges for any subsequent in or out-patient treatment up to maximum levels, currently £2,667 and £267 respectively. These charges can normally be claimed only from motor insurers, and only if the insurer has made a payment in respect of death or bodily injury arising from the road traffic accident.

The total income to health authorities in England from these charges has been as follows:

	£ million
1979-80	1·438
1980-81	2·723
1981-82	4·198
1982-83	5·894
1983-84	6·950
1984-85	7·324
1985-86	7·916
1986-87	7·871
1987-88	8·687
1988-89	8·748
1989-90	9·256

Information relating to 1990-91 is not yet available.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will issue guidance requiring local authorities to disregard attendance allowance when determining charges for personal social services.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 26 November 1991]: Local authorities have discretionary powers to charge for domiciliary and day-care services. If charges are made authorities must take into account what it is reasonably practicable for an individual to pay. It is proposed to issue guidance to authorities about the use of these powers.

The Government's view is that the full economic cost of providing a service should be recovered where this can be done without causing hardship to the service user.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefit Downgrade

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for what reasons it was decided to downgrade social security benefits of a claimant after a period of hospital in-patient care of six weeks but to allow benefits to remain unchanged for up to 12 months for those claimants admitted to residential or nursing care.

Miss Widdecombe: Most social security benefits are reduced after six weeks of free in-patient treatment in hospital. These arrangements are based on the view that state funds should not make double provision for the same need. As the national health service provides free maintenance as well as free treatment, it has always been the policy that maintenance benefits paid from state funds should not continue to be paid in full indefinitely.

By contrast, people who enter residential care homes or nursing homes do not receive free maintenance from public funds, but have to pay for the services provided by the home. For this reason, most benefits other than income support are not affected by admission to such homes. Because income support provides assistance with the fees for residential or nursing care, the amount of benefit that can be paid is normally amended as soon as the claimant incurs such fees. However, the temporary admission of one partner to residential or nursing care may have no effect on the amount of benefit that can be paid if to pay for each partner as separate individuals would result in the couple's benefit entitlement being reduced. This arrangement can last for up to 12 months, after which time the couple are assessed separately.

Benefit Deductions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total amount of poll tax collected in 1990-91 from direct deductions in benefit from offices covering the Nottingham, North constituency; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

EC Meetings

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the EC Ministerial Council meetings at which his Department has or will be represented during November and December.

Mr. Jack: The Department attended the Labour and Social Affairs Council meeting on 6 November and is planning to attend the next meeting on 3 December.

Carer's Premium

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any proposals to remove the anomaly whereby people aged over 65 years are not entitled to carer's premium due to retirement benefit being counted as an overlapping benefit, but people who reach the age of 65 years with an underlying entitlement such as invalidity pension will be allowed to continue receiving carer's premium if they are already in receipt of it.

Miss Widdecombe: The carer premium was introduced in October 1990 in the relevant income-related benefits on top of all other premiums primarily to provide extra benefit to people of working age who are unable to work or whose employment is restricted because they care for a severely disabled person. As such it goes to carers who can establish entitlement to invalid care allowance. A person over the age of 65 years would not be able to establish entitlement to that benefit if caring starts after that age. But a carer who has established entitlement to invalid care allowance and the carer premium before reaching 65 years may retain those entitlements beyond that age to recognise the former limitations on employment through the caring role. We have no plans to change these arrangements.

Family Credit

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures showing the proposed family credit ceilings in 1992-93 for each of (a) a married couple with one child aged under five years, (b) a married couple with two children aged under 11 years, (c) a married couple with two children aged over 11 years, (d) a married couple with three children aged under 11 years,

(e) a married couple with three children aged over 11 years and (f) a married couple with two children aged under 11 years and two children over 11 years.

Miss Widdecombe: At the new benefit levels proposed for April 1992 the family credit ceiling represented by the highest amount of net earnings and other relevant income a family can have and still qualify for family credit at the minimum payment of 50p will be as follows:

Married couple with one child under 5 years	139·32
Married couple with two children aged under 11	154·18
Married couple with two children aged over 11 (but under 16)	173·75
Married couple with three children aged under 11	169·03
Married couple with three children aged over 11 (but under 16)	198·39
Married couple with two children aged under 11 and two children over 11 years (but under 16)	203·46

Child Benefit

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the rate of child benefit in 1987 for (a) first children and (b) other children, in current prices.

Miss Widdecombe: In April 1987 the rate of child benefit was £7·25 a week for each child, which is equivalent to £9·62 at October 1991 prices. From April 1992 we are increasing the rate for the eldest qualifying child to £9·65.

Disablement Benefit

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow, Official Report, 18 November, column 7, (a) how many of the 1,367 claims for disablement benefit were successful, (b) how many went to appeal at a tribunal, (c) what was the average amount paid out to successful claimants, (d) what was the total amount paid out in respect of these claims and (e) how many are awaiting hearings at appeal tribunals.

Miss Widdecombe: The administration of disablement benefit is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Student Nurses

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which social security benefits are potentially available to a single nursing student assuming that the student is not pursuing a Project 2000 course of nursing, is under 25, single and able-bodied.

Miss Widdecombe: Nursing students who are not pursuing a Project 2000 course have access to the normal range of social security benefits, provided the appropriate qualifying conditions are met.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many nursing students claimed community charge benefit in 1990-91.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not available.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what minimum level of community charge would be required for a nursing student to be able to claim community charge benefit in the current financial year, assuming that (a) the student is aged under 25 years, single, is not pursuing a Project 2000 course of nursing and has a net weekly income of £96·83 and (b) the student is aged over 25 years, single, is not pursuing a Project 2000 course of nursing and has a net weekly income of £96·83.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is as follows:

(a) The personal community charge would need to be nearly £595 or higher before any community charge benefit would be payable.

(b) The personal community charge would need to be about £511 or higher before any community charge benefit would be payable.

Notes:

The exemplifications assume that the single student nurse is not a lone parent or disabled. In these circumstances student nurses would be entitled to some benefit at lower charge levels.

Most student nurses will have benefited in full from the £140 reduction in community charges under the Community Charges (General Reduction) Act 1991.

Reduced Earning Allowance

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims were made for payments of backdated reduced earning allowance in each of the past four years in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Greenock and Port Glasgow; how many of these applications were successful; what was the average payment made; and what was the total amount paid in each of the past three years in (i) Strathclyde and (ii) Greenock and Port Glasgow.

Mr. Scott: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Community Charge Benefit

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people with a net weekly income of £96·83 claimed community charge benefit in 1990-91.

Miss Widdecombe: It is estimated that about 25,000 claimants with a net income of between £96 and £97 were in receipt of community charge benefit in May 1990.

Source:

The Housing Benefit/Community Charge Benefit Management Information System annual 1 per cent. sample inquiry for May 1990. However, data for May 1990 underestimates the number of recipients of Community Charge Benefit because some people who were entitled to benefit had not had their benefit claims assessed by then.

Note:

The figures exclude those in receipt of Income Support and in cases involving couples, the income specified is for the couple and not an individual person.

Council Tax

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will outline the benefit arrangements that will apply under the new council tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Under provisions in the Local Government Finance Bill currently before the House, council tax benefit will replace community charge benefit from April 1993. People on income support or equivalent levels of income will be entitled to maximum rebates of up to 100 per cent. of their council tax liability, rather than the 80 per cent. maximum under community charge benefit.

Amounts are currently included in the income-related benefit levels to help towards the 20 per cent. contribution to the community charge that everyone has to pay. From next April, these will amount, in total, to an estimated £680 million a year.

Following the statement I made to the House on 21 October, in which I indicated that the Government did not propose to make a reduction in benefit rates corresponding to this year's £140 reduction in community charge, I am glad to be able to announce also that there will be no reduction in the value of income-related benefit levels on the introduction of the new council tax to reflect the fact that benefit recipients will no longer be expected to meet their 20 per cent. liability for the community charge. This will mean that from April 1993, income support levels will be at least £1·40 a week higher for single people, and £2·80 a week higher for couples, than they might otherwise have been.

Generally speaking, the detailed arrangements for the new council tax benefit will follow the rules that currently apply to all other income-related benefits, including the same structure of personal allowances and premiums, the treatment of capital and the defintions of earnings and income. For those with income above their appropriate applicable amount we propose that council tax benefit will be reduced by 20p for every £1 of excess income, compared with a reduction of 15p for every £1 of excess income under community charge benefit. However, those on the lowest levels of income will gain from the introduction of 100 per cent. maximum rebates and the decision not to adjust benefit levels on the introduction of the new tax and, overall, benefit entitlement will extend to claimants with broadly the same levels of income as those currently helped by community charge benefit.

It is reasonable to assume that non-dependant adults sharing the household on a non-commercial basis with a benefit claimant should be expected to make some contribution to the council tax bill. There will, therefore, be a system of non-dependant deductions in the new council tax benefit scheme, as there is for housing benefit. For those non-dependants who are not in full-time work or whose income is below a prescribed level (£100 a week in 1992-93 terms) the deduction will be £1 a week. For those in full-time work on higher incomes the deduction will be £2 a week. There will be no deduction where the non-dependant is on income support or would otherwise attract a discount.

The new council tax benefit will be uprated each year along with the other income-related benefits. As part of my uprating statement on 21 October, columns 639-45, I announced that the Rossi index had been revised this year to align more exactly with those costs which people are expected to meet from their benefit, thus bringing within it 20 per cent. of community charge, water rates, and certain miscellaneous housing costs not previously included. This approach, which has been widely supported, will naturally entail a further adjustment to the calculation of the index for the April 1993 uprating, to reflect the fact that there will be no minimum contribution to the council tax. Water rates and miscellaneous housing costs will of course continue to be taken into account.

The new council tax benefit scheme will also provide help in respect of non-dependants on low incomes living as the second adult in households where the person liable for the new tax is not receiving a rebate on the basis of his own income. In response to the concerns of the local authority associations to minimise the administrative complexity of the new scheme, rebates for second adults will be assessed on a similar basis to non-dependant deductions. A maximum 25 per cent. rebate will be awarded in respect of a second adult or adults on income support. Lower levels of rebate will apply in respect of second adults with gross incomes above prescribed levels. In relation to 1992-93 income levels, the rebates would be as follows:

	Percentage rebate
Second adults with combined income less than £100 a week	15
Second adults with combined income between £100 and £130 a week	7½
Second adults with combined income of £130 a week or more	[1]

[1] No rebate.

The detailed arrangements for the new council tax benefit scheme will be set out in draft regulations on which we will be consulting with the local authority associations in due course. The draft regulations will also be referred to the Social Security Advisory Committee and will be subject to approval by resolution of each House of Parliament.

Overall it is expected that the new council tax benefit scheme will bring help to some 5 million claimants (between one in four and one in five of all council tax payers). At current benefit and estimated council tax levels the cost of the scheme would be around £1·1 billion a year.

WALES

Hospital Statistics

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the hospital bed percentage occupancy rate for each district health authority in Wales in 1974 to 1979 and 1979 to the latest available date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Prior to 1981, Pembrokeshire and East Dyfed DHAs existed as one authority (Dyfed DHA) and, therefore, it is not possible to give figures in the form requested. The available information is given in the following table.

Performance targets will be set for bed occupancy rates in the shortly to be published updated version of "NHS Wales: Agenda for Action".

Our target is for the percentage for NHS non-psychiatric hospital beds occupied to increase from 73·6 per cent. in 1990-91 to 78 per cent. by 1994-95.

Percentage Bed occupancy rates

	1974-79		1979-81		1982-1990-91[1]

[1] Due a change in 1988 from collecting data on the basis of a calendar year to that of a financial year the information used to calculate this figure excludes data for the first quarter of 1988.

NHS

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new procedures and treatments have been added to the national health service in Wales since 1979.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Detailed information on new procedures and treatments added to the NHS in Wales is not held centrally. However, the NHS is continually expanding the provision of innovative services for patients and the introduction of lasers, endoscopes, new forms of anaesthetics and drugs, as well as imaging devices, enable clinicians in Wales to undertake a wider range of procedures and treatments which benefit a broader range of patients within the population.

Welsh Flag

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans his Department has to fly the Welsh dragon flag on the Britannia bridge between Arfon and Ynys Môn.

Mr. David Hunt: The flying of flags on the Britannia bridge is not a matter for determination by my Department.

Surgical Operations

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the numbers of operations in Wales for (a) hernias, (b) varicose veins and (c) hip replacements in 1979 and at the latest available date.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information is given in the following table:

Principal Operations[1]	1979	1989
Hernias[2]	3,703	4,787
Varicose Veins	747	2,121
Hip Replacements[3]	1,501	2,407

[1] The information may understate the true position in that not all hospitals provide complete clinical details relating to patient discharges and deaths.
[2] Includes inguinal, fermoral and abdominal hernias but excludes hiatus or diaphragmatic hernias.
[3] Includes replacement of head of femur for 1989.

Compact Schemes

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to establish compact schemes in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: There are four compacts operating in Wales, in south Glamorgan, mid Glamorgan, west Glamorgan and Clwyd. Training and enterprise councils will be able to bid for funding in respect of areas not already covered in their business plans for 1992-93.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those areas in Wales where business-education partnerships have been established; and how much money his Department has allocated to each of them.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Education-business partnerships have been established in every county in Wales. A total of £260,000 has been allocated for operational funding in Wales for the current year, but the amount that each partnership will receive will depend on local circumstances and activity.

Maternity Confinement

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the average length of time for maternity confinements in Wales in (a) 1961, (b) 1971, (c) 1979 and (d) at the latest available date.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Information on length of maternity confinements is available centrally only for those deliveries which took place in hospital from 1982 onwards. The average length of stay for a patient whose hospital stay included a recorded delivery is given as follows for 1982 and 1989:

Average length of stay of delivery episodes

	Days
1982	5·2
1989	4·8

Information on the average length of stay of all obstetrics and all GP maternity hospital stays is, however, available for the years requested and is given in the following table. Figures for 1982 are also given for comparison purposes:

Average length of stay

	[1]Obstetrics Days	[1]GP maternity Days
1961	10·3	9·2
1971	6·2	5·5
1979	5·5	4·7
1982	4·7	4·6
1989-90	3·7	3·7

[1] Includes cases in which no delivery occurs.

The information illustrates one of the factors leading to a reduced demand for beds in the modern NHS.

Inward Investment

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the chairman of the Welsh Development Agency concerning his recent inward investment mission to Japan, Australia and the United States of America; what was the total cost of the mission; how many firms with prospects of investment in Wales were visited on each leg of the mission; what was the additional cost to the agency of the participation by Mr. Simon Cohen of Lowe Bell; why the company visit scheduled for the United States leg of the mission was cancelled; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have frequent meetings with the chairman of the Welsh Development Agency to discuss a range of matters, including inward investment. The matters raised are the responsibility of the agency. I understand, however, that the total cost of the mission was approximately £28,000. Fourteen individual companies were visited and group discussions with companies were held on nine occasions. I understand that the cost of Mr. Shimon Cohen's participation was £7,500, and that the proposed company visit in Los Angeles could not go ahead because senior staff in the company were no longer available.

Medical Staff (Pay)

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much the average pay of nurses and doctors in Wales increased between 1974 and 1979 and between 1979 to the latest available date, in cash and in real terms.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Separate information for Wales is not held centrally.

On a Great Britain basis the cumulative average percentage increases in pay rates expressed in cash and real terms for the two periods is as follows:

	Percentage increase in cash pay (a)	Percentage increase in real pay (b)
Nurses, Midwives and Health visitors
1974-79	64·7	(−21·1)
1979-91	242·5	48·7
Hospital Doctors and Dentists
1974-79	88·3	(−9·9)
1979-1991	196·5	28·7

(a) Percentage cash increases reflect full year effect of increases agreed within the pay round year (August-July).
(b) Percentage real increases reflect percentage cash increases for the pay round year deflated by the increase in the Retail Prices Index throughout the pay round year.

Hospital Building Programme

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much the capital hospital building programme in Wales increased between 1974 and 1979 and between 1979 and the latest available date, in cash and in real terms.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information is not available centrally in the form requested due to the delegation to district health authorities of responsibility for most hospital building schemes since 1984. Overall capital expenditure on hospitals in Wales over the period in question was as follows:

Year	Capital Expenditure (cash) £ million	Increase £ million	Capital Expenditure (real terms)[1] £ million	Increase/ decrease £ million
1974-75	13·182	—	55·348	—
1979-80	21·777	8·595	43·619	(11·729)
1982-90[2]	70·462	48·685	70·462	27·843

Notes:
[1] 'real' in terms of 1989-90 prices.
[2] latest period for which detailed capital expenditure information is available.

My hon. Friend will note the dramatic difference between the cuts in real terms between 1974-1979 in hospital capital expenditure compared with the welcome increases between 1979/1989-90.

NHS Patients

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the increase in numbers of (a) in-patients, (b) out-patients and (c) day-patients treated by the national health service in Wales between 1974 to 1979 and 1979 to the latest available date.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information is given in the following table:

	Change 1974 to 1979		Change 1979 to 1990-91
	Number	Per cent.	Number	Per cent.
In-patients	20,722	+6·3	132,750	+38·0
New out-patients	15,293	−3·4	122,725	+28·6
Day cases	13,140	+72·8	72,603	+232·9

The increases in patients treated since 1979 are a tribute to the staff of the NHS and the Government who have provided record increases in resources for the service.

EC (Visits)

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list (i) the number of visits made by officials in his Department during the past month to destinations outside the United Kingdom but within the European Community on official business related to the European Community, (ii) the number of visits made by officials in his Department to Brussels within the past month on official business related to the European Community and (iii) the number of nights spent by officials in his Department over the past month away from the United Kingdom on official European Community business.

Mr. David Hunt: The information, which relates to the four-week period from 28 October 1991, is as follows:

	Number
(i)	9
(ii)	7
(iii)	11

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for himself, and for each of the Ministers at his Department, details of (a) the number of visits made in the past month to destinations outside the United Kingdom but within the European Community on official business related to the European Community, (b) the number of visits made to Brussels within the past month on official business related to the European Community and (c) the number of nights spent over the past month away from the United Kingdom on official European Community business.

Mr. David Hunt: The information, which relates to the four-week period from 28 October 1991, is as follows:

(a)	1
(b)	1
(c)	None

EC Meetings

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the EC Ministerial Council meetings at which his Department has or will be represented during November and December.

Mr. David Hunt: The Secretary of State for Wales was represented at the Agriculturel Council held on 18-19 November and will be represented at the forthcoming Agriculturel Council on 11-12 December.

Hearing Aids

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average waiting lists for hearing aids at the University Hospital of Wales, Cardiff, and at the Royal Gwent hospital, Newport.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information requested is not available centrally.

Statistical Publications

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many copies of each statistical publication produced by his Department during 1989, 1990 and to date in 1991 have been delivered to the Vote Office in the House of Commons.

Mr. David Hunt: Fifty copies of each statistical publication on an all-Wales basis are delivered to the Vote Office.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to make available to the Vote Office of the House of Commons additional copies of all his departmental statistical publications.

Mr. David Hunt: It is my Department's policy to make 50 copies of all statistical publications on an all-Wales basis available to the Vote Office. Additional copies are available on request.

Housing (Cardiganshire)

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many houses have been built in Cardiganshire during the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: A total of 176 houses and 37 flats were completed in Cardiganshire (Ceredigion district) from October 1990 to September 1991.

Independent Schools

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many children are being educated at independent schools in Wales; what the corresponding figures were for 1961, 1970 and 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The number of children at independent schools in January 1961, 1970, 1980 and 1991 was 15,438, 11,166, 12,703 and 12,144 respectively.

Youth Centres

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to assist the Urdd to set up another centre similar to the Llangrannog and Glan-Llyn centres; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I am happy to say that the Urdd has been successful with an application for grant from the European regional development fund. A grant of £33,992 has been approved towards accommodation and other facilities at Canolfan centre Ifan, near Crymmych, in Dyfed.

Fuel Poverty

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what studies he has made of the report on fuel poverty published on 15 November by Neighbourhood Energy Action, entitled "Ten Years Cold"; what is his assessment of the accuracy of its figures; how he intends to respond to its recommendations for action; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I shall be giving careful consideration to the reports recommendations.

Homelessness

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) homelessness inquiries, (b) homelessness cases and (c) accepted homelessness cases were referred to his office between January and June 1991, by district.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information requested is given in the following table. Numbers of inquiries relate to all contacts made with local authorities regarding homelessness, excluding telephone inquiries. Those inquiries which become substantive are referred to as presented cases.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many persons were involved in accepted homelessness cases (a) between January and June 1990, excluding any impact from the Towyn flood disaster and (b) between January and June 1991, by district.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information requested is given in the following table and excludes those persons made homeless as a result of the Towyn flood disaster.

Employment Initiatives

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 19 November, Official Report, column 115, to the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones), when he expects the number of 1991 school leavers in south Glamorgan still awaiting places on courses complying with the youth training guarantee to reach less than (a) 250, (b) 100 and (c) 50.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Training and enterprise councils (TECs) are under a clear contractual duty to ensure that every young person under 18 not in full-time education or in a job who is seeking entry to youth training should have the offer of a suitable training place. I expect the South Glamorgan TEC to make every effort to ensure that young people receive timely offers of training and I am satisfied that the TEC has sufficient resources to meet the guarantee.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 19 November, Official Report, column 115, to the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside, what number of (a) Easter and (b) summer school leavers in 1991 in south Glamorgan have been waiting more than (i) one month, (ii) three months and (iii) six months to commence placements or courses under the youth training guarantee.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not available.

National Health Service Staff Statistics

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the numbers of managerial and administrative staff in the health service in Wales in 1973; and what is the present number.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The available information relates to staff included in the administrative and clerical group for pay purposes. The whole-time equivalent number of such staff in 1973 and 1990 is given in the following table:

	Whole time equivalent[1]	Percentage of total National Health Service staff
1973	4,574	11
1990[2]	8,178	15

[1] At 30 September.
[2] Excludes staff in Dyfed FHSA, for which figures are not available.

The number of nursing and midwifery staff increased from 45 per cent. to 50 per cent. of the total national health service staff in the same period.

Ceredigion Unit

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy not to confirm the present acting head of the Ceredigion unit of the East Dyfed health authority in his post before the general election.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The appointment of a unit general manager is an operational issue for the East Dyfed health authority as employer.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of how the shadow trust board for the Ceredigion health unit was chosen; if he will list the members; and if he will give their appropriate qualifications.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: There is no such board.

Non-domestic Revaluation

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what will be the valuation date for the 1995 non-domestic rating revaluation of properties in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The next non-domestic property revaluation for Wales is due to come into force from 1 April 1995.

I propose that the antecedent date, that is the common valuation date, for the 1995 revaluation will be 1 April 1993 and I will be laying the necessary regulations in due course. My decision will provide certainty for businesses and will allow adequate time for the assessment work to be carried out.

Our success in bringing down the rate of inflation means that the proposed non-domestic rate poundage for Wales for 1992-93 of £0·425 increases by just over 4 per cent. compared with just under 11 per cent. between 1990-91 and 1991-92. The contribution to local government spending by rate payers will in total increase by 2·1 per cent.

I have also laid before the House a draft order under the transitional arrangements setting the level of reductions for 1992-93 for businesses that benefit from lower rates. The reductions are 9 per cent. for properties with a rateable value of over £10,000 and 14 per cent. for other properties. The transitional arrangements are self-financing and the reductions have been calculated to off set the cost of limiting the levels of increase for those whose rates are higher.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Income Support

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons aged 16 and 17 years respectively, for each month since October 1989, have made applications for income support on grounds of extreme hardship; how many have been (a) granted or (b) refused; what is the best estimate he has of the number of persons aged 16 and 17 years respectively in that period who had been granted income support on the grounds of being within an exempted category; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Social security operational matters are the responsibility of Mr. Alex Wylie, chief executive of the Social Security Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies of his reply will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Child Benefit

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons aged 16 and 17 years respectively were in receipt of extended child benefit; how many were in receipt of bridging allowance for each month since September 1989; how many young people exhausted their entitlement to either extended child benefit or the eight weeks bridging allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The number of young people in receipt of bridging allowance each month since September 1989 is given in the table.

Information showing the numbers of 16 and 17-year-olds who had exhausted their entitlement to bridging allowance in the 12-month period is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Child benefit, as with other social security matters, are the responsibility of Mr. Alex Wylie, chief executive of the Social Security Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies of his reply will be placed in the Library and Public Information Office.

Category A Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the number of category A prisoners in prisons in Northern Ireland on 1 November.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are no category A prisoners in Northern Ireland, where prisoners are classified as top, high, medium or low risk. High risk is broadly equivalent to the category A classification in England and Wales. The number of high-risk prisoners on 1 November is not available, but on 22 November there were 323 such prisoners.

Farm Woodland Scheme

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the new farm woodland scheme; and if he will state when the cash limit will be known.

Mr. Hanley: I welcome the new farm woodland premium scheme which will be operated in Northern Ireland under the same terms and conditions as for the rest of the United Kingdom.

Uptake under the existing scheme, introduced in 1988, has declined substantially and I trust that the new enhanced rates of premiums and the general front-loading of the new scheme will encourage Northern Ireland farmers to participate to a greater extent than they have in the past.

Cash limits will be known prior to the launch of the scheme on 1 April 1992.

EC (Visits)

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list for himself, and for each of the Ministers at his Department, details of (a) the number of visits made in the past month to destinations outside the United Kingdom but within the European Community on official business related to the European Community, (b) the number of visits made to Brussels within the past month on official business related to the European Community and (c) the number of nights spent over the past month away from the United Kingdom on official European Community business.

Mr. Brooke: I have not, nor has any of my ministerial colleagues, made any such visit.

Extradition

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has been given a definite time scale for the implementation of changes in the Republic of Ireland's Extradition Act 1987.

Dr. Mawhinney: I assume that the hon. Gentleman refers to the Irish Extradition (European Convention on the Suppression of Terrorism) Act 1987, rather than to the Extradition (Amendment) Act of the same year. The Irish Government have assured us that they will introduce amending legislation as soon as possible and that this is being dealt with as a matter of high priority.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applications to extradite for terrorist offences have been made to the Irish Republic since 15 November 1985; how many of these have been unsuccessful; and if he will list the cases and the basis on which application was made.

Dr Mawhinney: Since 15 November 1985, there have been 32 applications to the Irish Republic for the extradition of persons to Northern Ireland who were suspected of, or had been convicted for, terrorist offences. Applications in relation to five individuals were refused by the Irish courts; in other cases, warrants were returned or withdrawn for a variety of reasons, including three cases where the person sought was subsequently arrested in the United Kingdom. There are also some outstanding cases where the person has not yet been arrested. The successful cases are:

Person	Alleged Offence
Gerard M. Harte	(Possession of firearms/arson)
John M. Fletcher	(Theft of ammunition/ possession of firearms with intent)
Robert Russell	(Escape from Custody/ attempted murder)
Paule A Kane	(Escape from Custody)

In addition, orders for return are outstanding against:

Person	Offence
Robert Joseph Campbell	(Murder/Attempted Murder)
Paul Patrick Magee	(Murder/Attempted Murder)

However, these orders cannot be executed until the individuals concerned are located.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he intends to put specific proposals to the Irish Republic relating to that country's declared intention to amend its Extradition Act 1987.

Dr. Mawhinney: The precise terms of any new legislation to amend the Irish Extradition (European Convention on the Suppression of Terrorism) Act 1987 are a matter for the Government and Parliament of the Republic of Ireland. The United Kingdom Government have already made clear to the Irish Government the nature of their concerns about Irish extradition law.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applications for extradition in relation to terrorist offences in Northern Ireland are presently awaiting decision by the Irish Republic's courts.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will detail the assurances given to the Irish Republic by the United Kingdom Government in relation to changes in the United Kingdom extradition laws; and what agreement was reached on the issue with the Irish Republic Justice Minister at the meeting of the Anglo-Irish Conference on 19 November.

Dr. Mawhinney: The detail of discussions in the Anglo-Irish Conference is confidential, but my right hon. Friend has indicated that the question of setting the existing agreement on speciality in statutory form is primarily a matter for the Home Secretary and would be considered if and when a suitable legislative vehicle arose.

Horses and Ponies

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many horses and ponies are shipped into Northern Ireland each year from England and Wales.

Mr. Hanley: The figures given in the table are in respect of imports of horses and ponies from Great Britain; separate figures are not available for imports from England and Wales.

	Number
January to December 1988	1,125
January to December 1989	1,360
January to December 1990	1,870

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many horses and ponies are exported each year from Northern Ireland to the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: The numbers of horses and ponies exported from Northern Ireland to the Republic of Ireland in each of the years 1988 to 1990 were:

	Number
January to December 1988	790
January to December 1989	728
January to December 1990	834

PRIME MINISTER

Referendums

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the occasions since 1979 on which Government policy on the desirability of a referendum has been expressed by the Prime Minister in an official capacity; and on which subjects in each case.

The Prime Minister: In Parliament I have expressed Government policy on a referendum on the subject of European integration. In addition, my right hon. Friend the Member for Finchley (Mrs. Thatcher) has commented in Parliament on a referendum in relation to: closed shop; rate increases; capital punishment; restoring a Parliament and Government at Stormont; all national disputes affecting 1,000-plus workers; the future and land reform for the Falkland islanders; devolution in Scotland; and the community charge.

Data Information Systems

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister what data information systems Her Majesty's Government have (a) agreed and (b) been consulted about with a view to taking part in; what are the criteria for inclusion in such systems; whether they will be linked to the police national computer; what data protection provisions apply to them; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The development and installation of data information systems is the responsibility of Ministers in charge of individual Departments. Any linkage of data between information systems is subject to legislation or specific agreement between the Ministers concerned and to the provisions of the Data Protection Act.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 28 November.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today.

Non-ministerial Public Bodies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Prime Minister what guidelines govern the holding of office as chairman or vice-chairman of a non-ministerial public body and at the same time holding a similar role or office in any political party.

The Prime Minister: Members of public boards, including chairmen and vice-chairmen, should not serve as officers carrying out executive duties in any political party.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has received in favour of an animal protection commission to co-ordinate Government policy in respect of animal welfare and enforcement of laws against cruelty to animals; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Ministers have received a number of letters proposing the setting up of a small Government Department or commission with responsibility for all aspects of animal welfare.

I am satisfied that the Government's responsibilities for matters affecting animals, which involves a number of different Government Departments, is effectively carried out and that the laws relating to the welfare and protection of animals are enforced satisfactorily.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish tables showing both the latest available results from the employment training leaver survey and those for a year before in each TEC area in England and Wales and each LEC area in Scotland broken down to show the number and proportion of employment training leavers who were (a) in a full-time job with their work experience employer, (b) in a full-time job with another employer, (c) employed in their own business, (d) in a part-time job, (e) in voluntary work, (f) on another Government training programme, (g) on a full-time education or training course, (h) unemployed and claiming benefit, (i) unemployed and not claiming benefit, (j) in a job club and (k) doing something else.

Mr. Jackson: The information requested is provided in the following tables. The outcomes are those for people trained in the areas now covered by the TEC/LEC network and do not necessarily relate to the provision of individual TECs/LECs. Figures are not provided for some areas because the information is not considered to be reliable. Absolute numbers are not available because not all trainees respond to the follow-up questionnaire.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish tables showing both the latest available results from the ET leavers survey and those for a year before for each TEC area in England and Wales and each LEC area in Scotland broken down to show the number and proportion of employment training leavers who (a) had been entered for a vocational qualification, (b) obtained a vocational qualification, (c) had failed to obtain a vocational qualification and (d) were awaiting their results; and how many of the ET leavers in the relevant period had completed the training agreed in their initial action plan.

Mr. Jackson: The information requested is provided in the following tables. The results are those people trained in the areas now covered by the TEC/LEC network and do not necessarily relate to the provision of individual TECs/LECs. Figures are not provided for some areas because the information is not considered to be reliable. Absolute numbers are not available because not all trainees respond to the follow-up questionnaire.

EC Directives

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list those EC directives not yet adopted which have a major impact on employment terms and conditions; what assessment he has made of each; and if he will give details of the progress of each towards adoption.

Mr. Forth: Under the European Commission's social action programme the following directives directly concerned with terms and conditions of employment have been published but not yet adopted by the Council:

- Protection of Pregnant Women at Work Directive: the Social Affairs Council reached a political agreement on the text on 6 November 1991, with only Italy disagreeing with the substance of the proposal. The Council rejected the costly and damaging proposals for harmonising maternity pay and conditions put forward by the Commission. The Council's formal common position is due to be adopted at the Council on 3 December.
- Directive on the Posting of Workers (Subcontracted Workers): the Government will take a view on this directive following the results of a consultative exercise. The test which the Government will apply to the proposals will be whether they help or hinder free movement of labour and competition in the Community. The directive has not yet been discussed by the Council.
- Atypical Work Directives: these two directives were last discussed by the Council on 18 December 1990. The majority of member states indicated that they had grave difficulties with the proposals and could not support them. These directives would raise employment costs and thereby reduce employment opportunities to part-time workers. The estimated cost to the United Kingdom would be £1 billion. In addition the directives would affect the pay of 1·75 million workers by forcing them to make national insurance contributions for the first time.
- Working Time Directive: this directive will be discussed by the Council for the first time on 3 December. It continues to cause difficulties for many member states. Responses to the Government's consultation exercise made it clear that this proposal would be extremely damaging to the United Kingdom. It would impose on employers crippling annual costs of £5 billion under present conditions.

Woollen Textile Industry

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the notifications of redundancies which he has received, to the most recent practicable date, for 1991 in the west Yorkshire woollen textile industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Information regarding individual firms given to the Department under the redundancy handling provisions of the Employment Protection Act 1975 is given in confidence.

Youth Training

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what procedures are followed in order to monitor the implementation of his guarantee of an entitlement to a youth training place for those school leavers seeking a YT place; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Regional directors of the Employment Department maintain close contact with training and enterprise councils (TECs) to ensure that the business plan is fulfilled and the YT guarantee is met. They undertake detailed reviews either periodically or as need arises.

SCOTLAND

Specialist Education

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what inquiries he is conducting into the quantity and quality of specialist education for speech and language-disordered children; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: HM inspectorate of schools is currently examining the provision being made by education authorities for children with language and communication disorders, with the intention of describing and disseminating best practice and making recommendations about effective provision for children with these disorders.

I have also commissioned research by Stirling university into current policies and practices of education authorities for children with specific learning difficulties in Scotland and into the provision that is made for these children. This study will embrace children exhibiting dyslexia.

These projects are directed towards establishing the quality and quantity of educational provision made for children with speech and language disorders and with other special needs.

Health Statistics

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total operations figure for table 4.4. in "Scottish Health Statistics" updated for 1990-91.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The total number of operations performed for the year to 31 December 1990 was 517,534.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total national health service cost and hospital and community health services capital cost figures for table 10.1. in "Scottish Health Statistics" updated for 1990-91.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is given in the table:

Cost in Scotland
Total net National Health Service and hospital and community health services capital

	1990-91 £'000s
Total National Health Service (net)	2,982,854
Hospital and community health services capital	156,241

Category A Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of category A prisoners in prisons in Scotland on the 1 November.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Fifteen.

Young Prisoners

Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the number of young persons under 19 years of age in Scotland who are currently serving sentences, either at Her Majesty's pleasure or without limit of time; and if he will give details of the numbers and ages of those serving mandatory sentences and those serving discretionary sentences and the crimes for which they have received their sentences.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The total number is six. All were sentenced to be detained without limit of time. The details requested are as follows:

Mandatory sentence (section 205 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1975)

Age	Number	Offence
15	1	Murder
16	1	Murder
17	1	Murder
18	2	Murder
TOTAL	5

Discretionary sentence (section 206 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1975)

Age	Number	Offence
12	1	Culpable homicide

Horses and Ponies

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many horses and ponies are shipped each year from Scotland to (a) Northern Ireland and (b) the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A total of 1,857 horses and ponies were shipped from Scotland to Northern Ireland in 1990. No livestock is shipped direct from Scotland to the Republic of Ireland.

Organ Transplants

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people are awaiting an organ transplant; and if he will give the figure for 1990; and how long on average a patient must wait for a transplant of a kidney, heart and lungs, heart, lungs, liver and cornea.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 20 November 1991]: The information requested is not held by my Department. A transplant register is compiled by the United Kingdom transplant support service authority which is based in Bristol. However the register is not held in a form which would enable the information requested to be collated readily.

Schools Inspectorate

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to reorganise Her Majesty's inspectorate of schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 25 November 1991]: A number of changes to the organisation and operational procedures of Her Majesty's inspectorate will be made to meet the commitments of the parents charter and to take account of emerging developments in education, for example, in quality assurance at school and education authority level.

An audit unit will be established as a separate, identifiable division of Her Majesty's inspectorate. A principal function of the unit will be to collect, analyse and publish evidence about how well schools and education authorities are performing.

Inspection procedures are being reviewed and revised:

—to take account of the development of written educational plans and targets in schools, including reviews of progress against these;

—to introduce assessment of the efficacy of quality assurance arrangements in place in schools and education authorities;

—to allow targeting of inspections on the basis of evidence from the audit unit and other sources;

—to ensure that parents, through school boards, are adequately consulted in the course of inspections and that they receive clear summary inspection reports showing the strengths and weaknesses identified.

Inspection guidelines are also being reviewed to incorporate performance indicators which will shortly be published.

Training Schemes

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of the work force and those seeking work are involved in youth training and employment training schemes.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 27 November 1991]: The latest estimate of the total number on youth training and employment training in Scotland, as a percentage of the civilian work force and those seeking work, is 2·3 per cent.

DEFENCE

Solvent-based Paints

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action his Department is taking to bring specifications for new equipment into line with the Department of the Environment's policy of substituting other finishes for solvent-based paints.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment is issuing guidance on air pollution standards for coating processes which will be subject to pollution control under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. One of the options considered by the guidance will be to change to low-solvent coatings. My Department is investigating alternatives to solvent-based paints in its own particular circumstances.

Forces' Pensions

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he proposes to eliminate the effects of pension troughs in Her Majesty's forces services retired pay caused by pay restraint in the public sector in 1975-76; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The retired pay or pensions awarded to personnel of the armed forces whose service ended during the period of pay restraint from 1976 to 1978 were calculated in accordance with the rules of the armed forces pension scheme in force at that time. The Ministry of Defence has no plans to modify the awards that were made.

Oil and Gas (Clyde)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what representations his Department has made on the development of oil and gas resources in the Firth of Clyde;

(2) which areas, in and around the Firth of Clyde, have been ruled out of bounds to oil and gas exploration on account of military requirements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence is consulted by the Department of Energy about proposals for licensing oil and gas development and production but no such proposals relating to the Firth of Clyde have been received since 1985. On that occasion, my Department was content for exploration to proceed in a block to the south-west of Arran subject to a number of restrictions including that no activity should take place within an area bounded by the following co-ordinates:

55 20 N 5 28 W
55 25 N 5 28 W
55 25 N 5 22 W
55 20 N 5 22 W

In considering any further proposals my Department and the Department of Energy would seek to agree arrangements which would allow oil and gas activity to take place while safeguarding Ministry of Defence interests.

Services (Redundancies)

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many job losses and redundancies are planned in each of the armed services in each year to 1994 following "Options for Change"; how many applications for voluntary redundancy he has received from service personnel wanting to leave in the first phase of redundancies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: By 1995 we expect reductions of some 8,000 in the Royal Navy, 40,000 in the Army and 12,000 in the Royal Air Force. Details were given in the answer I gave the hon. Member for Clackmannan (Mr. O'Neill) on 21 November at columns 305-06.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what specific provision he is making to assist those members of Her Majesty's forces who will be made redundant as a result of "Options for Change" to find future employment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Resettlement services provided to assist service personnel to prepare for civilian life, including finding civilian employment, will be available to all those being made redundant. In addition to individual advice and counselling, these services include briefings on job finding and on a wide range of specific second careers; opportunities to undertake short familiarisation attachments with civilian organisations; 28 days pre-release vocational training in any of a large number of skills and disciplines which are useful in the civilian labour market; and assistance with job placement from our own employment unit, as well as from the Officers Association and the Regular Forces Employment Association, both of which receive financial support from the Ministry of Defence. We are making the necessary financial provision to cover the increase in demand for these services. Those leaving the regular forces also have access to Department of Employment services and facilities, including access to some programmes without the standard qualifying period of unemployment.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what financial advice and assistance he is giving to those members of Her Majesty's forces who will lose their jobs and receive redundancy payments as a consequence of "Options for Change"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The resettlement package includes the opportunity to attend one-day briefings specifically on financial aspects. These cover pay, pensions, insurance, investments and housing. Some additional briefings are being arranged to help meet the increased demand expected to arise from those being made redundant. In addition, in the Army further financial aspects briefings will be provided worldwide on a road-show basis, starting in March 1992. These will be specifically geared to the needs of those being made redundant, and all such personnel will be actively encouraged to attend.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much in cash and constant prices has been spent on the resettlement service in each year since 1987-88 in each of the armed forces; and how much is projected to be spent in the period up to 1994.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Information is not available in the form requested.

Human Rights

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, further to his oral answer of 19 November, Official Report, column 126, if he will make it his policy to take into account the human rights records of Governments when deciding to whom his Ministry will sell surplus aircraft.

Mr. Alan Clark: This has always been our policy.

Overseas Forces (Gifts)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is his policy towards gifts sent by members of the public to British forces while engaged in service overseas;

(2) how many sales there have been to civilians in the Falklands of the contents of gift parcels sent to British forces in the Gulf during Operation Granby; who took the decision to make such sales; what were the proceeds of such sales; and how were the proceeds applied.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The BFPO 3000 appeal produced a most generous response from the public. I announced the winding-up of the appeal on 28 March 1991 at columns 571-72, indicating that some residual items would be sent to service personnel in overseas locations other than the Gulf. Items were sent to the Falkland islands and were distributed to service personnel in the garrison. Some surplus remained. Rather than return or destroy them, the Department decided to sell them locally, raising over £2,000 for the Gulf trust.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many gift parcels were sent by members of the public to British forces serving in the Gulf during Operation Granby.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is estimated that up to 190,000 parcels were sent in response to the BFPO 3000 appeal.

Trident

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards the deployment of the United Kingdom's Trident nuclear missile with the same number of warheads as the present Polaris missiles.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Trident must be able to overcome defences that did not exist when Polaris entered service, and remain a credible deterrent well into the next century.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how much money would be saved on the contract on the fourth Trident submarine if it were cancelled on (a) 22 January 1992, (b) 22 February 1992, (c) 22 March 1992, (d) 22 April 1992, (e) 22 May 1992 or (f) 22 june 1992;

(2) how much money to date has been spent on the fourth Trident submarine; and how much will have been spent by (a) 22 January 1992, (b) 22 February 1992, (c) 22 March 1992, (d) 22 April 1992, (e) 22 May 1992, (f) 22 June 1992.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Expenditure to date on the fourth submarine is approximately £142 million. Future levels of expenditure are subject to considerations of commercial confidentiality. The level of savings which would be achieved if the contract were to be cancelled on any of the dates specified by the hon. Member would not differ significantly from the broad estimate of £400 million given to the House by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces on 22 November 1991 at column 600.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will announce a contract for the production of a fourth Trident submarine.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The order will be announced when negotiations with the contractor have been successfully concluded.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total estimated cost of the fourth Trident submarine.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The cost of the fourth Vanguard class submarine will not be known until negotiations with the contractor have been successfully concluded. It would not be appropriate to publish an estimated cost while those negotiations are in progress.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what provision is being made in the testing programme for Trident nuclear weapons to ensure that accidental detonation cannot take place to weapons in transit, storage or deployment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The safety of our nuclear weapons is paramount. Both the Trident missile and its warhead will undergo a comprehensive series of trials, assessments and formal safety approval procedures before entering service with the Royal Navy.

Polaris

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications for the effectiveness of the Polaris nuclear deterrent of the recently upgraded Soviet anti-ballistic missile system around Moscow.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The programme of improvements to the Soviet anit-ballistic missile system reinforces the need for Polaris to be replaced by Trident in the mid-1990s, to ensure that the British strategic nuclear deterrent remains credible well into the next century.

Nuclear Deterrent

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer, Official Report, 13 November, column 614, what are the implications of the negotiated deployment of strategic defences for the effectiveness of the United Kingdom's strategic nuclear deterrent.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: President Bush made it clear in his statement of 27 September that he is seeking the limited deployment of non-nuclear defences to protect against limited ballistic missile strikes without undermining the credibility of existing deterrent forces.

Missiles

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is his Department's assessment as to when the United States SLAT missile will come into operational service;

(2) what is his Department's assessment as to when the French ASLP missile will come into operational service.

Mr. Archie Hamiliton: This is a matter for the Governments concerned.

Warminster Infantry School

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to move the school of infantry from Warminster to Brecon; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The aim of restructuring the Army's training base is to make optimum use of existing sites by concentrating training at a smaller number of larger establishments. The locations for initial training in the Army remain under study and no final decisions have yet been taken.

Defence Programmes

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total estimated cost of (a) the GWS 26 MOD 1 Sea Wolf vertical launch missiles ship system, (b) the GWS MOD 2 lightweight Sea Wolf ship system, (c) the Spearfish torpedo programme, (d) the TRIGAT medium-range missile programme, (e) the Rapier field standard C programme and (f) the EH101 helicopter programme.

Mr. Alan Clark: Estimated total procurement costs, at 1990-91 average outturn prices, and not including in-service support costs, are as follows:

		£ million
(a)	GWS 26 Vertical Launch Sea Wolf missile system	1,160
(b)	Spearfish torpedo	1,300
(c)	TRIGAT Medium Range missile	920
(d)	Rapier Field Standard C	1,700
(e)	EH 101 ASW Helicopter	3,200

There are no present plans to procure lightweight Sea Wolf.

Infantry Regiment, Crickhowell

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for stationing an infantry regiment permanently at Cwrt Y Gollen camp, Crickhowell.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We are examining a number of options for the future accommodation of United Kingdom-based troops. Some accommodation will be required for units returning from abroad, but detailed decisions have yet to be made.

Nuclear Test Ban Treaty

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the policy of the British Government on the comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: NATO's new strategic concept confirms the need to maintain an appropriate mix of conventional and nuclear forces for the forseeable future. For as long as we need to retain nuclear weapons to deter war, we will need to conduct nuclear tests to ensure that our weapons are safe, reliable and up-to-date.

A comprehensive test ban treaty therefore remains a long-term goal. Progress towards it can be made only by a step-by-step approach, taking account of developments elsewhere, especially in arms control. Any treaty in this field will have to address the enormous verification problems. We are therefore taking a leading role in the conference on disarmament in Geneva, which is considering a verification regime covering nuclear tests.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of BSE have been confirmed in each calendar year from 1987 and to date for the current year.

Mr. Maclean: The number of confirmed cases in Great Britain, by the date of onset of clinical signs of the disease, is as follows:

Year	Number of confirmed cases
1987	460
1988	3,038
1989	7,614
1990	14,332
[1]1991	15,698

[1] Up to 15 November.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases in total of BSE have been confirmed to date in (a) Dyfed, (b) Wales and (c) Great Britain.

Mr. Maclean: The information is as follows:

	Number of confirmed cases[1]
Dyfed	1,834
Wales	3,290
Great Britain	41,142

[1] To 15 November 1991.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the Government's latest assessment as to when the incidence of BSE will reach its peak and by what date it will fade out.

Mr. Maclean: Because of the long incubation period of BSE it is impossible to predict accurately when we will see a decline in cases appearing. Nevertheless it is now over three years since the most likely source of infection was cut off by means of banning, from July 1988, the feeding of ruminant protein to cattle and other ruminants.

The number of cases arising from infection prior to that date will continue to increase for some time. We would expect however to see a decline in the number of confirmed cases some time next year, provided that other routes of transmission do not play a significant part in the epidemiology of the disease.

Badgers

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many applications for licences under section 4 of the Badgers Act 1991 he has received; how many such applications he has approved; what procedures he has laid down for dealing with such applications; what criteria he uses in determining such applications; and if he will make a statement on the operation of the Act.

Mr. Maclean: As at 23 November, the Department had received 23 applications for licences under section 4 of the Badgers Act 1991, and one licence has been granted. The Government are currently considering the criteria to be laid down for the granting of licences by the agriculture departments. Until these criteria have been decided licences are being issued only where there is a serious risk to public safety or to animal health.

Food Sabotage

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he plans to have with food manufacturers on the subject of food contamination or sabotage; and what measures he will take to combat this type of crime.

Mr. Maclean: We have already set up arrangements to ensure close contact with the food industry, other interested Government Departments, enforcement authorities and the police when incidents of this type occur. Our chief concern is possible risks to the public, and I am confident that food manufacturers and retailers are aware of the need to have well-prepared plans for co-ordinated action to minimise these. Guidance on drawing up such plans has recently been issued by the relevant trade associations. The question of crime is a matter for the police.

Beef

Mr. Litherland: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many tonnes of beef from intervention meat have been used in (a) schools and (b) hospitals in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years.

Mr. Curry: None.

Energy Technology

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether his Department was represented at the seminar on wind energy and agriculture held at the national agriculture centre on 20 November under the auspices of the energy technology support unit.

Mr. Curry: Yes.

Lindane

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the Advisory Committee on Pesticides' report on the use of lindane wood preservative will be published.

Mr. Maclean: Advice on lindane is expected from the Advisory Committee on Pesticides in the first part of 1992; the evaluation document will then be published.

"Our Farming Future"

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total cost of producing and distributing "Our Farming Future".

Mr. Curry: The cost of the design, production, printing, storage and distribution of "Our Farming Future" is estimated to have been £48,000.

EC Meetings

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the EC Ministerial Council meetings at which his Department has or will be represented during November and December.

Mr. Curry: This Department was represented at the Agriculture Council meeting on 18 and 19 November, and will be represented at the Agriculture Council on 11 and 12 December and the Fisheries Council on 17 and 18 December. An additional meeting of the Agriculture Council may be convened in December, but no date has yet been fixed.

EC (Visits)

Mr. Forman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list for himself, and for each of the Ministers at his Department, details of (a) the number of visits made in the past month to destinations outside the United Kingdom but within the European Community on official business related to the European Community, (b) the number of visits made to Brussels within the past month on official business related to the European Community and (c) the number of nights spent over the past month away from the United Kingdom on official European Community business;

(2) if he will list the number of visits made by officials in his Department during the past month to destinations outside the United Kingdom but within the European Community on official business related to the European Community, the number of visits made by officials in his Department to Brussels within the past month on official business related to the European Community and the number of nights spent by officials in his Department over the past month away from the United Kingdom official European Community business.

Mr. Curry: The total number of official visits from this Department to other EC countries on Community business in the month of October 1991 was 257, of which 214 were in Brussels. The total number of individual nights spent away at official expense to complete this business was 316. These figures include both Ministers and officials; I regret that they cannot be broken down further without incurring disproportionate expense.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Hague: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give details of expenditure in 1990-91 and 1991-92 by the Intervention Board executive agency and the Ministry of Agriculture on market regulation under the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Gummer: Details are given as follows of the outturn for 1990-91 and the latest forecast of outturn for 1991-92.

Some of this expenditure attracts contributions from the European Community. These are mainly received in the following year. In 1991-92, £81 million is expected to be received from the fund compared with £52 million in 1990-91.

Horses and Ponies

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the adequacy of welfare arrangements for horses and ponies shipped from the United Kingdom to the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Maclean: I am not aware of any particular problems associated with the welfare of horses and ponies shipped from the United Kingdom to the Republic of Ireland.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many horses and ponies are shipped each year to the Republic of Ireland from England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Figures for United Kingdom exports to the Republic of Ireland are given below. Separate totals for exports from England and Wales are not available.

1990

	Number	Value £
Horses and ponies	3,238	62,178,031

Suckler Cows

Sir John Farr: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps to ensure that British beef producers will benefit fully from the proposals of the Commission to make a further 20 ecu per head available to suckler cow producers in this marketing year.

Mr. Curry: The Council of Ministers has yet to take a decision on the Commission's proposal.

Farm Incomes

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food by what percentage farmers net returns have risen in the United Kingdom since 1980; what information he has on comparable returns in each of the other European Community countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The most recent assessment of aggregate total income from farming in the United Kingdom, in current prices, indicates an increase of around 55 per cent. between 1980 and 1990. When expressed in real terms and per annual work unit, this measure of income fell by a little over 5 per cent. between 1980 and 1990. This latter definition corresponds to an income indicator—"indicator 3"—published by Eurostat for the member states, changes in which are shown in the table. These include forecasts for 1990 made one year ago and are subject to revision.

TRANSPORT

Bus Companies

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will state the number of bus companies in the United Kingdom for each year since 1985 and the number of mergers and takeovers of bus companies for each year since 1985.

Mr. Freeman: The approximate numbers of bus and coach operators in Great Britain are given in the table. The Department of Transport does not collect this information for Northern Ireland.

	Number
March 1986	5,800
March 1987	5,900
March 1988	5,900
March 1989	6,000
March 1990	6,200
March 1991	6,400

These figures are based on the total number of PSV operators' licences issued by the traffic area offices. There is considerable uncertainty about the number of smaller operators because of the high rate at which such operators enter and leave the industry.

A comprehensive register of mergers and takeovers is not maintained by the Department. However, table 10.3 in the recently published transport statistics report "Bus and Coach Statistics Great Britain 1990/91" illustrates the increasing importance of consortia in the provision of local bus services.

Light Railways

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many light railways or tramways are now under construction or planned in the United Kingdom; and what funding and grants are available for constructing them.

Mr. Roger Freeman: Light railways are under construction in Manchester and Sheffield and some 40 other light rapid transit schemes have been proposed or are being considered. We are prepared to grant-aid worth while schemes under section 56 of the Transport Act 1968 subject to the availability of resources.

Community Transport

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met representatives of the Mobility Alliance to discuss the development of community transport projects.

Mr. Freeman: My Department works closely with the Mobility Alliance on all aspects of community transport operations.

In addition, we fund the Community Transport Association's information and advice service which provides valuable advice to many community transport groups around the country.

Northern Line

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what investment proposals London Regional Transport has for improving the Northern line.

Mr. Freeman: I understand that improvements to stations at the southern end of the Northern line costing around £45 million are likely to be in London Underground's investment programme over the next three years, as are major track and structural renewals throughout the system, amounting to some £55 million. During 1992-93, London Underground intends to spend around £10 million on escalator refurbishments, including those at Clapham North, Clapham South, Tooting Broadway and Tooting Bec. The modernisation of the Northern line remains London Underground's next major line improvement priority after the Central line scheme is completed in 1995.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Commission

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish the terms of reference for the Local Government Commission.

Mr. Portillo: Clause 13 of the Local Government Bill provides for the Local Government Commission to recommend the structural, boundary or electoral changes which appear to it desirable, having regard to the need to reflect the identities and interests of local communities and to secure effective and convenient local government.

A paper on the Government's draft guidance to the Local Government Commission for England was issued for consultation on 25 November. Copies were sent to the local authority associations and other interested organisations and placed in the Library.

European Charter

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to ratify the European charter for local government.

Mr. Portillo: The Government do not intend to sign the European charter of local self-government. Local government is not a suitable subject for regulation by an international convention.

Estate Action, Hackney

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what bids he has received from the London borough of Hackney for the estate action programme 1992-93; what estates were covered by the bid and at what cost to each; and what order of priority was identified by Hackney council in the bid.

Mr. Yeo: Hackney has set its estate action bids for 1992-93 in the context of the strategy of its comprehensive estates initiative, which covers five of its worst large panel system-built estates.

The 1992-93 bids are for three of those estates, as follows:

Clapton Park	2,750,000
Trowbridge	4,427,000
New Kingshold	600,000

The bids are not individually prioritised. They will be considered in competition with other bids made to my Department by other authorities and, if they progress, they will do so subject to progress being achieved on a number of factors which are set out in the estate action guidelines. Regard will also be had to the progress of the wider comprehensive estates initiative, which is the subject of continuing discussions between my Department and the council.

Underwater Archaeological Sites

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress his Department is making with the management of underwater archaeological sites since taking over responsibility for administering the relevant sections of the Merchant Shipping Act 1894.

Mr. Yeo: The Merchant Shipping Act 1894 remains the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Transport, but in April this year my Department took over responsibility for the operation of the Protection of Wrecks Act 1973 in English waters.

Since then we have taken a number of steps to ensure that important underwater archaeological sites are adequately protected.

In May we moved quickly to protect a site in the Erme estuary, south Devon and have licensed archaeological work on that and a further eight protected sites this season.

Since the majority of protected sites were discovered by amateur divers, it is important that they should understand the basics of archaeology and to that end we have granted the Nautical Archaeology Society almost £30,000 in 1991-92, with similar levels likely in the following two years, to expand its training and education programme.

Protection can be effective only for known sites. We have therefore expanded the programme of our contractors, the archeological diving unit of St. Andrews university, to examine further sites which might merit protection and increased the resources of the Royal Commission on the Historical Monuments of England for the preparation of a central record of historic wrecks, as proposed in the environment White Paper "This Common Inheritance".

My Department has also been working in conjunction with the joint nautical archaeology policy committee on an explanatory note for divers to remove misconceptions about the operations of the legislation affecting wrecks and a draft code of practice for seabed developers whose operations might affect archaeological sites.

Elm Energy and Recycling Project

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the eligibility of the Elm energy and recycling project, Wolverhampton for a city grant; when he expects a final decision on the project's eligibility to be made; what procedures have been used in assessing the project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: No formal application for city grant has been made to the Department. Representatives of the firm will be meeting my officials to discuss their proposals next week. Following that meeting the Department will be able to advise Elm Energy on whether an application for city grant is likely to be successful.

Drought Orders

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many drought orders his Department has granted in each year since records began.

Mr. [illegible]dry: Since 1976, when the Drought Act 1976 brought in the present drought order powers, the Secretary of State for the Environment has made the following numbers of drought orders:

	Number
1976	116
1977	nil
1978	17
1979	nil
1980	2
1981	nil
1982	13
1983	5
1984	82
1985	nil
1986	nil
1987	nil
1988	1
1989	74
1990	65
[1]1991	28

[1]To date.

This table corrects a misprint in my answer to the hon. Member of 7 November 1991, Official Report, Vol. 198, column 1. The number of drought orders made by the Secretary of State in 1984 was 82, not 92 as shown in that answer.

Declaration of Financial Interests

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to make new regulations about declaration of financial interests by councillors and senior officials of local authorities; and when such regulations will come into operation.

Mr. Key: Regulations will be made and will come into operation as soon as possible; they will not concern officials' financial interests.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the 1989-90 rates bill and his estimate of the 1991-92 council tax bill for a couple and two 1991-92 community charges for a two bedroom flat in a council tower block and a two-bedroom turn-of-century terraced house in (a) Barnet, (b) Brent, (c) Croydon, (d) Hackney, (e) Harrow, (f) Havering, (g) Kensington and Chelsea, (h) Lewisham, (i) Southwark and (j) Waltham Forest.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 26 November 1991]: The information requested is not available.

Housing Expenditure

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of gross national product is accounted for by public spending on housing.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 28 November 1991]: The latest available outturn figure for gross expenditure on housing in Great Britain, including spending from receipts and on housing benefits, relates to 1989-90 when it accounted for 2·2 per cent. of gross domestic product.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Intergovernmental Meetings

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out to date the conclusions and agreements he has reached in the Trevi series of intergovernmental meetings.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Ministers of Interior/Justice of the member states of the European Community are scheduled to meet on 2 and 3 December. At the present time, therefore, no conclusions have been reached or agreements made following the intergovernmental meetings which have taken place during the Dutch presidency.

Brixton Prison

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when he was informed of the recent Staffordshire police operation in Brixton gaol;

(2) if the involvement of Staffordshire police inside Brixton prison was made known to Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons when preparing his report.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The allegations on which the questions appear to be based fall to be considered by Mr. Colin Bailey, whose appointment was announced by the chief constable of Staffordshire on 20 November. As I made clear in my reply to the hon. Member on 21 November at column 265, information relating to the prisoners' intention to escape was not reported to Ministers until after the escape. It was made available to prison service headquarters and to the governor of HM prison Brixton in February 1991 and to HM chief inspector of prisons in the context of his inquiry into the escape.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will investigate the alleged break-in to Brixton prison three days prior to the escape of two suspected IRA terrorists.

Mrs. Rumbold: The allegations have been looked into. There is no evidence to substantiate them.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what facilities exist in Brixton prison to screen incoming packages.

Mrs. Rumbold: Primarily x-ray facilities and metal detectors.

Wandsworth Prison

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 22 November, Official Report, column 330, if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the reason for the presence of 24 police officers in the vicinity of Wandsworth prison on 7 July 1991.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 7 July 1991 the governor at Wandsworth received information that an escape attempt might be made from the prison. In accordance with standard procedures, the governor informed the Metropolitan police. A decision was made by the police to attend.

Young Offenders

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many young offenders were transferred from Hewell Grange to the young offender institution at Finnamore Wood camp during September 1991.

Mrs. Rumbold: Twenty-one.

Winchester Magistrates Court

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if, when considering whether to approve the closure of the magistrates court in Winchester, he will take into account the extra transport costs which such closure would impose on the inhabitants of Winchester;

(2) what information he has on the specific information, including details of the accountancy formula used, on which Hampshire magistrates court committee has based its proposed decision to close Winchester magistrates court.

Mr. John Patten: These questions do not arise because I understand that the Hampshire magistrates courts committee has as yet taken no decision about the Winchester courthouse. The Home Secretary's approval for the closure of any magistrates courthouse is required only if there is an appeal to him by the paying local authority concerned under section 56 of the Justices of the Peace Act 1979 against a courts committee's decision to close it. If there were to be an appeal in the case of Winchester full account would be taken of all the relevant arguments including the circumstances of court users.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to his letter of 22 October to the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State regarding an application by a citizen of Sudan.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A reply was sent to the hon. Member on 27 November.

Criminal Intelligence Service

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes are proposed to the executive powers of the executive co-ordinator of the regional crime squads; and whether the executive co-ordinator is to be given overall control of the regional criminal intelligence offices and the technical support units.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: When the new national criminal intelligence service is established in 1992, the executive co-ordinator of the regional crime squads will become one of its two deputy directors. There will be no change to the existing situation in which the executive co-ordinator has no executive authority in relation to either the regional criminal intelligence offices or the technical support units.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will (a) list the titles of the branches and squads for the Metropolitan police specialist operations department, and (b) state how the creation of the national criminal intelligence service will affect these units.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is as follows:

SO1 International and Organised Crime Branch
- 1 Squad. Major investigation pool
- 2 Squad. National office for the suppression of counterfeit currency
- 3 Squad. Extradition, passport and illegal immigration-deportation
- 5 Squad. Central cheque squad
- 6 Squad. Stolen motor vehicle investigation squad

SO2 Crime support branch
SO3 Scenes of crime branch
SO4 National identification bureau
SO5 Miscellaneous force indexes
SO6 Metropolitan and City police company fraud squad
SO7 Metropolitan police forensic science laboratory
SO8 Serious crime branch (flying squad)
SO9 Regional crime squad
SO10 [1]Crime operations group
SO11 [1]Metropolitan police criminal intelligence branch
SO12 Special branch
SO13 Anti-terrorist branch
SO14 Royalty protection branch
SO15 Royal palaces division
SO16 Diplomatic protection group
SO17 PNC bureau
SO18 Palace of Westminster

[1] It is presently intended that parts of these units will become part of the national criminal intelligence service.

[2] The commercial criminal intelligence bureau (presently part of SO6) will become part of the national criminal intelligence service.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the transitional and full "cut over" date for users of the integrated national criminal intelligence system;

(2) which existing databases will form the basis for the integrated national criminal intelligence system;

(3) if he will list the location of all the regional criminal intelligence offices; and indicate which offices (a) are fully computerised, (b) have an interfacing capacity with national intelligence units and (c) have been earmarked for closure in the proposed reorganisation of the national intelligence gathering system;

(4) if he will detail which, if any, national intelligence units are using new computing facilities provided as part of the integrated national criminal intelligence system.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are currently nine regional criminal intelligence offices, none of which is fully computerised and all of which interface with the police national computer. Their locations are:

Regional criminal intelligence offices	Location
1	Manchester
2[1]	Durham
3	Wakefield
4	Birmingham
5, 6 and 9	London
7	Bristol
8[1]	Cardiff

[1] Earmarked for closure on 31 March 1992.

A computer system is being developed to support the new national criminal intelligence service and it is intended that the system will be introduced in 1994. It will incorporate selected data from the national drugs intelligence unit database and will replace the crime pattern analysis facility presently provided by the police national computer.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if there are any plans to create a DNA database as part of the national criminal intelligence system or on the new PNC 2 computer.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are no such plans. The question of establishing a DNA database has been put to the Royal Commission on Criminal Justice.

Metropolitan Police Computer

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details not involving national security of the Metropolitan police C department computer, including (a) a description of the indexes held and number of entries, (b) the number of terminals attached to the system, and (c) the number of officers qualified to use the system.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Commissioner that C Department of the Metropolitan police ceased to exist with the reorganisation of the service in 1987.

Following reorganisation, a number of C department branches amalgamated with other branches to form specialist operations department.

There are 123 separate computer systems in specialist operations department. Information regarding the indexes held, the number of entries, the number of terminals attached to the systems and the number of officers authorised to use them is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will give brief details of the computer systems in use and those planned for the Metropolitan police force;

(2) if he will give details of the new computer facilities that are planned for all users of the Metropolitan police specialist operations department computer.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Commissioner that the Metropolitan police service uses computer systems for criminal intelligence, financial management, equipment management, word processing, desk top publishing, computer-aided dispatch messages, and management and personnel information. In addition, the service uses the PNC and HOLMES systems.

There are plans to bring into operation within the next few years a crime report and information system (CRIS), a computer-based accounting system (FINESSE) and a system for the police estate (PREMSYS).

Police National Computer

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will detail which indexes have migrated from the police national computer on to the new facilities of PNC 2, and if he will list, and give the projected size of, the indexes planned for PNC 2.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The following information is now on PNC2:

Criminal names
Fingerprints
Wanted and missing persons
Disqualified drivers
Convictions
Cross references
Vehicle owners
Vehicle reports
Stolen property
Police directories

Further applications are being planned for PNC2 including a national criminal records system and a national criminal intelligence system. The sizes of the databases for these applications have not yet been decided.

Winson Green Prison

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he received a complaints form from Mr. Terry Foster of Winson Green prison; and on what date an official acknowledgement was sent in reply.

Mrs. Rumbold: Mr. Foster submitted a request/complaint to the governor of Birmingham prison on 30 October. On the following day a member of staff explained matters to Mr. Foster orally and on 4 November he was sent an acknowledgement. A written reply was given on 20 November.

Citizenship Applications

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what were the ages of people applying for citizenship, in each of the last five years, who were born in the United Kingdom but not registered at the time;

(2) how many applications he has received in each of the last five years for citizenship from people born in the United Kingdom whose birth was not registered at the time.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: This information is not available. Registration of a person's birth is not directly relevant to their entitlement to British citizenship.

Regional Crime Squads

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the establishment and present strength of each regional crime squad in England and Wales; and whether any decision has been made on the proposals of the executive co-ordinator of regional crime squads for their restructuring made in his report of January 1990;

(2) if the Metropolitan police's squads for serious crime are to be integrated into the south-east England regional crime squad.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is as follows:

	Establishment	Present strength
No. 1 RCS	239	233
No. 2 RCS	102	102
No. 3 RCS	172	167
No. 4 RCS	181	176
No. 5 RCS	148	148
No. 6 RCS	128	127
No. 7 RCS	117	115
No. 8 RCS	59	59
No. 9 RCS	238	238

The proposals of the executive co-ordinator to restructure the regional crime squads are being considered in consultation with the police authorities. No decision has yet been reached on the geographical boundaries of the proposed new squads or on what functions might be integrated in a south-east England regional crime squad.

Machine-readable Passport

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to introduce a new machine-readable jumbo passport.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I am pleased to announce that the computerisation of the Passport Agency's regional offices is now complete. We are therefore introducing a new machine-readable jumbo passport, for use by frequent travellers. The Privy Council has approved an Order in Council, the Consular Fees (Amendment) (No. 3) Order 1991, which gives authority for the issue of a machine-readable 48-page jumbo passport at a fee of £22·50, compared with a fee of £15 for a standard 32-page passport. The order will come into effect on 2 December, and the Passport Agency will begin to issue the new passport once stocks of the old blue jumbo passports are exhausted.

Staffordshire Police

Mr. Leadbitter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Staffordshire on how many police officers in his force have been removed from normal duties in the past two years and the reasons for such removals.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We understand from the chief constable that two police officers were required to resign in 1989 for criminal conduct and neglect of duty and one in 1990 for neglect of duty. We understand that a further nine officers in 1989 and eight in 1990 were charged with offences against the discipline code. The chief constable does not publicly discuss the offences with which the individual officers were charged.

Dangerous Dogs

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he has put in place to keep under review the breeds of dog on which he might wish to exercise his powers under section 2 of the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991.

Mrs. Rumbold: Home Office officials closely monitor the nature and circumstances of dog attacks brought to their attention by a variety of means. My right hon. Friend and I receive regular reports from them both about specific incidents and more generally about the operation of the existing measures to deal with dangerous dogs.

Directorate of Telecommunications

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will privatise the office of the directorate of telecomunications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Government's objective is to achieve better quality and value for money in the delivery of Government services by introducing competition. In line with this objective, the directorate now charges police forces and others for its services in direct competition with the private sector. DTELS, as it is now called, is also implementing a programme of extensive management change aimed at producing a viable commercial operation. Its position in the public sector will then be reviewed.

Small Shops

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures Her Majesty's Government are taking to ensure that in any reform of the Shops Act 1950, the position of small shops is protected.

Mrs. Rumbold: As I indicated in my reply on 26 November to an earlier question from my hon. Friend at columns 446-47, proposals that small shops should be allowed legally to trade longer into the evenings, and in the full range of their goods on Sundays, are being taken fully into account in our consideration of the reform of the Shops Act.

Recording of Information

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will instigate a system of reporting and recording information from the health services, coroners' courts, and the police on the scale of fatalities among the homeless and itinerants.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: No.

Sunday Trading

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultations he has had with Outlets Providing for Everyday Needs about the small shops' campaign for Sunday trading.

Mrs. Rumbold: I met representatives of OPEN on 30 May, in my programme of discussions with a wide range of interest groups on possible ways of reforming the law on Sunday trading in England and Wales; and on 7 August, when at their invitation I visited a typical small convenience store. OPEN have since corresponded with me about their proposals for reform.

Motorcycle Equipment

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will investigate proposed competition with private sector manufacturers on the production of sonic motorcycle repeater equipment by the directorate of telecommunications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The provision of equipment for police forces is the responsibility of police authorities. Versions of the motorcycle repeater unit, which is available from DTELS, have been in use by forces for some years. It is for police authorities, advised by chief constables, to decide whether to purchase these or any other units.

Charities Bill

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding the Charities Bill [Lords].

Mr. John Patten: Since publication of the Bill we have received one letter from an hon. Member forwarding correspondence from his constituent; about 10 from Peers; and a dozen letters from charities and professional bodies. The majority of correspondents have expressed general support for the aims of the Bill.

Life Sentences

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the number of life-sentenced prisoners, excluding terrorist cases, held in British prisons for each year since 1979.

Mrs. Rumbold: Information on offences committed by terrorists is recorded centrally only for prisoners sentenced to life for homicide. The readily available information is given in the table.

PRIME MINISTER

Classless Society

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list those measures brought in since December 1990 which are aimed at bringing about a classless society.

The Prime Minister: Government policies are designed to improve society by the removal of barriers to choice and by the provision of opportunity.

A key element in our approach is the citizens charter, which is intended to ensure that everyone, whoever and wherever they are, will have access to the same high-quality public services. This approach is reflected in our legislative programme and other measures that we are taking.

Our education policies will raise standards and improve parental choice. We have introduced legislation to provide parents with more information about the performance of schools; to improve school inspection; to widen access to an expanded higher education system; to abolish the distinction between universities and polytechnics; and to raise the status of vocational education and of further education colleges.

Our health policies are designed to achieve a more efficient health service with higher quality of health care for all, underpinned by a new approach of setting targets for the improvement of health in key areas, as proposed in the recent consultative document "The Health of the Nation" and its Scottish and Welsh equivalents. Legislation has been introduced this Session aimed at improving the standards of local government services with increased powers for local authority auditors and provision to extend competition to a wider range of services.

In the housing field we have introduced pilot rent-to-mortgage schemes to extend tenants' present opportunities to buy their own homes. We are preparing a revised tenants charter for local authority tenants and a new right to repair. We have brought in new arrangements to ensure that tenants are actively consulted in local authorities' housing plans.

We are providing more effective training opportunities and better help for the unemployed in obtaining new jobs. Our policies continue to provide strong support for people in the inner cities, and the new initiative of city challenge announced earlier this year gives the whole community an opportunity to bring imaginative and innovative approaches to regenerating their cities.

We attach particular significance to support for families through the provision of increased child benefit, and the establishment of the Child Support Agency, for which legislation was introduced and enacted earlier this year, to improve the enforcement and collection of child maintenance. We are continuing to improve the opportunities for disabled people to play an independent part in society. This year we enacted legislation to introduce two new social security benefits for disabled people.

We have taken steps, through support of Opportunity 2000 and in other ways, to increase opportunities for women and people from the ethnic minorities to play their full part in public and national life.

These policies, and many others, will contribute to the development of a society with fewer divisions, in which talent and initiatives are rewarded.

Members' Letters

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Prime Minister what is his normal practice for dealing with mail addressed to him by right hon. and hon. Members; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I receive an enormous number of letters every week—currently some 5,000—from Members of Parliament and others. It is not possible for me to deal with all these letters personally and I must accordingly refer most of them to the Minister and the Department with the responsibility for the policy in question.

HEALTH

Community Health Councils

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will amend his Department's guidance to health authorities on appointment to community health councils to remove the advice that appointing bodies should not appoint people over the age of 70 years without special reasons.

Mr. Dorrell: We have no plans to amend the Department's advice on the eligibility and criteria for appointment to community health councils.

Salmonella

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the dangers to public health in the United Kingdom from the sale of creamed coconut contaminated with salmonella.

Mr. Dorrell: Properly produced creamed coconut poses no danger to public health in the United Kingdom. However, there have been a small number of instances recently where either the raw dessicated coconut or the processed product itself has been shown on routine testing to be contaminated with salmonella organisms. The Department has been actively involved in ensuring affected products have been withdrawn from the food chain. No cases of human illness associated with consumption of creamed coconut have been identified.

Manufacturers of this product should purchase raw materials only from reliable sources and take the necessary precautions in accordance with good manufacturing practice.

Dental Statistics

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a table showing both the number and the percentage of the potential population of children registered as national health service patients with dentists in each family health service authority.

Mr. Waldegrave: The information is shown in the table. Since the new dental contract was introduced in October last year, almost 6 million children in England have been registered with a dentist.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Aid and Trade Provision

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to which United Kingdom companies money under the aid and trade provision has already been allocated in the current financial year.

Mrs. Chalker: Aid agreements involving aid and trade provision funds have been concluded with Governments of developing countries in the current financial year for projects for which the following companies are lead United Kingdom contractors.

Country	Project	Lead United Kingdom company
China	Cotton mill machinery	Platt Saco Lowell

Turkey	Equipment for Turkish state Universities	Tecquipment

UN Aid Target

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the United Kingdom accepted the United Nations official aid target; and when the Government expect to meet that target.

Mrs. Chalker: We accepted the 0·7 per cent. target in principle in 1974. Successive Governments have declined to set down a timetable for meeting the target. The levels of aid depend upon our economic circumstances and on other calls on public resources. The aid programme has grown by 10 per cent. in real terms since 1987-88 and is planned to continue to do so. It is of high quality, well targeted and effective.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Environment Minister

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what achievements his Department has recorded in the environmental field since the appointment of a Minister with special responsibility for the environment was nominated for the social security team; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department is committed to making the fullest possible contribution to achieving the aims of the Environment White Paper "This Common Inheritance".

My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State was appointed the Department's environmental Minister in September 1990 and has established an environment steering group within the Department to undertake a comprehensive review of the environmental implications of all areas of departmental business and administration. This steering group is now being taken forward by the Benefits Agency.

The Department is participating in the Government's campaign to reduce its energy consumption by 15 per cent. by April 1996. Additional staff have been appointed and trained to offer specialist advice on energy savings and over £0·5 million has been made available for investing in energy efficient measures. This has enabled offices to introduce water saving devices, high-frequency, low-energy fluorescent lighting and more effective lighting controls.

To raise energy awareness issues among departmental staff, the April 1991 edition of the staff magazine featured a centre page spread on the environment. A further article covering environmental issues will appear in the February 1992 edition of the DSS quarterly journal.

Since January 1991 officially acquired vehicles have either been propelled by diesel fuel or petrol engines with catalytic converters fitted. The number of vehicles operating on leaded fuel has been reduced to 4·8 per cent. of the fleet and replacement policy aims to reduce this figure to zero by mid-1992.

In March an "unleaded petrol" only card was introduced for the purchases of fuel for appropriate cars.

Families (Income Levels)

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will update to 1988 his reply to the right hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham, Official Report, 1 February 1990, column 348-50, showing the numbers of working and out-of-work families with children at different levels of income, according to the family size, distinguishing between one-parent and two-parent families and between one-earner and two-earner families; and showing the benefits on which the out-of-work families depended.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is set out in the following tables.

These tables should be used only as free-standing income analyses and not for any time series or trend analyses.

Some of the sample sizes in the tables are too small to be statistically reliable and robust conclusions cannot be drawn.

Residential Care Homes

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each local authority the number of residents (a) in part III homes and (b) transferred from local authority homes to trust status homes and therefore in receipt of income support.

Miss Widdecombe: Information on the number of residents in part III homes (for England only) by local authority is contained in "Residential Accommodation for Elderly and Younger Physically Handicapped People: Local Authority Supported Residents Year Ending 31 March 1990 England" (RA/90/1), a copy of which is available in the Library. Information on the number of residents affected by the transfer of local authority part III homes to the private or voluntary sector is not collected centrally. Entitlement to income support for residents of such homes is a matter for the local adjudication officer, but since 12 August 1991 has been restricted to the part III rate for those people resident at the time of transfer.

State Pensions

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received from (a) the Scottish Old-Age Pensioners Association or (b) community organisations about the level of state pensions; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: A letter has been received from the Scottish Old-Age Pensioners Association which covered all aspects of provision for elderly people. We have also received a number of representations from community organisations.

Social Fund

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many social fund inspectors were employed on 1 July;

(2) how many applications for review by a social fund inspector were outstanding for more than one month on 31 July.

Mr. Scott: I am informed by the Social Fund Commissioner that on 31 July 1991 there were 54 social fund inspectors employed and 1,941 review applications outstanding for more than one month.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received from (a) the Scottish Old-Age Pensioners Association or (b) community organisations about cold weather payments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: On 29 October I wrote to the right hon. and learned Member for Monklands, East (Mr. Smith) about representations from the Airdrie branch of the Scottish Old-Age Pensioners Association. Other organisations have also made representations on this subject.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Further Education Costs

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the total administration costs attributable to local education authority further education and adult education management for each local authority in England and Wales.

Mr. Eggar: In 1989-90, the latest year for which information on actual spending is available, the net recurrent expenditure on overall administration of education by each local education authority in England was as shown in the following table. Information on authorities' administration spending on further education and adult education is not collected centrally. Matters of education in Wales are the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Wales.

Notes to table:

(1) Net recurrent expenditure on education administration, both by education departments and recharged from central departments, shown by local authorities in their spending returns to the Department of the Environment. Net recurrent expenditure includes all expenditure other than capital financing costs, less income other than from specific Government grants.

(2) n/a indicates that a spending return is not available.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of the standard spending assessment in each of the metropolitan district councils is attributable to adult education; and how much is spent in cash terms.

Mr. Eggar: It is not possible to identify what proportion of standard spending assessments is attributable to further education for adults. Nor do LEAs' routine expenditure returns separately identify their spending on this.

School Buildings and Repairs

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table showing for each local education authority in England (a) its authorised capital guideline and (b) its actual capital expenditure, in respect of school buildings and repairs, with totals for England, for 1987-88 to 1990-91, and with an estimate for 1991-92.

Mr. Eggar: The information readily available is shown in the table:

Notes:

1. Expenditure is given in cash terms, rounded to the nearest £1,000; it includes provision from within the Department of the Environment's urban programme, and covers nursery, primary, secondary and special education.
2. Outturn information for 1990-91 and forecast outturn for 1991-92 is not available.
3. Expenditure column totals are not necessarily the same as grossed outturn totals.
4. The allocation figures for all years represent the initial allocations only. However, supplementary allocations were also given as follows:

£000s

1987-88	1988-89	1989-90
9,350	17,700	10,689

The above figures include supplementary allocations to both schools and FE. Most of the allocations would have been in respect of schools work but it is not possible to separately identify the schools figure for each LEA.

1990-91	1991-92
£24,097	£10,000

From 1 April 1990 there was a change in the system of the distribution of capital resources for education buildings. LEAs now receive annual capital guidelines. The above figures represent the schools component only of supplementary credit approvals issued after the ACG announcement in December.

Music Tuition

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many local education authorities make charges for the provision of tuition in musical instruments to school children.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is not available. The Department does not keep records of which local education authorities make charges to parents for children's individual tuition on musical instruments.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students with SEN in each local education authority are pursuing local education authority-funded further education training courses in specialist colleges; and what was the total number of students with SEN aged 18 years or older receiving local education authority assistance to follow further education/training courses in specialist colleges.

Mr. Eggar: Information on local education authorities' use of the specialist colleges is not collected centrally.

School Meals

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on proposals by the London borough of Camden to end the supply of all school meals.

Mr. Fallon: The London borough of Camden may not end the supply of all school meals. The borough has a statutory duty to continue to provide free school meals to children whose parents are in receipt of income support or who themselves receive income support.

Schools Budget

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will tabulate for each local education authority the amount of money retained by the central administration that could have been delegated in the potential schools budget to meet the 85 per cent. requirement; and whether he will estimate how much this would have been for each primary and secondary school in each local education authority.

Mr. Fallon: The information requested is given in the following table.

Notes:
1. The local education authorities (LEAs) listed are the 56 which are currently delegating less than 85 per cent. of their potential schools budget (PSB).
2. A new requirement from April 1993 is that the proportion of the PSB delegated to schools should be a minimum of 85 per cent. Column 2 gives the amount extra which would have been delegated this year if the LEA had reached the 85 per cent. minimum.
3. Column 3 gives the amount in column 2 expressed as an average amount per school for each LEA, rounded to the nearest £100.

DEFENCE

SSN Submarine

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will place an order for the SSN-20 submarine.

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends to place a contract for the studies into the design of a new SSN to replace the Swiftsure class.

Mr. Alan Clark: As I told the House on 15 October at column 173, we are evaluating designs for a further class of nuclear-powered fleet submarines based on the existing Trafalgar class. A design study contract has been placed with Vickers Shipbuilding and Engineering Ltd. today. If the studies are successful, an order for the design and build of the first of class submarine could be placed in the mid-1990s.

Trident

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any further scientific assessments will be carried out in order to ascertain or improve the safety of British Trident warheads; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The British Trident nuclear warhead has been subject to stringent safety scrutiny throughout its design process; this scrutiny will continue during production and deployment.

Ex-Service Personnel

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people have left each of the armed services in each year since 1987; how many of them have been entitled to assistance with resettlement; and what information he has on the employment experiences of ex-members of Her Majesty's forces after they leave the service.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Lady to table 4.17 of the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1991.

Eligibility for resettlement training is determined primarily by length of service and the circumstances of discharge. About half those who leave the services each year are eligible for the 28 days pre-release vocational training.

A survey of the resettlement of ex-service personnel commissioned by the Ministry of Defence earlier this year revealed that more than a third of respondents were unemployed immediately after leaving the services; of these, more than half gained employment within three months. A fifth have had other periods of unemployment since leaving.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iraq

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what undertakings have been given by the Iraqi regime that the money released back to that country in exchange for Ian Richter's release will be used for humanitarian purposes.

Mr. Hurd: The Iraqis were told that, after the release of Mr. Richter, we would exceptionally be prepared to unfreeze £70 million of Iraqi assets for humanitarian purposes as permitted by United Nations Security Council resolutions 661 and 687. We do not plan to release further tranches of assets for this purpose. The Iraqis have been told that we remain firmly committed to the United Nations sanctions regime: the Iraqi Government have not yet met the requirements laid on it by the UN Security Council. Details of the purposes for which the assets are released will be passed to the UN sanctions committee and other interested organisations.

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Iraqi regime has yet taken advantage of the UN resolutions allowing it to sell oil provided that the money is used for humanitarian relief.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We remain hopeful that the regime will see the advantage to be gained by the Iraqi people from implementing Security Council resolutions 706 and 712.

Lockerbie Air Crash

Mr. Stanbrook: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give the names of the Libyan citizens accused of the Lockerbie murders, the law under which they are charged, the precise wording of the charge and the legal authority under which their extradition is sought.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on 14 November 1991 at column 1227. The text of the warrant which has been placed in the Library of the House contains the precise wording of the charges which have been brought under the law of Scotland against two Libyan nationals, Abdelbaset Ali Mohmed Al Megrahi and Al Amin Khalifa Fhimah. The demand which has been made is for surrender of the accused persons by exercise of executive power.

Treatment of Kurds

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to Turkey about the use of napalm, death squads and torture against Kurdish civilians in the south-east of Turkey and inside northern Iraq; and if he will make a further statement on the Government's position on the Kurds.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We fully recognise the right of the Turkish Government to combat the terrorist threat in south-east Turkey. The previous Turkish Government were, however, well aware of our concern about human rights violations. We note with satisfaction the undertaking of the new Turkish Government to combat the terrorist campaign by legal and democratic means and to eliminate torture.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Turkish authorities about the death cells at Eskisehir prison for Kurdish political prisoners and the incompatibility of such use with the United Nations legal charter on stipulated minimum standards of conduct towards prisoners.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We are in regular contact with the Turkish authorities on human rights questions and have noted the decision by the Minister of Justice to move prisoners presently held in Eskisehir prison to other installations.

EC Majority Voting

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will list those decisions made by majority voting within the European Community since the entry into force of the European Communities (Amendment) Act 1986; and on each occasion which way the United Kingdom voted.

Mr. Garel-Jones: A detailed list of all decisions made by majority voting since the entry into force of the European Communities (Amendment) Act 1986, including a record of which way the United Kingdom voted in each case, could be produced only at disproportionate cost. Between entry into force of the Single European Act on 1 July 1987 and 30 June 1991, 259 majority votes were held. The United Kingdom voted against on 36 occasions. On decisions taken under the provisions of the Single European Act itself, the United Kingdom has been outvoted only three times in 99 decisions taken during the same period.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

"Spycatcher" Costs

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Attorney-General if he will state the total amount (i) in legal costs and (ii) otherwise spent out of public funds on proceedings involving the book "Spycatcher" and including the costs awarded against the Government by the European Court of Human Rights.

The Attorney-General: The total amount paid out in respect of legal fees to date over five years and in several countries is £506,000. It will not be possible to specify for some time the total cost of the litigation, which will include costs of £200,000 awarded against the Government by the European Court of Human Rights this week.

WALES

Departmental Projects

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will list those projects, managed by bodies or agencies outside his Department, for which his Department is currently funding an operational deficit; how much of the deficit his Department is carrying; and for what period.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department does not directly fund the operational deficits which arise from projects managed by non-departmental bodies. Such projects are financed by the non-departmental bodies themselves usually, but not always, from their grant-in-aid.

Careers Service

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to privatise the local authority careers service.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Government's proposals for the future management of the careers service are set out in volume 1 of the White Paper, "Education and Training for the 21st Century", Cm. 1536, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. We propose to legislate to enable a range of options to be introduced, including contracting out the careers service to the private sector.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland at the latest available date how many (a) men and (b) women were employed on Action for Community Employment; and how many of them were employed (i) part time or (ii) full time.

Mr. Needham: At 25 October 5,511 men and 4,888 women were employed on Action for Community Employment. Of these 4,685 men and 1,808 women were in full-time employment and 826 men and 3,080 women were employed part time.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what sums of money have been contributed from the European social fund towards (a) Action for Community Employment, (b) the youth training programme and (c) the job training programme for each year since 1989; and what percentage contribution to the total costs of Action for Community Employment, the youth training programme and the job training programme this represents for each year.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is as follows:

	European Social Fund (ESF) contribution		Percentage of total expenditure
	1989 £ million	1990 £ million	1989 Per cent.	1990 Per cent.

Job training programme	0·418	2·385	9·3	37·2

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the latest information he has about the number of people who are participating in (a) Action for Community Employment, (b) the youth training programme, (c) the job training programme, (d) the enterprise allowance scheme, (e) job clubs and (f) restart courses; if he will publish the comparable information for each year since 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is as follows:

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much expenditure, excluding administration costs, at cash and constant prices, has been spent in each year since 1983-84 on (a) Action for Community Employment, (b) the youth training programme, and the earlier youth opportunities programme, (c) the job training programme, and the earlier programmes it replaced, (d) the enterprise allowance scheme, (e) job clubs and (f) restart courses; what is the planned expenditure in each of the years 1991-92 to 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is set out in the following tables. The constant prices have been calculated on the basis of the published Treasury GDP deflator.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the annual expenditure on the job training programme from the start of the programme to the estimated outturn for 1991-92; how much of each year's budget in cash terms was used to pay (a) the trainee's training allowances and (b) the trainee's training premium; and what was the average trainee allowance in each year.

Mr. Needham: Training premium is paid as part of the training allowance at a fixed rate of £10 per week. Records are maintained only in respect of gross training allowances (inclusive of the training premium) and are tabulated below together with information about annual expenditure and average training allowances.

Youth Programme

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has on the destination of youth training programme leavers for each year since 1989-90; and, of those who found employment, how many were with the employer who provided their training.

Mr. Needham: Information on YTP leavers from full-time training provision whose destinations are known is as follows:

	1989-90	1990-91
Number of leavers	10,914	8,768
Employment	6,767	4,223
Full-time education	649	1,227
Unemployed	3,498	3,318

Figures are not available for YTP leavers who found employment with the employer who provided their training.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people have attended restart interviews in 1990-91 and since 1 April 1991; and what were the results of those interviews broken down to show how many interviewees were placed in either (a) Action for Community Employment, (b) the job training programme, (c) the enterprise allowance scheme, (d) job clubs, (e) restart courses and (f) jobs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: In 1990-91 75,025 people attended restart interviews. In the period April-September a further 35,371 attended. Placements were as follows:

	1990-91	April to September 1991
Action for community employment	896	567
Job training programme	1,712	912

Ex-gratia Payments

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many times in each of the last three years for which figures are available the Department of Health and Social Security in Northern Ireland has not made an ex-gratia payment recommended by an appeal tribunal.

Mr. Hanley: While this is a matter for the chief executive of the Social Security Agency, I understand that statistics on the number of ex-gratia payments recommended by an appeal tribunal that were not paid by the Department are not readily available and that the answer to this question could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Computers

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what arrangements he now proposes for the provision of (a) computer software services and (b) computer maintenance for the Export Credits Guarantee Department subsequent to any sale of the Insurance Services Group, Cardiff, to NCM of Amsterdam; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: The arrangements for the sale of the Insurance Services Group include a provision for ECGD to obtain mainframe computer processing services, application development services and maintenance for mainframe-based application systems from the privatised company for a period of two years following vesting. Information concerning the terms of sale will be made public after privatisation.

Racal Electronics

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he intends to refer to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission the bid by Williams Holdings for Racal Electronics; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 28 November 1991]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary for State for Trade and Industry announced on 20 November that the proposed acquisition by Williams Holdings plc of Racal Electronics plc will be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission unless suitable undertakings are offered by Williams to remedy the expected adverse effects of the proposed acquisition. He has asked the Director General of Fair Trading to open negotiations immediately with Williams Holdings with a view to obtaining such undertakings. Representations on what undertakings would be appropriate to remedy the adverse effects should be made in writing to the Office of Fair Trading by 29 November 1991.

Distillers

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will now publish in full his Department's inspectors' report into the contested takeover of Distillers by Guinness.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 28 November 1991]: No.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the status of the report by DTI inspectors into the contested takeover of Distillers by Guinness.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 28 November 1991]: The inspectors have submitted an interim report under the provisions of section 437(1) of the Companies Act 1985 which remains unpublished.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will now make available in the Library those parts of his Department's inspectors' report into the contested takeover of Distillers by Guinness which have been made available to (a) Argyll and Guinness or (b) otherwise made public.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 28 November 1991]: No. Reports are made available to Parliament on publication.

SCOTLAND

Police National Computer

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what computer links exist, or are planned, between the Scottish criminal records office and the new police national computer, PNC2.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish criminal record office has an established link with all current PNC2 applications.

Criminal Intelligence Service

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what computer links exist, or are planned, between the National Crime Intelligence Unit (Scotland) and the existing national police intelligence databases or the proposed integrated national criminal intelligence system.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The extent to which the Scottish police service will be involved with the proposed national criminal intelligence service is still under consideration and at this stage no decisions have been taken about a computer link.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Milk Quotas

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy on the transferring of milk quotas across national borders in the European Community.

Mr. Curry: I am in principle in favour of allowing milk quotas to be freely traded between milk producers anywhere in the Community. The EC Commission has not included any such proposal in its CAP reform package.

Scottish Salmon Industry

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the effect on the Scottish salmon industry of the recent trade agreement between the EC and EFTA countries.

Mr. Curry: The agreement establishing the European economic area from 1 January 1993 makes no change to tariff levels for salmon. The contracting parties are committed to taking action to ensure there is no distortion of competition.

EMPLOYMENT

Training

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of adults on adult training have relevant workplace experience with employers.

Mr. Jackson: The information is not available centrally.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many unemployed people are unable to enter adult training because training in their preferred area is not available in their local training and enterprise council area;

(2) how many training and enterprise councils allow unemployed people access to training in areas other than their own if training is not available locally; how many training and enterprise councils have a budget for this; and how this is decided.

Mr. Jackson: The information is not available in the format requested.

Training and enteprise councils are allocated sufficient funds to meet the Government's guarantee of providing a training place on youth training or employment training for unemployed people who wish to enter these programmes. All young people over statutory school leaving age are eligible to enter and have a guarantee to receive YT training in Great Britain up to their 18th birthday.

The Government's guarantee to adults is for everyone aged 18 to 24 who has been unemployed between six and 12 months to receive an offer of employment training, a job interview guarantee, an enterprise allowance, a place in a job club or on employment action.

The Government aim is for everyone under 50 who has been unemployed for more than two years and all people with disabilities, to receive an offer of employment training, job interview guarantee, an enterprise allowance and a place in a job club or on employment action.

TECs are encouraged to be as flexible as possible in order to meet individual training needs. This can include funding training in other TEC areas if a TEC feels this is appropriate. It is for the individual TECs to liaise with each other when this situation arises.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if administration of training vouchers will be the responsibility of the TECs, what funds will be available and what is the predicted financial impact on organisations which currently make no charge for guidance.

Mr. Jackson: TECs will be responsible for the administration of vouchers for adult guidance issued under the "Gateways to Learning" pilots. The funding will be made available to TECs which successfully bid under the gateways to learning initiative to pilot improvements to the local provision of adult guidance and assessment and to test the use of vouchers for these services. The funds will also be used for central support to the pilots and for an external evaluation of the initiative.

Financial arrangements will be for local negotiation between the TECs and other local organisations involved in the pilots, including organisations currently offering guidance to adults without charge.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the changes in funding from 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92 for high technology national training courses for adults; and what effect changes in funding for training have had on provision at this level.

Mr. Jackson: The funding for HTNT for the three years is as follows:

	£ million
1989-90	17
1990-91	20
1991-92	18

Provision has been maintained at broadly similar levels throughout the period.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of trainees on adult training are finished early from schemes because there are no relevant work experience placements available.

Mr. Jackson: This information is not available.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give details of how the £2 million for guidance and training voucher schemes will be spent.

Mr. Jackson: The funding will be made available to TECs which successfully bid under the "Gateways to Learning" initiative to pilot improvements to the local provision of adult guidance and assessment and to test the use of vouchers for these services. The funds will also be used for central support to the pilots and for an external evaluation of the initiative.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the reduction in employment training and youth training places over the last three years.

Mr. Jackson: The average number in training on employment training over the last three years and youth training scheme in 1989-90 and youth training in 1990-91 and 1991-92 are given in the table.

Average in training: 000s

[1] Estimated.
[2] Planned.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of people entering adult training gain national vocational qualifications; and at what level.

Mr. Jackson: Twenty-seven per cent. of all people leaving employment training gained a qualification or credit towards one. There is no information available about the proportion which are national vocational qualifications.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many unemployed people are refused adult training places because there are no relevant national vocational qualifications in place either in a particular vocational area or at an appropriate level.

Mr. Jackson: There is no justification for denying an unemployed person a training place on the grounds that no national vocational qualification is available. National vocational qualifications covering 40 per cent. of the employed work force at levels 1 to 4 are currently available. In order to fill the current gaps in NVQ provision, this Department issues listings of existing vocational qualifications which are accepted for use in adult and youth training until the appropriate NVQ becomes available.

TECs

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the salaries of the chief executives of the training and enterprise councils in England and Wales.

Mr. Jackson: Chief executives who are on secondment to training and enterprise councils from the Employment Department are paid the civil service salary appropriate to their grade. The salary of a directly employed chief executive is a matter for the TEC itself to decide.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the running costs of administration excluding money spent on programmes of training and enterprise councils; and what are the total administration costs of the training and enterprise councils.

Mr. Jackson: The total Government contribution to the running costs of training and enterprise councils for England and Wales in 1991-92 is £124·342 million.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the private sector financial contribution to the running costs or programme costs of the training and enterprise councils.

Mr. Jackson: The private sector does contribute to the costs of training, enterprise and education programmes in a variety of ways, for example, either direct to a TEC by contributions to a specific project or by meeting some of the costs of individual trainees. Information on these contributions is not available centrally.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many staff are employed by the training and enterprise councils in total.

Mr. Jackson: We do not hold figures for the staff TECs employ in posts which are not publicly funded. On 1 November training and enterprise councils had 3,456 in publicly funded posts, 532 direct and 2,924 secondees.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total cost of training and enterprise council board members expenses; and how many (a) women and (b) members of ethnic minorities there are.

Mr. Jackson: Reimbursement of expenses incurred by training and enterprise council board members is a matter for each TEC and central records are not maintained. Currently 122 board members are women. Information collected in summer 1991 showed that 40 board members were from an ethnic minority background.

Training, Enterprise and Education Directorate

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the reduction in the Training, Enterprise and Education directorate administration—not programme—budget since training and enterprise councils were set up.

Mr. Jackson: Precise comparison of Training, Enterprise and Education Directorate administration/running costs with the period prior to the setting up of TECs is not possible. Area offices which preceded TECs were part of the Training Agency which was responsible for a different range of functions to those administered by TEED.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many staff are employed by the TEED in areas relating to training; and what do they cost.

Mr. Jackson: Setting aside staff seconded to TECs, a total of 2060·5 staff are employed in regional and Head Offices at a cost of £52·9 million for salaries and general administrative expenses on a broad range of functions covering training education and enterprise.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the reduction in the TEED programme-provision budget since TECs were set up.

Mr. Jackson: Total expenditure in Great Britain on TEED programmes in 1990-91 during which the first TECs were established was £2·8 billion compared with planned provision for 1991-92 of £2·9 billion and for 1992-93 of £2·8 billion.

Child Care

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the employment training child care budget; and whether its level has been maintained over the period 1989-90 to 1991-92.

Mr. Jackson: The proportion of the adult training budget used to provide child care support is the responsibility of individual training and enterprise councils.

From April 1991, the scope to support the child care costs on trainees of ET was extended, from the original provision for lone parents to all trainees.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many child care places were funded from the employment training budget in 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Jackson: The Employment Department does not collect information on the number of ET trainees receiving child care support.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Job Applications (Civil Service and Inland Revenue)

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is (a) the total number of applicants for employment within (1) the civil service and (2) the Inland Revenue broken down by age and sex over the last five years, (b) the total number of applicants interviewed for employment within (1) the Inland Revenue and (2) the civil service over the last five years and (c) the total number of applicants for employment actually appointed by (1) the civil service and (2) the Inland Revenue over the last five years.

Mr. Maples: No information is held centrally about the total number by age and sex of either applicants for employment or the number of applicants interviewed. This information could not be obtained without disproportionate cost. However, some data for selected grades are available for the civil service as a whole in the Civil Service Commission annual reports. Copies are available in the House of Commons Library.

Data on entrants to the non-industrial home civil service and Inland Revenue are given in the tables.

Fiscal Transfers

Mr. Butler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state the Government's policy as to whether economic convergence in the EC and European monetary union will require increased regional fiscal transfers.

Mr. Maude: Economic convergence requires sound economic and monetary policies. If economic and monetary union is subject to proper convergence decisions, it should create the conditions for the growth by all member states; there is no reason why it should justify further expenditure on the structural funds, which will double in real terms between 1987 and 1993.

Knives

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many illegal knives have been seized at ports over the last two years; and what plans he has to tighten up controls on imports of knives as offensive weapons.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The numbers of knives seized at ports, airports and other points of entry are as follows:

Year ending 31 March	Number
1990	903
1991	2,082

Customs are continually seeking to improve the effectiveness of their controls in this and other areas, principally by better, risk-based targeting of resources.

Intergovernmental Conference

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting of the intergovernmental conference on economic and monetary union on 25 November.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I attended a meeting of the intergovernmental conference on economic and monetary union on 24-25 November. Four main issues were discussed: the role of the Commission and the European Council in EMU, exchange rate policy in stage 3, the procedure for investigating member states' budget deficits, and the transitional provisions in the draft statute of the European system of central banks.

On institutional issues, I argued that the treaty provisions should be considered on a case-by-case basis to achieve a workable solution; the Commission should not always have the exclusive right of proposal of legislation.

The discussion of exchange rate policy was brief and the issue was remitted to personal representatives for further work.

In the discussion of the procedure for investigating budget deficits I argued that market forces and Council recommendations were the most appropriate discipline on member states and that the procedure should be concerned only with gross errors of budgetary policy. On the transitional provisions in the draft statute, the conference discussed a number of issues concerning the arrangements for non-participants in stage 3.

In a discussion of the Soviet Union, I argued for the earliest possible disbursement of the Community's food credits to meet genuine humanitarian needs. Agreement was reached on the mandate for the Commission's negotiations with the Soviet Union on the 500 mecu loan already agreed by the Community.

Civil Servants (Loans)

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will set out in tabular form the official rates of interest on loans provided to civil servants by their employers by category of loan.

Mr. Maples: Departments as employers do not normally make loans to their staff. They may provide advances of salary for travel costs, including season tickets and bicycle purchase, for house purchase where a member of staff is being compulsorily transferred in the public interest, and to assist with car purchase and miscellaneous additional expenses on posting overseas. No interest is paid on these advances. Departments and agencies also have discretion to take over any exeess bridging loan after sale charging nominal interest rates in circumstances where staff face financial hardship following a move in the public interest if they have a bridging loan in excess of the sale value of their old property. Information on the use of the discretion is not held centrally.

Oil (VAT)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the VAT rules for oil deliveries to domestic premises (i) below and (ii) above 2,300 litres.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: All supplies of 2,300 litres of oil or less are always considered to be for domestic use and thus zero-rated for VAT purposes to all customers. However, where the quantity of oil delivered is more than 2,300 litres, the supply will still be zero-rated if the oil is indeed for domestic use, although the supplier may ask for a certificate from the customer to that effect.

Child Care Costs

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the information he has for each of the member states of the European Community, and for Norway, Sweden and Finland, on the tax treatment of work-related child care costs.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The latest available information is given in the table. To make a valid comparison between countries it would be necessary to take into account the standard tax allowances and tax reliefs given to parents and the level of child benefits given through the social security system.

All amounts have been converted to sterling using the latest available purchasing power parities.

Country and treatment of work-related child care expenses

Belgium
Up to 80 per cent. of expenses are deductible in respect of children under three years old, subject to a maximum of £4·94 per child per day of care.

Denmark
No tax relief is given.

France
There is a tax reduction equal to 25 per cent. of expenses limited to £1,293 per year (1990 figure) for each child under seven years old. The tax reduction is available to single, widowed, divorced or separated taxpayers who work outside the home and to a couple where each spouse either works or attends a full-time course of higher education.

Germany
Expenses are deductible up to £1,064 per year for the first child and £532 for each additional child. A minimum lump-sum deduction of £128 (without proof of expenditure) is allowed. The deductions apply to single parents and couples if one spouse (or partner) is sick or disabled.

Greece
Taxpayers are exempt from income tax on 50 per cent. of the annual cost of sending a child to a nursery or kindergarten, up to a maximum of £549 per child per year.

Ireland
No tax relief is given.

Italy
No tax relief is given.

Luxembourg
Childcare expenses (apparently whether work-related or not) are deductible for single persons, and persons with a child under 14 years old in the household. The total deduction for childcare expenses and domestic help may not exceed £270 per year.

Netherlands
Expenses are deductible, but part of the costs (which must be proved) must be borne by the parent(s). The amount to be borne by the parent(s) ranges from 10 pence per hour for those with an annual combined income of less than £9,091 to £1·18 per hour for those with an annual combined income of over £29,091. If the expenses relate to more than one child, the amount to be borne by the parent(s) is increased by 10 pence per hour for each additional child.

Portugal
A deduction is allowed for educational expenses (including creches and nurseries, and apparently whether work-related or not) to a maximum of £700 (for single taxpayers) and £1,400 (married). These maximum amounts are cumulative with deductions allowed for other expenses eg life insurance, medical expenses.

Spain
With effect from 1 January 1992 a deduction is allowed for 15 per cent. of expenses incurred to a maximum of £137 in respect of each child under three years old if the parents work away from home and the taxpayer's net income does not exceed £10,966.

United Kingdom
Employees are exempt from income tax on the benefit of a workplace nursery place provided by their employer. No other tax relief is given.

Finland
No tax relief is given.

Norway
No tax relief is given.

Sweden
No tax relief is given.

Corporation Tax

Mr. Day: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the consultations on tax returns under corporation tax pay and file.

Mr. Maude: The Inland Revenue published proposals earlier this year on tax returns under corporation tax pay and file. These were generally well received, although there were comments on various points of detail. The Inland Revenue has revised the draft return form to take account of these comments. Companies and their advisers will be invited early next year to complete the revised return form on an experimental basis, to help them to familiarise themselves with the new procedures and to help to identify and correct any mistakes and misunderstandings before the start of pay and file.

There was one criticism which could not be dealt with at this stage as it would involve a change in the law. A number of respondents were concerned that the requirement for returns to be signed by the company secretary could put burdens on companies. The Inland Revenue will be discussing this with bodies representing businesses and their advisers to see whether a solution can be found which would not put undue burdens on the Inland Revenue or risks on the Exchequer. Any legislation needed could be introduced before the start of pay and file.

Exchange Rate Mechanism

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the changes in exchange rates with the ERM for each currency since the start of the system, the date of each realignment and the exchange rate between the ecu and the US dollar on each occasion.

Mr. Maples [holding answer 28 November 1991]: The table shows the changes in each ERM currency's central rate against the ecu since the start of the system (or its entry to the system):

	Ecu central rate[1]
Currency	1979 (or entry date)	Now
Deutschemark (DM)	2·5106	2·0559
French Franc (FFC)	5·8552	6·8951
Sterling (UKL)	(0·6969)	0·6969
Dutch Guilder (HFL)	2·7208	2·3164
Belgian Franc/Luxembourg Franc (BFR/LFR)	39·458	42·403
Italian Lira (LIT)	—	—
Danish Krone (DKR)	1148·2	1538·2
Irish Punt (IRL)	7·0859	7·8420
Spanish Peseta (PTA)	0·6626	0·7674
	(133·80)	133·63

[1] the method of calculation of central rates against the ecu in the ERM is such that they all adjust if there is a realignment. Bilateral central rates between any two currencies that have not realigned remain unchanged.

There have been 12 realignments since the ERM started in 1979. The dates, the currencies that realigned their bilateral central rates, and the ecu/$ exchange rates at the time of realignment are listed below. Information on ecu/$ exchange rates in 1979 is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received for a realignment of currencies within the ERM; what representations he has made on this to other member states; and what consultation procedures are required before any realignment can be made.

Mr. Maples [holding answer 28 November 1991]: Adjustments of central rates within the ERM are subject to mutual agreement by all countries participating in the ERM. Discussions between member states in this respect are confidential.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what help is available from other ERM members to support currencies falling to the bottom of their range; and whether more is available to currencies in 2·5 per cent. bands than to those in 6 per cent. bands.

Mr. Maples [holding answer 28 November 1991]: If one currency is at its limit against another in the ERM, the central banks of both currencies each have an unlimited obligation to buy or sell at the limiting rates during European business hours. The EMS provides for a very short-term facility (VSTF) under which credit is automatically available in unlimited quantities to finance such obligatory intervention at the limiting rates.

If intervention is undertaken when one currency is not at its limit against another in the ERM the VSTF can be made available, but not automatically.

The amounts that can be made available do not differ between wide band and narrow band currencies. VSTF credits have to be repaid within a period of three months.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what notification is required to members of the ERM of interest rate changes in member countries; and what advance warning he was given of the last French rate increase.

Mr. Maples [holding answer 28 November 1991]: National monetary authorities are not required to notify other ERM participants in advance of interest rate changes. I cannot reveal the content of consultations with the monetary authorities of other member states.

National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the revenue which would be raised by applying 9 per cent. national insurance contribution to (a) all non-pensioners' investment income received by basic rate taxpayers and (b) all investment income received by basic rate taxpayers disregarding the first £3,000 investment income in each case.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 28 November 1991]: A charge of 9 per cent. on investment income in excess of £3,000 for individuals aged under 65 who are liable to tax only at the basic rate would yield about £220 million in a full year at 1991-92 levels of income. The corresponding yield from basic rate taxpayers aged 65 and over would be about £270 million.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 199

SESSION 1991-92

18th November—29th November 1991

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
